Index to Reviews, Comments, and Advertising Aids on the Films

Appended is a list of subjects released during the three months ending June 30, 1919, and upon the majority of which have been published reviews, comments, and advertising aids. This list is as accurate as it is possible to make it with the information received from the companies whose productions are included. Should any of our readers detect errors, we shall be pleased to have our attention called to them so that we may correct our card index. The letter before the folio indicates the page where the review, comment, or advertising aids can be found. "R" stands for review; "C" for comment; and "A" for advertising aids; "A and R" for advertising aid and reviews combined. Where reference letter is omitted it signifies that none was published. Of the later releases where letters are omitted the missing information will probably be published in the next volume.

N. B.—Comments or reviews of episodes of serials or series are indexed in connection with general title of such serial or series and not under title of each episode. Date shown for Pathe subjects indicates the week during which they were released. Unless otherwise specified all subjects listed are five-reel dramas.

PUBLIC LEDGER

"The bigness of the Metropolitan Opera House is as nothing compared with the magnitude of this Universal film production. The title, 'The Heart of Humanity,' aptly describes the attraction because it embraces all of the essential qualities which go to make up a popular moving picture."

NORTH AMERICAN

"It ranks among the great. There is thrill and suspense and excitement—but, in addition—a stirring appeal that goes down under the skin and makes every spectator live and breathe with the characters on the screen."

GAZETTE-DEMOCRAT

"A high-class screen classic. 'The Heart of Humanity,' was shown here last night for the first time and was voted by the large audience as a picture equal to the best ever seen here."

RECORD

"'The Heart of Humanity' is a masterpiece of production. When the first scene was flashed on the screen there was hardly a vacant seat to be found in the spacious playhouse, and the vast crowd sat in close attention throughout the eight reels."

PRESS

"'The Heart of Humanity' scored a triumph at its first showing in Philadelphia at the Metropolitan Opera House last night to a capacity audience. If the first showing augurs truthfully, 'The Heart of Humanity' will meet with unqualified success. The pathos reaches to the depths of the heart."

"The Girl Who Stayed At Home"

An ARTCRAFT Picture

WHAT people say is the strongest force in the world today. Word of mouth advertising has the biggest pull of all. These criticisms (on the opposite page) of "The Girl Who Stayed at Home" reflect the word of mouth advertising that comes to you when you show this picture.

These New York critics are not professional motion picture men. They are of the rank and file of the typical motion picture audience—the same sort of audience that comes to see your pictures. They judge just as the public judges—not alone the New York public but the whole American public—people from all over the United States, the kind of people from the small towns and larger cities who fill the theatres of New York every night.

It's not a coincidence—there's a reason why all these laudatory criticisms agree. You will find that reason in "The Girl Who Stayed at Home."

They Say Just What Your Audiences Will Say

N. Y. Times: "The Girl Who Stayed at Home," satisfies every expectation. Judged by the Griffith standard, it is good. In some ways it even adds to its producer's long list of achievements.

Mr. Griffith has been noted for his ability to handle plots of varied and extensive range, but he has never done it so well before in a photoplay designed for routine exhibition. "The Girl Who Stayed at Home" is not what is called in the trade a "super-production," it is a regular Artcraft release; yet it has all of the scope and wealth of treatment that might be put into a "super" film.

Another characteristic that it shares with the greater Griffith productions is its blending of melodrama, delineation of character and humor. And, of course, Mr. Griffith's subtlety and strength in making scenes of pure beauty and of dramatic meaning, has not failed him. He is not only an artist in pictorial composition, but, by technical skill, often along original lines, he produces effects that others in time learn to imitate. No pictures seem to have the perspective of his. And when Griffith does make a close-up, it is a soft, delicately shaded portrait. These remarks, while general, are pertinent here because they appertain particularly to "The Girl Who Stayed at Home."

N. Y. Morning Sun: The picture has less scenes devoted to the world conflict itself than most ambitious war pictures, but Griffith once more reveals even in the swift glimpses shown that only Napoleon, Caesar and a few others surpassed him in staging a war. In Clarine Seymour, he has a player who can do a vibratory walk that is like shaking the shimmy without music. Robert Harron, Richard Barthelmess, George Fawcett, Tully Marshall and Carol Dempster carry the honors in a cast that is heavily coated with talent.

N. Y. Morning World: An excellent example of the artistic work of D. W. Griffith as a producer. Makes unusually good moving picture entertainment because of its dramatic action and effective photography.

N. Y. Herald: D. W. Griffith's new photo drama combines humor with war thrills. Bobby Harron in one of the best comedy parts he has had in a long time, and Miss Clarine Seymour as a charming little cabaret dancer, were the principals in a well chosen cast.

N. Y. American: Mr. Griffith has again done something different—not only in production, but in selecting the material and the cast, and it is a happy medium that serves to introduce new faces in a Griffith production.

One of the young women is Clarine Seymour. It took the unerring eye that gave us Mary Pickford and the Gish girls to feature her.

N. Y. Telegraph: Griffith has a fortunate habit of letting his audience into the secret that he is thoroughly enjoying the discomfiture, the pangs, and the aspirations of his young heroes and heroines. He lifts the commonplace above the ordinary by means of a little gentle, kindly humor.

It is in the treatment that Griffith shows what he can do with a simple tale. He makes it all real, and so plausible, and brings it very close to every one. . . . That is where Griffith gets his audience. He appeals to them each individually.

N. Y. Telegram: Even if the circus is coming the director at the Strand Theatre is not a bit worried. This week he is projecting D. W. Griffith's new production, "The Girl Who Stayed at Home." The story is dramatic and intensely interesting, lightened with touches of genuine comedy. The pictures show the genius of Mr. Griffith as a motion picture creator.

N. Y. Post: It is a typical Griffith piece, done on a gigantic scale, with thrilling battle scenes, a host of characters, beautiful scenes, several love stories, and a plot that never lags.

N. Y. Evening Sun: The great master of battle pieces ventures to hold the fearsome incidents of the field down to due proportion in "The Girl Who Stayed at Home." In direction and photography it is in every respect worthy of Mr. Griffith.

N. Y. Globe: A series of shadow impressions of the boys who marched away, the battles they fought, and the girls they left behind them. Clarine Seymour is one of these girls—a slangy, bewitching little tomboy—and Robert Harron and Richard Barthelmess are the very appealing young veterans.

N. Y. Mail: It is the best of his Artcraft series. No one is going to complain because "The Girl Who Stayed at Home" is a war picture. For that matter, Griffith's war pictures are about the only war pictures nowadays that have any thrill in them, the only ones that offer convincing imitations of the real thing. D. W. is a whole military school in himself. You cannot describe the plot because its producer has interwoven several plots in the manner of his earlier spectacle dramas. He is the only producer who is able to do this without offering his audience a screen jig-saw puzzle.

N. Y. Journal of Commerce: There are many features displayed in D. W. Griffith's latest photoplay, "The Girl Who Stayed at Home," that are refreshingly new. It cannot be called a war play. A few short chapters deal with actual fighting and have to do exclusively with the charge and siege of one of the lost companies that faced the Germans in the Argonne. While Robert Harron, George Fawcett and Tully Marshall are seen to great advantage in the more prominent roles, the little girl who stayed at home, as played by Clarine Seymour, won the most distinction. She possesses unusual beauty and intelligence.

Who Threw That Brick?

Peppy Polly!—Right through a jewelry store window. And the judge said, "Three years."

You see, Polly had a pal—a poor little thing who had been sick and out of a job and had gone the easiest way. And when Polly, on a "visitors' day" saw the brutal way her little pal had been treated she decided on a clean-up.

So, to collect more evidence, Polly heaved that brick and rode in the "black Maria."

In jail was Dr. Jim—there merely to call on his patients, of course; and the rest is a happy blending of laughs, tears and thrilling, heart-warming drama.

If you saw saucy, lovable Dorothy Gish in "Battling Jane" and as the Little Disturber in D. W. Griffith's "Hearts of the World," you'll know she gets what she goes after in "Peppy Polly"—including Dr. Jim.

REPORT OUT NEW YORK SUNDAY BILLS

Thompson Measure Sanctioned by Codes Committee of Senate and Assembly by Majority of One Each

Albany, March 26.

SUNDAY motion picture advocates went "over the top" here today and late this afternoon had captured two front line trenches through the action of the Senate Codes Committee, which reported the Thompson Sunday Motion Picture bill out of committee by a vote of 6 to 5, Senator Baumes being absent. Later on in the day, the Assembly Codes Committee took a like action by a vote of 7 to 6. The bill now goes into general orders, will be taken up for consideration, and final action may be expected within a week or two. It is claimed this afternoon by supporters of the bill that the Senate will act favorably, but that the Assembly is in doubt.

Supporters of the measure have been active through Capitol corridors for the past several days and have been distinctly on the job. Members of the Senate and Assembly who committed themselves in writing last fall during the forepart of the campaign and signified their willingness to stand back of any bill which would pave the way toward legalizing Sunday motion picture shows in this state have made good their promise, according to word which comes from both committees and which, while not official, voices the vote.

Interesting Day for Picture Men.

Today has been one of considerable interest to motion picture advocates. A representative from the motion picture houses of Buffalo arrived in town, bringing with him 60,000 signatures of persons in the Western city who desire Sunday motion picture shows being permitted throughout that state. And what is more, there will be 20,000 more names from the same city within the next few days. The petitions arrived bound in a most attractive way.

The wording of the Thompson bill is as follows:

"Motion picture exhibitions on the first day of the week.—If, in any city, town or village, motion pictures are now exhibited on the first day of the week, they may continue to be so exhibited during such time after 2 o'clock in the afternoon as the exhibition of motion pictures shall not have been prohibited by an ordinance hereafter adopted by the common council or other legislative body of such city, town or village, the adopting, repeal or readoption of which is hereby authorized. If, in any city, town or village, motion pictures are not now exhibited on the first day of the week, they shall not be so exhibited except during such time after 2 o'clock in the afternoon as shall be permitted by an ordinance hereafter adopted by the common council or other legislative body of such city, town or village, the adoption, repeal or readoption of which is hereby authorized."

The act, if passed, is to take effect immediately.

Slacer Introduces Sunday Measure.

Another phase to the Sunday movie question developed during the last few days, when Assemblyman Slacer, who by the way, introduced the censorship bill, introduced another bill which adds a new section to the penal law and which, if passed, will permit any municipality to conduct motion picture shows for education and recreation on Sunday from 2 to 6 p. m., in armories, school houses, state, county or municipal buildings, or in any hall or room furnished rent free, providing, however, that the pictures are previously censored by a local board of recreation serving without pay and appointed by the local authorities. The bill specifies that no admission charge must be made for these pictures. GRANT.

Fire Bureau Heads Are Indicted in Graft Case

DR. WILLIAM S. DOYLE, chief of the Bureau of Fire Prevention, city of New York; Frank McGinnis, Chief of the Bureau of Public Assemblies; Leon Wallace, a cafe manager, and Frank McGoey, a friend and neighbor of Wallace, were indicted by the Grand Jury March 27 on a conspiracy charge, placed jointly against the four, and in addition each man is indicted on two separate counts, charged with accepting bribes. Bonds for each man was fixed by Judge Rosalsky at $1,000.

The indictments are the culmination of an inquiry which was begun a month ago when Fire Commissioner Thomas J. Drennan received complaints that motion picture men were being compelled to pay tribute to a concern known as the Colonial Film Exchange in order to carry on their business.

Investigation developed that the manager of the exchange was Wallace and that Wallace was a friend of McGinnis. A raid was made on the place, and Florence McGrath, a stenographer, was questioned. She told District Attorney Swann, it was said, that in the month she had been employed at the "exchange" checks amounting to more than $1,500 had been received. As far as she knew, she said, no films had been sent out to the motion picture show owners who sent in the checks.

Frederick L. Collins Sails for Europe.

Frederick L. Collins, president of McClure Productions, Inc., and publisher of McClure's Magazine, sailed Saturday, March 22, on the "Adriatic" for Europe. He expects to visit England, France, Belgium, Holland and Italy and will be gone several months.

In addition to important business for his magazine, Mr. Collins will devote a large part of his time to consummating extensive motion picture projects. Mr. Collins has been busy upon plans for these enterprises for several months.

Mr. Collins has been preceded to Europe by a special representative of McClure Productions, Inc., who will transact the preliminary details for all the McClure motion picture activities abroad.

Syndicate Buys New York for "Unpardonable Sin"

THE sale of the New York State territory for the Harry Garson production, "The Unpardonable Sin," to a syndicate made up of a number of the biggest theatrical operators in the country, was announced a few days ago. Lawrence Weber and Bobby North, prominent in the Apollo Trading Corporation, who purchased the foreign rights on the picture, engineered the deal for the New York territory, enlisting the support of ample capital through their praise of the production.

"The Unpardonable Sin" will open at a prominent Broadway theatre in the near future for an indefinite run and will be advertised and promoted on a particularly large scale. The syndicate has not yet announced its plan for placing the picture in the important theatres in other cities throughout the territory which it now controls.

Branham Leaves Detroit Majestic.

Charles D. Branham has resigned as manager of the Majestic Theatre, Detroit, taking effect Saturday, March 22. He plans to leave for the south to consult with the owner of a string of theatres, who is after him. Mr. Branham went to Detroit from Minneapolis, where he had charge of three big houses. No successor was appointed up to the time of going to press.

Charles Guise, who recently came to the Majestic Theatre, Detroit, has been appointed advertising and publicity manager for the Majestc, Regent and Orpheum theatres, Detroit.

Exhibitor Charged with Murder.

Homer Barnes, owner of a moving picture theatre in Hillsboro, Ohio, is under arrest there charged with the murder of his wife Charlotte. According to authorities of that town he confessed after a bloody knife and wearing apparel were found hidden in the theatre. Barnes and his wife operated the show, and Barnes claims he cut her throat following an argument over the business.

He is confined in the Highland county jail awaiting action by the grand jury.

WARREN JOINS HODKINSON CORPORATION

Vice-President of Goldwyn Resigns to Take a Similar Position with Distributing Organization

W. W. HODKINSON announces the election of F. B. Warren as vice president of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, thereby springing a surprise in the business side of the motion picture industry. This new affiliation means the retirement of Mr. Warren as vice president and a member of the board of directors of the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation, with which he has been associated from the day of its formation in 1916 by Samuel Goldwyn.

"I think Mr. Warren shares my own opinion as to the necessity for the integrity of product and the improvement of relations existing between the exhibitor and distributor of motion pictures," said Mr. Hodkinson in making his announcement. "I have watched his development in the industry and have felt that his previous experience as an editor and publisher of important newspapers gave him a sound base for straight thinking. After all, both the making and the selling of motion pictures is a publishing function, and the most successful publisher of pictures will be one who rejects unfit materials in his search for the selective, finer materials upon which he can place his imprint.

Hodkinson Building Slowly.

"During the past year the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation has proceeded with great deliberation to build an internal organization capable of doing the big things we have in prospect. We have not wished to expand too quickly, for that has been one of the big faults of the industry both in its business and production sides. I am now gathering about me both the men and the product that will make our company's name stand for a definite quality in production and service.

"By service I mean our business relations with the exhibitor as well as the aids rendered the exhibitor in conjunction with the pictures he receives from us. I shall next week make a comprehensive announcement on the product that I have assembled for our new season, together with some plans for a releasing innovation which I am certain will win exhibitor support immediately."

Warren Tells Why He Changed.

"My affiliation with Mr. Hodkinson is founded upon business logic," is Mr. Warren's explanation of his unheralded change. "My first reason is founded on the memory that six years ago when W. W. Hodkinson founded the Paramount organization and laid down the fine pattern and fabric on which it was builded, the producer-distributor and the exhibitor were not engaged in a blood feud. They were not at each other's throats.

"They did not feel that there was any necessity for their being enemies. A thousand Strands and Rialtos and their equivalents in all of the large cities of the country are operating today because of the initial Hodkinson vision that pioneered in good pictures at decent prices, instead of contributing to the abundance of cheap melodramas that formed the prevailing motion picture diet of that period. The continuation of such product meant the continuation of converted store shows and five-cent houses.

Buys More Goldwyn Stock.

"Mr. Hodkinson has always had a lesson to teach. He has been a pioneer, and I like both pioneers and men who use their brains. He has had the patience to redevelop slowly. I believe in the things he is going to do, and I want to help do them. I have the friendliest and best of feeling for the Goldwyn organization, of which I have been a part since it was organized, and this is further evidenced by the fact that a few hours before my resignation I purchased additional Goldwyn stock on which I had an option. I hope to be up to my eyes in work with the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation on April 1."

Conducted Big Advertising Campaign.

In trade circles Mr. Warren has been credited with being one of the builders of the Goldwyn organization. Even prior to the completion of the first Goldwyn production two years ago he had made the name Goldwyn known in all parts of the world and had, through one of the most unusual sales campaigns in motion picture annals, made the entire industry eagerly await his company's product. In the British market his campaign of introduction gave Goldwyn the standing possessed by only a few brand names that were years older and backed by scores of releases. As a result of this campaign in the United Kingdom, the Goldwyn releases abroad were remarkably successful from the outset.

Since December Mr. Warren has been in sole and exclusive charge of the merchandising plans and distribution of the Ford Educational Weekly for the Goldwyn organization, and under the spur of his enthusiasm the Goldwyn offices have placed this feature under contract in more than 4,000 theatres.

Buys New Outing-Chester Series for Great Britain

THE new series of fifty-two Outing-Chester pictures, produced by C. L. Chester in co-operation with Outing Magazine, has been sold to the Moving Picture Sales Agency, Ltd., of London, for Great Britain through the agency of B. Nichols. Mr. Nichols, who controls the Sales Agency, and is one of the best known film men in London, arrived in New York a short time ago, and gives an interesting account of the demand of English film audiences as compared with our own.

"The English people go to the moving pictures to be entertained," said Mr. Nichols, "and they fight shy of anything which sounds ponderous and instructive —"high-brow" you call it in this country. For that reason the heavy educational film is not popular among our exhibitors.

"But the sort of thing that Mr. Chester has been producing in the last Outing-Chester series and in this new one of fifty-two pictures is a different matter. These films are always amusing, always picturesque, and with as much action in them as a five-reel melodrama. The incidents caught by the camera in all parts of the world are really thrilling, and the titles make people laugh.

"That is what we want in these days —to thrill people and make them laugh. After the strain we have all been through it is what all moving picture men want on both sides of the water; and I have bought the Outing-Chester pictures because they have what the ordinary educational film lacks—originality and humor."

The Rialto, of Indianapolis, Is To Be Greatly Improved

THE motion picture business in Indianapolis has passed the "full house" and "S. R. O." stage.

Following close on the heels of the announcement of the extensive enlargement of the Lyric Theatre, on North Illinois street, by the Central Amusement Company, comes word from the Lenwood Amusement Company of the enlargement and remodeling of the Rialto Theatre, at Kentucky avenue and Illinois street.

The plans and specifications for the work call for a new and larger entrance to the theatre from the Illinois street side as well as a change in the Kentucky avenue entrance. The new opening, when completed, will be twenty-two feet in width. The floor will be of marble and the walls and ceiling will be richly decorated. One of the pleasing features of the new lobby and entrance will be the illumination. No chandeliers will be visible as the lighting fixtures are to be incorporated in the scheme for the decoration of the ceiling.

A nursery and playroom for children will be installed, also a rest and smoking room for men and a rest room for women. The capacity of the house will be increased by about 400 seats.

It is estimated that the cost of rerun between $25,000 and $30,000.

Loew Chooses Cleveland for Headquarters City

THE visit of Marcus Loew to Cleveland, the week of March 15, had a double significance. He now operates the Stillman Theatre, and announced that he expects very shortly to begin work on two big theatres in Cleveland, also that he intends to move his Chicago headquarters to that city where the main business of his central west theatres will be transacted.

Accompanying Mr. Loew was Thomas P. Lamb, his architect. Loew stated that he intended to build downtown, a theatre for vaudeville and another in the Euclid—East 105th street—district for pictures and vaudeville. He also intimated that he would have at least five theatres in Cleveland within a year.

In announcing that he would establish central western headquarters in Cleveland, Mr. Loew pointed out that several of the big film companies have their district headquarters there and that it is also handy to the cities in which he has theatres, such as Toledo, Dayton and Pittsburgh.

TRADE PAPER FORUM IS WIDE OPEN

Many Picture Showmen Discuss First National's Proposal to Limit Advertising to Five Mediums Devoted Strictly to Forwarding Film Industry —One Manager Says Two Will Fill the Bill

OUR exhibitor-subscribers have found a field of common interest in First National's proposal to limit its advertising appropriation to five trade papers—the five that devote their organization and effort to promoting the film industry and only the film industry. The story began with an expression of opinion by William Sievers, of St. Louis, printed in Moving Picture World dated March 22; an expressed approval of the circular letter James D. Williams had previously sent to First National members, in which Mr. Williams "declared himself" in unmistakable terms. The sound business statements by Mr. Sievers "went over."

Last week we were privileged to print a symposium of opinion sent in by picture showmen from various sections of the country. They expressed their opinions freely and we gladly printed them them in the hope that further discussion would eventuate. Here is another installment—and we hope to be able to print several more "batches" from subscribers who are sufficiently interested in the business that is yielding their bread and butter to add their opinions and convictions to the sum total.

We aim to be fair and open in the publication of these communications. We run them without "editing"—without cutting out the things that might not entirely favor our own publication. What we want is the opinion of showmen who are interested in their own business sufficiently to aid "the other fellow" in arriving at a sound conclusion. Come on in! Say what you think—and remember the opinion of a manager in a 2,000-town means just as much to the logical outcome of the situation as does the opinion of the manager of the biggest chain of moving picture houses in the country.

Read this symposium. Give thought to every letter we print. If you can add anything to the grand total, send your ideas along and they'll be mighty welcome. Space in a moving picture trade paper was never devoted to a better purpose. We are willing to take our chances in the final summary. Kick in with your opinion! Here is the list for this week:

By E. W. Collins.

Liberty Theatre, Electra, Texas.

I SUPPOSE a trade journal is like a man. When a man advances an idea or a plan he wants it to be supported by people who agree with him. So, when Moving Picture World has the editorial courage to take the bull by the horns and tear down a theory about trade paper advertising, it wants to know whether the exhibitors, for whom it is doing this, thinks that it is right.

As an exhibitor I'll say you are right, damned right, and right beyond all doubt, argument or question. First National Exhibitors' Circuit has gone to bat with something worth while when it permits the World or any other publication to print its private correspondence about its advertising policy. And the World has taken up the gauntlet for the exhibitors and for the industry in a campaign that should awaken the producer and distributor advertisers to what the exhibitors think about their disbursement of advertising money.

Why Stop at Five Publications.

For the trade to support and encourage so many publications, particularly the hangers-on, is not only burdensome but it is a harmful practice. The expense must inevitably be shouldered off on to the exhibitors, and they, in turn, must seek it from their only source of revenue, the public. Now that we are burdened with a multitude of taxes of all kinds why should not the rest of the advertisers do as First National has done? Only why stop at five publications in the process of elimination?

I am what you call a small town exhibitor. I have never run a big town house, therefore I do not know what demands are made upon such managers, but I can see no reason from my position as a small town exhibitor, or from what little I do know of the problems of the big town manager, for any exhibitor to spend money or time on a paper that devotes ninety per cent. of its space to circuses, vaudeville, carnivals, the legitimate stage, or sports and the stock market. Neither can I understand why an exhibitor would subscribe for any of these outside papers with nothing but a few pages for a moving picture department when he could just as easily subscribe for one or two of the big ones and get all the information he needs.

Still Room for Improvement.

While these two papers which I have in mind (you all know who they are) seem to try and give the exhibitors unbiased opinions of the pictures they review, I believe there is still room for improvement. I can recall one instance of the editor of a certain journal who came out with some mighty strong editorials against the exhibitor-owned companies. Now whether this was his honest opinion or just a sop to the already organized companies I do not know. Yet I do know that it did not set well with me, and the past year or so has proved this editor entirely wrong in this.

Now, it seems that it has remained for that very exhibitor-owned organization to put into practice a policy which is sensible, ample and sound, unproductive lines.

Moving Picture World deserves the support of every exhibitor for what it is doing in this connection to awaken the industry to a great big leak in funds, and I want to thank you for having the courage to tackle it without fear of consequence. You are proving yourselves well worthy of exhibitor confidence.

By Frank W. Buhler

Managing Director Stanley Theatres.

IN your issue of March 22 there appears an article expressing the views of William Sievers on the First National's trade journal advertising policy, in which he sets forth several reasons why the proposition to limit advertising to five motion picture journals is the right thing to do.

While I believe that the time is at hand when the useless waste of money in non-productive advertising should be stopped, I am not thoroughly in accord with Mr. Siever's views as to the elimination of all but five trade journals. Of course there are many trade publications now receiving a goodly amount of advertising which fail to bring the advertiser any noticeable results. These I would say to cut out at once, but there are others which devote much space and do lots to help the industry thrive.

Should Measure Journals by Strength.

These latter journals, I think should be given some little consideration and be allotted a certain portion of the advertising to encourage them in their good work. By this I mean that they should be measured up with their strength in the motion picture industry and given space in proportion.

It may be true of some exhibitors that they only have enough time to read two journals each week, but there are others who go through many more each week. As managing director of the Stanley Theatres in Philadelphia, New York, Atlantic City and other cities, I am compelled to keep in close touch with every angle of the industry, therefore it is necessary for me to read numerous trade journals each week.

I don't know of any other business in the world in which there is so much money wasted in non-productive advertising as there is in the motion picture industry. I am a firm believer in advertising, but only in a sensible way. Great care must be exercised in the selection of publications so as to get the best possible results.

If the new policy of the First National Exhibitor's Circuit can be worked out in a way that will not injure the industry, it should prove beneficial both to the Circuit and to the exhibitors, as the money thus saved can be put into the purchase of bigger and better pictures.

By D. A. Kuhlman

The Rex Theatre, Jackson, Mich.

AT last we find a company of film producers who have backbone and foresight enough to buy advertising space as they would any other commodity necessary in the making and producing of pictures. By this I am referring to the First National's trade journal advertising policy.

Every month I throw enough motion picture literature in the wastepaper basket that if the advertising expenditure on exhibitors in these mediums were totaled would produce the greatest motion picture the world has ever seen.

It is impossible to estimate the waste of time and money spent in publishing in these so-called authoritative motion picture mediums.

In all my years in the motion picture game I have run across many motion picture magazines and trade journals, some of which have died a natural death. But among the real live ones, and those I depend upon for authentic picture information, I find the Moving Picture World, Motion Picture News and the Trade Review to stand head and shoulders above the rest.

Scattering Hits Won't Win.

Yes, First National is on the right track. Weed out the weak sisters and advertise in mediums that will have a tendency to build up rather than tear down the good virtues of the motion picture business. The team that scatters its hits never wins ball games. Bunch your hits and drive hard. Pick your mediums. Stick to them. Rather three good ones than a dozen also rans.

Save the money spent in injudicious advertising, and if at any time you have surplus appropriations for advertising put it into better engraved cuts and go the limit on publicity in co-operation with your franchise holders.

Yes, the First National policy is rock bottom and one that will have producing companies falling in line in a hurry. Stick to virgin motion picture magazines and journals. It's not alone conservation. It's practical. Yours for the Fifth Victory Loan.

By George J. Schade

Schade Theatre, Sandusky, O.

I HAVE read Mr. Sievers' article in the Motion Picture World of March 22, and "I second the motion." Two trade papers are enough. We are swamped with advertising matter, magazines, etc., every day. This stuff is coming in so fast that we bought a baler to take care of the oversupply. The writer owns a First National franchise for Sandusky, and wishes to say that First National is blowing in entirely too much jack when they take on five trade papers to advertise their productions. We never pay much attention to trade publications.

We never pay much attention to trade paper opinions on pictures, because the fact is always this, viz., a producer holds the whip hand over the trade paper—"good write-up big advertising, poor write up nothing doing from Mr. Barnum." Good trade papers have their place in our theatre. We get help for exploiting, music cues, news in general pertaining to the picture game, and a few other minor things that assist us in putting them over, but when it comes to criticisms in trade papers, we say "Good-night."

Wants Plain Honest-to-Goodness Statement.

If you want criticisms, buy Wid's or Screen Opinions, and get what you pay for. If the producer wants to advertise a production, let him buy enough space in a couple of good journals, so that one can read them "while on the run." We don't care a rap to read about little Mary buying another auto or Doug playing golf in Maine. What we want is a plain, honest-to-goodness statement from the advertiser, telling us what he has to sell, and we don't want any frills or fringes attached to them either.

Mr. Sievers suggests weeding them out. Why not have some producer put them out with his overabundance of "Poison Gas?" Cheer up, fellows! We'll be wearing diamonds when McAdoo starts in to produce pictures, because he will be getting all of his publicity gratis. First National take the hint. Maybe Newton D. Baker will be open for a job soon. You might then get a lot of free advertising, 'twould help us out immensely from a financial standpoint. Yours for two magazines only.

By W. W. Graham

Webster Theatre, St. Louis.

AS a "trade journal exhibitor" I want to go on record as approving every statement made by William Sievers in the article dealing with the trade journal advertising policy of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, appearing in The World March 22.

It is high time that some company has come to the front on this proposition. I want to congratulate the First National for taking the lead.

I do not have time to review all of my programs. Therefore, I depend largely on the trade papers for my information.

For that reason I demand the leading journals—those devoted exclusively to motion pictures.

When I find time to read two of the magazines thoroughly, I consider myself fortunate.

Far Too Many Papers.

As stated in the article, there are too many papers in the field. There are far too many. The field is not big enough for all of them.

I believe that in the near future many of the smaller journals will suspend publication. Now that the fight is started; now that they have been properly exposed; now that their worthlessness is known, let's keep up the fight.

Every exhibitor should join in the war on trade journals that permit their advertising to influence their "news matter."

If an exhibitor reads a nice article about some picture and books the production on the strength of the article and finds to his sorrow that the stuff

he read was untrue, who will suffer? Will that alleged trade journal pay for his losses?

Most men can tell "colored" news. Some can't. They pay the penalty for even reading trade journals of the biased type. Again, an exhibitor reads an article "roasting" a picture. He intended to book it, but because of the knock forgets it. His rival books the production and makes a killing on it. It was a good picture and, the first exhibitor again learns, to his sorrow, it was "hammered" because the producer did not advertise in that particular paper.

Showmen Make Their Own Deductions.

On the other hand, when we see a picture boosted in a responsible journal, we know that it is good. And when we see a production made by one of the big advertisers criticised we know that the picture is not so good and have even more faith in the nice things that are said about other productions.

I notice that the responsible papers occasionally roast a picture made by one of their best advertisers. I also notice that such journals never knock the producers who do not advertise with them.

Everything in Mr. Sievers' article is true. It is just plain common sense and I believe every man and woman in the business will agree to it. As to the point it makes about five journals covering the field I must disagree with him.

I believe it could be covered thoroughly with LESS than five. Five is exceptionally large measure.

Manager the Pageant Theatre, St. Louis.

THE First National is right! That is my verdict, after reading the remarkable article written by William Sievers, of St. Louis, dealing with the advertising policies of the First National, as regards trade journals. "The Man from Missouri" certainly makes a clean-cut case of it. And right here allow me to make a prediction:

It won't be exclusively the advertising policy of the First National for any great period of time. Why? Because all the big producing and distributing companies are going to fall into line and adopt the policy themselves.

And one more prediction:

Weeding Out Will Take Place.

The "weeding out" of the trade journal garden, as referred to by Mr. Sievers, will take place shortly. The "big fellows" are going to realize that every dollar spent with the "fly-by-nights," and that's a good term for some of our so-called trade papers, is a dollar cast to the winds. And the "little fellows" who have been forced to advertise by persistent hammering will soon realize that all the hammering such publications can do cannot harm them.

In my own opinion, every point made by Mr. Sievers is a plain statement of fact. No criticism can be made of any part of the article. It appears to me that the policy adopted by the First National is the policy that any wise distributing company, or any other business doing national advertising, would adopt.

The policy of the First National, in a way, is an elaboration of the policies of my own theatre. I advertise in mediums that I know get results. I have discarded such mediums that have proved valueless. In my opinion, it would be just as wise for the First National to buy space in the inferior journals as it would be for me to advertise my theatre in the St. Louis Argus—said Argus being our negro paper.

Approves Common Sense Policy.

Incidentally, I believe the First National could get as much benefit by advertising in said Argus as in some of the trade journals that are in the field for ads. (And no doubt such an ad in the Argus would be more widely read than in some of our alleged "trade journals.")

In selecting the five leading journals as the mediums for its advertising The First National took the wise step. Few exhibitors find time to read five journals, even though they subscribe to that many. But it is safe to say that every person engaged in the industry takes from one to five of those journals in which the First National advertises. Therefore, it would be a waste of money to go any farther.

In conclusion let me say that the policy of the First National is the only "common sense" policy possible. I want to place the stamp of my approval upon it.

By Peter Magaro,

Manager Regent Theatre, Harrisburg.

I WANT to take this opportunity to commend William Sievers for writing his expression of opinion on the advertising policy of the First National Exhibitors Circuit. Having booked some of its attractions, I feel as though the opinion is virtually the same as my own.

To my mind, the fundemental reason why the First National Exhibitors Circuit is right in its advertising policy is because it has weeded out the garden, as the St. Louis manager so aptly puts it. First of all qualities demanded in a publication, trade or otherwise, is truthfulness. We find in many magazines purporting to be trade publications articles coming direct from the press agent of a star or a corporation. These are on the face manifestly untrue, but just because the star or corporation uses several pages of advertising in the magazine they are given the readers free of charge. The exhibitor naturally loses faith in a magazine of this sort very quickly and turns toward the magazine which prints the truth, regardless of what it may cost.

Should Watch Ads as Well as News.

The First National, I believe, has recognized this. It has also recognized the fact that when a magazine prints the truth in its news columns it is careful to see that its advertisements measure up to the same standard of truthfulness. I do not know, of course, whether this is the case, but one would naturally assume it. The object, therefore, is reaching the exhibitor successfully, and the way to advertise in a magazine that can be relied upon.

One of the big mistakes being made nowadays by the producers is to advertise extensively in magazines which carry so-called "motion picture departments" in the back pages. It is fallacy to believe that these advertisements sell the exhibitor. You would not expect an exhibitor to pick up a magazine and read all the way through a melange of various kinds of trade news for the sole and simple object of finding the scant supply of motion picture news at the tail end. Understand I am not criticising these magazines. They have their mission to perform. They must touch all phases and branches of the amusement profession. But it is manifestly impossible for them to cover each field successfully.

Trade Magazines Are Read Closest.

That is why we have specialist-magazines, which specialize in vaudeville, others which specialize in the legitimate stage, and others which specialize in motion pictures. It is evident that the magazine which specializes in motion pictures, which covers every angle of the business from advertising to production, is the magazine that will be read the closest by the exhibitor. The First National people have singled out these magazines and are avoiding duplication by advertising in them exclusively. To my mind this is a big advantage for the exhibitor, because he does not have to wade through other magazines to learn what is happening in the realm of his own particular business, and further it helps to pull down the ultimate consumer cost.

of Sayward & Willey, Colonial Theatre, Rochester, N. H.

IT Pays to Advertise." How many times have you seen this slogan, but did you ever stop to consider its incompleteness?

Would it not be better, "It Pays To Advertise Right," for certainly the industry has been spending their money. In fact one could say the motto has been "It Pays To Advertise Left and Right," regardless of value or results from the medium they are using.

On reading in a current issue of The World that First National had decided to limit its trade advertising, I felt that I was right in a statement I made to a fellow exhibitor, that film concerns were always preaching "Advertise," while they themselves in many cases showed poor judgment by using anything and everything in the shape of Journal or Trade Papers.

Papers Fair to All Are Needed.

Few trade papers whose criticisms and editorials are not influenced by large space consumers and who are not afraid to say "rotten," when a picture is everything the word means, who are fair to both producer and exhibitor, are what we need.

An exhibitor would rather know a picture he has booked was below average, so that he may strengthen his program by some means, rather than to tell his patrons what a wonderful show he has and have them go out feeling they have been "buncoed." It is up to the trade papers to tell them.

The producers should be honest in their advertisements. It is hard to tell just what the word feature means. In the past we understood a feature as something good; now if a picture is good, we usually find them calling it a "super-production, special extra selected extravaganza," or some sort of name with as many adjectives as seem to be at hand.

When the producing concerns limit their trade advertising to fewer "trade papers" they will be able to give more consideration to their advertisements. Cheap or poorly constructed advertisements are as unconvincing as the "flowery ad." As in a field one instinctively will steer clear of "The Bull."

Few Subscribe to More Than Three.

No exhibitor generally subscribes to over three magazines, which will usually contain the information he seeks in presenting his program. I am of the opinion that the policy taken by First National will be followed shortly by the other "Big Ones," which will naturally eliminate the small and needless papers. Many times after an exhibitor has formed his ideas from his usual magazine, he will receive gratis some paper, which knocks because they receive no support from the producer, and in many cases this causes him to doubt his own convictions.

When it comes to eliminating there is no question that the older and reliable magazines that have proved themselves serviceable and efficient are the ones that the First National will select, and there is no doubt that these magazines are the ones for which the majority of exhibitors have subscribed.

I may be wrong in my selection, but when it comes to a showdown I believe that the following papers will be chosen:

The Moving Picture World.
Motion Picture News.
Exhibitors' Herald and Motography.
Exhibitors' Trade Review.

By H. Arthur

Manager The Garden Theatre, Marshall, Mich.

HAVING had a good deal of experience in the legitimate show business as well as the picture game I am fairly well qualified to express a few thoughts in regard to the First National's advertising policy.

When I want information on moving pictures I look to the Herald and the News and the World, because I can find just what I am looking for and it's boiled down to readable facts. When I want legitimate stage news I refer to the Billboard. Every magazine and periodical is fitted to carry some particular line better than others. To make my point more clear:

You don't look for the situation on woolens and the markets on underwear in the Iron Age, neither do you look in the Dry Goods Economist for shoe and leather goods information. Each medium is peculiarly fitted to cover a certain line. And so in the moving picture business. I sincerely believe that once we rid ourselves of a lot of auxiliary publications and half-hearted motion picture criticisms that exhibitors will have a better understanding of the coming events in the picture world and not be confused by a bunch of false alarms. First National surely has started something, and it won't be lacking supporters.

By George Brookins

Washington Theatre, Hillsdale, Mich.

JUST a little comment from Hillsdale, Michigan, and the management of the Washington theatre in regards to the First National's advertising policy. If five moving picture journals, such as you have in mind, can cover the field and give you the proper circulation that such mediums claim, then it's time to resort to bally-ho men and the ancient criers, because such auxillary moving picture pamphlets as daily find their way to our waste basket will never fill the bill.

How some producers can spend perfectly good money for advertising in publications that reach a very small percentage of exhibitors and then by the sample route is far beyond me. Surely First National believes in advertising to as great an extent as any film company in America, and I have confidence that they will take this extra money saved by judicious advertising and put it to good advantage where it will help their franchise holders. The World and The News and one or two other virgin moving picture journals deliver the goods in thorough manner.

Five of such publications will cover the moving picture news of the world like a blanket and tell the exhibitor what he wants to know. Yes, First National seems to be putting one across, and I await further comment with interest.

By G. A. Bohn

Censor Theatre, Albion, Mich.

I PRESUME by this time your discussion on the First National's advertising policy has become a countrywide issue. Still, I feel a word or two from the biggest little city in the United States won't go amiss. Leave it to Albion, Michigan, and the Censor Theatre to keep things alive. I surely would think that any exhibitor who can read two such thorough trade journals as the Moving Picture World and the Herald, and read them carefully, would have about all the literature he could take care of.

Better two or three good live publications thoroughly read than a whole string of journals glanced over and cast aside. It's not justice to the advertiser and not justice to the subscriber. I take the World and the Herald and find them a thorough source of information. They say the smaller the town the more one reads, and when I say two live publications fill the bill, that is if they are thoroughly read, I think that most exhibitors will agree with me whether they run a show in Oshkosh or Iceland.

It's a wise advertiser who picks his mediums with care, and I believe First National is on the right road.

By W. D. Fisher

Proprietor Empress Theatre, Grand Island, Neb.

IT strikes me the First National Exhibitor's Circuit is hitting the nail square on the head with its proposal to limit its advertising to the trade journals. The trade journal is what the ordinary exhibitor of my acquaintance depends on for bedrock facts concerning new attractions. I know I do and my friends do. There are a lot of entertaining motion picture magazines a fellow may enjoy glancing over if he ever has a chance, but that is all it amounts to. Give me the trade journals when I am after real news of the film industry.

I noticed in your issue of March 22 that Mr. Sievers, of St. Louis, broached the subject, and he speaks of five trade journals. Just what five he means I am not sure, but I believe I can guess the names of four of them because your journal and three others are the ones I have always depended on for news of the business. I don't mean I read all four of them every week, but I always do make it a point to go through one of them, and I try to look over one or two more. If a man has time to read four of five trade journals it is a pretty good hunch he hasn't much business to attend to. Anyway it's a cinch the trade journals always have given me all the news I wanted or could assimilate.

Doesn't Depend On "Fan" Stories.

I won't say the motion picture magazines published for the movie fans are utterly useless to the exhibitor. Once in a while if there is some picture out about which I want to get as detailed a story as possible, I can find that story worked up for the fans in some magazine. Then I am glad of the chance to read up on the story. But I have always felt that the motion picture magazine, which is published for the "ultimate consumer," is apt to be tainted slightly with prejudice in favor of the pictures and the actors that are "played up" in that magazine. So I don't depend on that sort of magazine to form my opinion on how good the picture is. When I want that sort of information I go to the trade journal every time.

When it comes to theatrical publications and others carrying a "motion picture department"—nix on me. There isn't time in my busy life to look at them. My little Empress Theatre bosses me too much.

Right System to Reach Exhibitor.

So if I—and my friends—don't put our dependence for facts on anything but trade journals, it isn't getting advertisers anywhere with us to spend their money and time outside of trade journals. That's the way I look at it. For that reason I would say the First National's trade journal advertising policy is hunky-dory—or the correct thing, if you prefer the president's English. Conservation is one of the elements of success in business today, and that's another reason I approve the First National's plan. It looks like it was using the right system to reach the exhibitor.

I know something of advertising outside of the movies. I had the state rights for a certain fire extinguisher once, and I had district rights for a certain musical instrument. I learned then the value of honest advertising. That last works both ways. In this particular instance I mean that I consider the advertising in the higher class trade journals as close to the facts as I can reasonably expect to find it.

Exhibitor Wants Facts, Not Slush.

What an exhibitor wants is facts and not press agent slush. Maybe he can get himself jollied up more about a picture by reading a yard of pretties in some picture magazine, but he feels bad afterward.

Perhaps you don't care about my opinions on the First National's policies, but Mr. Sievers' page interested me and I wanted to get it off my chest.

MARION SAYS TRADE FOLLOWS FILMS

One of the Government's Dollar-a-Year Men Returns From Propaganda Mission in Spain to Tell Industry That Industrial Films Are Greatest Trade Boosters

TAKE it from Frank J. Marion, one of the most believable men in the industry, the work of the Committee on Public Information was a success in Spain. No matter what complaint may have been raised by newspapers and politicians relating to other branches the George Creel propaganda mission to Spain was completely successful. Mr. Marion should know, for he was the man placed in charge of the Spanish branch of the Government work. Trained newspaper man and expert moving picture producer and distributor, Mr. Marion went to Spain with just the experience and equipment essential to success.

"They wanted me to take different positions in war work," said Mr. Marion to the World representative, "but I determined to wait until the opportunity I was best adapted to was available. The dollar-a-year field was large, and finally came George Creel to ask that I should go to Spain as my part of the foreign work in combatting German propaganda."

Mr. Marion was interviewed in the little office where he is closing out the final details of the passing of Kalem, having arrived from abroad late last week. He still wore the clothes he bought in Spain, the loudness of which cried to the ceiling. He had not had time for his tailor to outfit him, and he was talking to the World man against train time for a trip to his home in Stamford.

Brings Back Spanish Appetite.

Asked what was his immediate purpose Mr. Marion declared he was going to close out his present moving picture interest and then devote himself to the kitchen, acting as interpreter for his wife in dealing with the Spanish cooks he is bringing over to satisfy his longing for the food of the Dons. For more than a year he has been living on Spanish fare and has created a new appetite—a taste that can only be appeased by the gang of servants who are now on the high seas bound for American and the Marion culinary department.

"The Spaniards are eager—it is not too much to say they are wild—for films that illustrate the various operations of American industry," said Mr. Marion. "They want to see American machinery in motion; to see goods in process of manufacture; to see pictures of American engineering and reclamation. They want to see how America does things. Just plain industrial films are looked upon by eager eyes, and the cinemas cannot get enough of them. We had only one strictly 'propaganda' film in Spain—'The Bridge of Ships'—but every industrial or straight advertising film that illustrated American enterprise served as propaganda of the best sort."

Took Hint from Yankee Press Agents.

"There were 70,000 Germans in Spain," Mr. Marion continued, "and their propaganda system had extended over years. The newspapers were mostly all subsidized, and those that were not in Germany's pay were anxious to be, and they printed everything pro-German and nothing pro-Ally when we reached there. The English, French and Italian consulates advised me that only with money could I get anything printed. They laid out a plan that would involve $20,000 a week and advised me to go ahead with it.

"Here my newspaper training took command. I believed that if we could furnish the papers news that they would print it. And by applying Yankee methods of press agenting plus my newspaper instinct I decided to go ahead under my own impulse and direction. It was uphill work for a few months, but in the long run the Spanish papers were printing 'cables' from North and South America that made the German's hair curl.

"One of the favorite devices of the

Frank J. Marion
Just returned from representing the Committee on Public Information in Spain.

Spanish papers in securing what they believed would be the real sentiment of the two Americas was to interview passengers who arrived at Spanish seaports, fresh from the United States or South America. Soon their ship-news reporters were being supplied with all the interviews they could possibly handle, 'written' by the passengers and supplied to the newspaper men without any labor on their part.

Marion as Ship News Reporter.

"My time was spent in 'being a good fellow' with the individuals on the newspaper who had actual charge of seeing 'copy' through to the composing room and into the papers. I was never disclosed as a propagandist. I was an American with money, who liked to pick my friends and spend it with them. All the time the papers were printing more and more news and other material favorable to the Allies. The Germans kept on spending their money at an estimated rate of $30,000 a month direct with the papers, but Yankee methods of press agentry was accomplishing better results at a fraction of the cost. In the final months of my stay in Spain everything was easy; the sailing was smooth and the work I had previously done registered a hundred per cent."

All the time Mr. Marion was circulating what films he could get hold of; in some instances with amusing outcomes. One of his industrials was a straight out advertising film, exploiting a certain widely advertised American fountain pen. It was publicity for the pen; nothing else. But theatres showed it eagerly and, as in every instance where industrial films were shown, there at once was created a demand for the product.

After the fountain pen film had been shown for some time Mr. Marion received a visit from a German propagandist who thanked him cordially for the great help the films had been in boosting the German's business. The Hun was the Spanish representative of the American fountain pen and pro-Ally propaganda had vastly increased his sales and profit.

"'Trading with the enemy,'" said Mr. Marion, "was a joke and in this case the laugh was on me. Business and demand for the product shown in these industrial films invariably followed the screening. We had a tractor film that created a great inquiry—but there was no representative of the tractor interest in Spain. Films on irrigation and water-power conservation were liked most of all—for Spain is sixth among nations in natural sources of water power and last on the list of water power applied. An industrial dealing with electrical appliances and the electrification of the C. M. & St. P. R. R. was a sensation. Our industrials were all shown at technical schools and colleges and when I left they had started to play return engagements beginning at the Royal College of Science."

Foreign Competition in Films.

Asked about the general film situation abroad Mr. Marion declared that within a few weeks American films will have stiff competition from foreign-made productions. Italy, France and England are all undertaking the production of pictures and there will be raw stock made in factories that have been operating on munitions. These munition plants are seeking the product that comes next easiest—and film stock is made from gun cotton. "If the American producer is depending upon their foreign market to consume over-production they will find opposition and plenty of it early in Summer, of that I am confident," said Mr. Marion.

"Foreign productions will be soon offered on this market," he continued. "There is an active propaganda under way in England, France and all of the entente countries to urge the use of 'home made' products. The war-distressed countries are going to encourage the 'buy at home' spirit among their people and that is going to be another obstacle to successful American film exploitation abroad."

Spain Ripe for Exploitation.

Spain, however, is an open market, according to Mr. Marion. American goods are easily marketed, but they all come through English selling sources and very little if any distribution of American goods results from direct dealing with the Spaniards. Mr. Marion told of one of the largest picture houses in Madrid that lately closed for repairs and reconstruction. On the sign giving the reopening date it was proudly acclaimed that "American films," American projection machines and the famous "American Manusa screen" would be exclusively in use when business was resumed. Simplex and Power have almost entirely replaced the Pathe and Gaumont projection machines in Spain, he said. Film stock is scarce and none can be had in Spain even for titles.

"The United States needs more than ever to continue its exploitation in Spain. Trade follows the film. The projection of industrial pictures, backed by distribution of the product advertised, will create an immediate outlet for goods of American manufacture," said Mr. Marion. "There is a great field ready for cultivation; the opening wedge has entered. It would be a catastrophe for this Government and the American manufacturer to miss their wonderful opportunity." HILL.

PRICE IS A MASTERLY PROPAGANDIST

Entertains Delegates of Women's Convention with "Little Women" and Wins Them to Motion Pictures

IN his successful exhibition and exploitation of "Little Women," the Paramount-Artcraft picturization of Louisa May Alcott's widely known book, Joe F. Price, manager of Allen's Calgary Theatre, Canada, demonstrated his possession of that essential understanding of what sort of advertising is proper for certain kinds of pictures. When a government comes to the point of thanking a manager for the presentation of fine pictures it is time for exhibitors all over the country to rise up and do things a la Price of Calgary.

Tactful Judgment on Convention Week.

Mr. Price realized that, while the book had a wide reading, it was necessary to direct its appeal to a class of people not ordinarily in the habit of patronizing the motion picture theatre. He booked the subject to run concurrently with the annual convention of the Women's Institutes of Alberta, the largest women's gathering in western Canada.

Two months before the picture was to be shown Mr. Price played a master card in writing a letter to the secretary of the Women's Institutes, telling her of the picture "Little Women" and suggesting that it would be a pleasure to arrange a private showing for the delegates attending the convention. The result was that the private screening of the picture was included in the official program of the convention.

Printed Special Invitation.

Mr. Price had special programs and invitations printed, the latter being used by the delegates as admission tickets, and at 11 o'clock Wednesday morning the women came in a body, a thousand strong. A special musical program was arranged.

"When I heard the women weeping even above the pipe organ," said Mr. Price, "I knew the picture had gone over. My Wednesday business was good. Thursday picked up $50 over Wednesday, while Friday showed a gain of another $100."

Seeing Opportunity and Gripping It.

Realizing what a splendid opportunity for propaganda he had in the class of women who attended the convention, Mr. Price devoted the back page of his special program to an appeal for the proper attitude toward motion pictures. There were women at the gathering from all parts of the province—from as far north as Peace River, 700 miles above Calgary, and as far south as the international border. These women not only carried away a pleasant recollection of the hospitality of Allen's Theatre, but to the four quarters of the country they took the seeds of approval of the moving picture.

A letter to Mr. Price from Miss Mary MacIsaac, superintendent of Alberta's Women's Institutes, not only thanked him for the entertainment, but said: "Your presentation of 'Little Women' has done more to remove the feeling of prejudice against motion pictures than anything else which ever has been done."

Jewel Carmen Again Wins Point in Contract Suit

JUDGE KNOX, in the United States District Court, on March 22, denied the application of the Fox Film Corporation and the William Fox Vaudeville Company for a dismissal on the pleadings of the suit instituted by Jewel Carmen, the former Fox screen star, to enjoin the defendant companies from interfering with her contractual relations with rival film companies.

Miss Carmen alleges that when she signed a contract with the Frank A. Keeney Productions after rescinding her contracts with the Fox companies, which she contends were not binding, the defendant companies enforced a boycott to prevent her from earning a livelihood in her profession.

Judge Knox granted a preliminary injunction in the suit some time ago, as announced in the Moving Picture World, but Rogers & Rogers, counsel for the defendants, applied recently for a dismissal of the suit on the ground that the allegations set up in the bill are insufficient to maintain such an action.

"I have again read the pleading, together with the briefs submitted, and am still of the opinion that it makes out a case, which, if established by proof, will warrant the plaintiff's receiving equitable relief," concluded Judge Knox.

Mary MacLaren Entertains.

Mary MacLaren, Universal star, was hostess at a party given in the Universal City studios last week in honor of the Naval Affairs committee which is on a tour of the Pacific Coast inspecting the coastal defenses. The committee came to Universal City upon the invitation of Carl Laemmle and spent an entire day watching the various film companies at work.

The committeemen visiting the producing plant were L. P. Padgett, chairman of the Naval Affairs committee; Frederick C. Hicks, Fred A. Britten, William J. Browning and Carl Vinson.

Rowland Leaves for the Coast.

Richard A. Rowland, who, together with Maxwell Karger, presents the Nazimova de luxe screen dramas, left on a trip for Hollywood, Cal., last week to see a projection of the star's latest super-feature, "The Red Lantern," the cutting and assembling of which has just been finished under the personal supervision of Mr. Karger.

Upon Mr. Rowland's arrival in California a conference of executives of Metro, who are the exclusive distributors of the Nazimova productions, will be held to perfect the details of special plans for the exploitation and distribution of this sensational production.

D'Asseau to Assist Holubar.

Leon D'Asseau, who acted as art director for Robert Z. Leonard's Universal company for several months, has been appointed assistant to Director Allen Holubar at Universal City. Reaves Eason, who assisted Holubar in the production of "The Heart of Humanity," is now working with Director J. P. McGowan, who is producing "The Red Glove" serial.

YANKEE SHOWMEN COMBAT CLOSING

Exhibitors' League in Boston Begins Fight Against Measure Filed by Representative Cowin—Have Best of Argument Before Mercantile Affairs Committee

THE Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Massachusetts put up a strong fight before the Massachusetts Legislature against a bill filed by Representative Frank W. Cowin, of Boston, which would prohibit the opening of motion picture shows on Sunday.

A hearing was given on the bill before the Committee on Mercantile Affairs and the representatives of the Massachusetts exhibitors had all the best of the argument. While no report has yet been filed by the committee there is hope by the leaders among the exhibitors that the committee will report the bill unfavorably. If the bill is passed along to the House for action the exhibitors are preparing for a strong battle.

Miller and Wasserman Lead Attack.

Hiram E. Miller, attorney for the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, and Harry I. Wasserman, secretary of the Massachusetts branch, made the main arguments in defense of the exhibitors. Mr. Wasserman made a strong and convincing plea, speaking as an exhibitor. He is manager of the Eagle Theatre, 2227 Washington street, Boston, and is a live wire in the exhibitor's league.

Representative Frank W. Cowin and the Rev. Martin D. Kneeland, of Winchester, general secretary of the Lord's Day League and others, spoke for the bill. They claimed that the opening of movie shows interfered with the proper observance of the Sabbath and caused many persons to remain away from church. They believed that the movie shows have a bad moral effect upon the communities where they are located.

The proponents of the bill had no new arguments in addition to the general condemnation of the motion picture as a Sunday attraction in opposition to the churches.

Attorney Miller, for the motion picture league, declared the motion picture was an antidote for crime. He said:

"How many dives existed in Gloucester. Then came the movie show. The dives are out of business now. Their former patrons, many of them seafaring men, now find wholesome pleasure in an evening at the movies.

In speaking specifically, he said the moving picture theatres were formerly of the smaller type and were permitted to remain open but six days a week. At the time the site of the theatre recently opened in Gloucester was purchased, the plan was to erect a much smaller building than the one now there. The new theatre is one of the best in the country.

Did Not Meddle with Politics.

In response to a question from the committee Mr. Miller said the moving picture interests have never been active in opposing the election of a Cambridge mayor. If Mayor Rockwood were opposed because he closed the motion picture theatres on Sunday it came from the people of the city whose will was balked by the mayor. He said if the people want picture shows they will insist upon having them. Sunday audiences are generally capacity houses. The people are the sovereigns, and if they want cabarets and other shows on Sunday they will get them, he responded to a question.

Mr. Miller said, in response to a question, that Sunday baseball and Sunday movies have little in common as the latter is confined within four walls so that no one outside is disturbed by it. The moving picture also carries instruction as well as amusement. He denied that the movie interests have aided in the defeat of Sunday baseball.

Representative Carey, of Boston, opposed the bill and pointed out that movie shows are held in certain Dorchester parochial schools on Sunday nights without opposition.

Fewer Arrests Since Sunday Movies.

Senator Curran, of Boston, said that police records show that there were more arrests on Sunday nights before the movie shows were permitted than since that time. James A. Shanborn, of Boston, said that the hotels were worse than the motion picture shows and if the people are unable to go to the latter they will go to the hotels. "For God's sake, crush the hypocrisy," he added, "and let those who desire to attend the Sunday evening shows, do so."

The main argument of the hearing was made by Secretary Wasserman, of the exhibitor's league. He said in part:

"As secretary of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Massachusetts, whose members represent an investment of $22,000,000 to $25,000,000, I desire to take exception to the bill before you on closing the theatres on Sundays. There are two reasons for our opposition to the bill, and they are: Monetary consideration and the influence of immorality that Sunday closing would create.

"It is a positive fact that the theatres of Boston and vicinity figure their overhead expenses on the seven-day basis, and in 95 per cent. of the cases, if we did not have the seventh day, or Sunday, our investment would be hampered and losses result owing to the tremendous expenses we are under: increased salaries, film cost taxes and other additional expenses that have occurred since the declaration of the war.

"There are, on the average, sixty licenses granted for Sunday shows, for which we pay $11 each, every Sunday. The city and state derive a revenue from these of $660 a week, or on a forty-five week a year basis it would mean a loss of $29,700. The theatres running Sunday shows average at least ten employes or six hundred a week, and they receive an average wage of $4, $2,400 a week and $106,000 a year. The Government, on a 10 per cent. revenue tax, would lose at least $135,000 a year, besides $4,000 to $7,000 on reel tax.

"Gentlemen, these are facts and figures that must be taken into consideration besides the moral facts which are great factors in our community at the present time. You are aware, gentlemen, that the motion pictures and vaudeville act shows on Sundays are duly censored by the state police and that we cannot show any picture without proper eliminations, such as shooting, dancing, or drinking scenes. As a matter of fact, pictures shown on Sunday are scenic, cartoon, news reels, and only light comedies and comedy dramas. No vaudeville players are allowed to dance, or sing parodies, or change costumes that are eligible on week days. Therefore our concerts are run in accordance with the Sabbath Day.

Closing Would Help Hoodlumism.

"I have taken the matter up with numerous police officials and they claim that the closing of theatres on Sundays would create hoodlumism and cause people to seek their pleasures in other ways that would not be as clean and wholesome, as sitting at a clean theatre watching motion pictures or vaudeville.

"Representative Cowin made a remark that pictures are immoral. This cannot properly be substantiated, owing to the fact that at no time within the past five or six years has there been any reason to find any material fault with them. We are today a big industry and why should we be burdened by unnecessary evils?

"The motion picture industry has done as much, if not more, than any other industry during the war; we have assisted the Government in hundreds of ways, selling Liberty Bonds, allowing four-minute men to speak in our houses, allowing the contributions of money towards the Red Cross, and other contributions, allowing slides to run in different propaganda efforts of the Government and we have done everything at a great sacrifice.

Theatres Now Represent Community.

"Does it seem right now, gentlemen, that our investment should be jeopardized by such legislation? The theatres today are not what they were years ago; they are larger, better ventilated and the representative and other speakers are doing an injustice to the mayor's official censor, the state police and city officials by fault finding. There are thousands of people that go to the pictures Sundays that cannot go on week days and were it not for the fact that it is a wonderful change, and were it not for the fact that they derive pleasure and recreation, they would not patronize the Sunday night shows."

Mr. Wasserman's argument carried considerable weight with the committee. In spite of the balance of argument being with the opponents of the bill the exhibitors fear they have a lively fight on their hands to stave off injurious legislation and the Massachusetts league officials, headed by President Frank J. Howard, are preparing for a battle if the committee's report is against them.

BATHING GIRLS TO TRAVEL WITH FILM

Sol Lesser Engages Six Companies of Sennett Beauties to Tour with "Yankee Doodle" Show

FOLLOWING the announcement that Sol L. Lester, president of the State Rights Distributing Company, and the All Star Features Distributors, had taken over the rights to Mack Sennett's "Yankee Doodle in Berlin" for the United States and Canada, comes the announcement that Mr. Lesser has completed a second deal with Sennett, a deal also involving exclusive national and Canadian rights and introducing an innovation, hitherto unheard of in picturedom. Mr. Lesser has not only bought the rights to the feature picture, but has also undertaken to send the youth and beauty of the famous Sennett studios on tour with the picture covering the entire territory embraced in his picture rights.

This means, in short, that Mr. Lesser secured from Mack Sennett the pick of Sennett's beauty contingent to embellish the patriotic picture, so that wherever the message of "Yankee Doodle in Berlin" is delivered on the screen the message of youth, health and wholesome exhilaration as personified by these pictures, also will be transmitted by the models themselves.

San Francisco Showing Gave Lesser Idea

The project, unusual in recent cinema history, was the outgrowth of Mr. Lesser's experience with the picture when it was shown at the Tivoli in San Francisco, and later in Los Angeles. Mr. Sennett consented to the San Francisco appearance in deference to the desire of his patrons in that city. Some said it was the picture that crowded the house; some said it was the girls; some said it was the irresistable combination of the two, and the latter opinion seems to be nearest right.

Mr. Lesser, figuring San Francisco one of the most discriminating of cities, concluded it might not be a bad investment to keep the co-ordinated forces of beauty and wit together for the rest of the country.

Plan Involves Transportation Feat.

Difficulties are merely a challenge to Mr. Sennett and he worked out with Mr. Lesser a plan whereby alternating corps of girls in Los Angeles for his studio work, girls on the road with his feature picture and girls making the trip to the studio or to the front, the scheme could be put over.

Combination Makes Critics Stutter.

"I am persuaded America will be refreshed with the message of youth as it is brought by these hearty, healthy young women whose exhibition is a demonstration that health and beauty are as intimately related in life as they are in art," said Mr. Sennett.

Detroit Majestic Turns to Policy of Two-a-Week

CHARLES H. Miles and Tom Ealand have decided on a new policy for Majestic Theatre, Detroit, starting Sunday, March 30. The program will be changed twice a week—Sundays and Thursdays, instead of only once a week. Prices will be the same—the same big orchestra, singers, organist, etc., will remain and in all other ways the present policy will be maintained.

For the first week, the program will be Dorothy Dalton in "Extravagance" and for the second half "Here Comes the Bride" with Jack Barrymore—both Paramount pictures. The second week the Majestic will show a Goldwyn picture with Geraldine Farrar for the first half and "What Every Woman Wants," an Exhibitors Mutual, for the second half.

DISCUSS HYLAND BILL AT TRENTON

Dr. Hespe, Major Johnson, Congressman Austin, W. A. Brady, Charles Hilfer and Mayor Gillen Championed the Bill, While Its Opponents Were Most Conspicuously Absent

A DISCUSSION of the Hyland Bill No. 291, before the Assembly Welfare Committee, was held at the State House in Trenton, N. J., on Monday afternoon, March 24. Assemblyman Rowland of Essex, who presided, asked if those who were in favor of the bill were prepared to present their arguments and the time they required? Dr. H. J. Hespe, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of New Jersey, replied that they were and would need at least three quarters of an hour. There was no response from those opposed, they were conspicuous by their absence. The presiding officer remarked: "I guess it will pass."

The salient features of bill 291 are: It shall be lawful for all persons to attend, or attend, and participate in, on any day of the week, games, plays sports and recreations, motion pictures, recitals, plays and musical performances, subject in all cases to police control.

The privileges of this act shall not become effective until adopted, in any municipality of this state, by the vote of the electors in such municipality.

Believed Bill Stands a Good Chance.

The opinion prevailed that if the bill were a purely motion picture privilege, exclusive of all other forms of entertainment mentioned therein, it would stand an excellent chance of passing both houses. As it is, there is a good chance of its passing the Assembly, but prospects of opposition in the Senate. The absence of the opponents at the hearing was a puzzler to those who attended.

Dr. Hespe introduced Major Charles F. H. Johnson, who was supervisor of munitions and president of the Passaic Board of Trade. He spoke of the valuable assistance moving pictures had rendered in keeping idlers on Sundays well and beneficially occupied. They served to offset the dissemination of Bolshevicism, the influence of saloons and other secret meeting places, where anti-Americanism was preached. In the city of Passaic the moving picture people came to his assistance and opened up their theatres to take care of the idlers and shared the proceeds on a fifty-fifty basis. People must have recreation on Sunday or they become restless and he believed motion pictures the best and safest means to promote American ideas.

The Day of Puritanical Laws Has Passed

Congressman R. W. Austin of Tennessee, also president of the American Recreation League, said in part: "We are seeking to interest people in every form of legitimate recreation, in all kinds of athletics and the Boy Scouts. In Washington, where I have the honor to be a member of the lower house, the theatres have been opened on Sundays. The plan has worked well, and I believe it will work well elsewhere. Particularly did it prove helpful during the war in the cantonments and elsewhere, making the soldiers satisfied and happy. The day has passed for puritanical laws, our great concern is to make people satisfied. We must find a substitute for the saloons where thousands gathered on Saturday nights and Sundays. The moving picture is the natural means and the theatres the safest substitute. If the theatre is endorsed by the Capitol of the United States, the people of every other city should have the privilege of adopting it if they feel so disposed." Congressman Austin was at one time American Consul at Glasgow, Scotland.

People's Entertainment on Sunday.

Charles Hilfer, representative of organized labor, spoke briefly and said: "People crave entertainment on Sunday. We must give the laboring class some form of Sunday recreation and I am heartily in favor of this bill. I believe as Congressman Austin advocated, there should be a proviso introduced in the bill that shows should begin not before 1 p. m. on Sunday."

Major George N. Seger of Passaic, said: "The theatres in Passaic have been opened on Sundays recently, without legal permission. It seems to be the will of the people and they have not been interfered with. Moving pictures have been found beneficial. The city of Passaic has a mixed population and during the recent strikes, seventeen thousand people walked the streets on Sunday, the motion picture has done much good and kept them in check and from harmful dissipations and temptations." He said he thought some revenue should be derived from Sunday shows to make up the difference in revenue lost by the closing of saloons by prohibition.

Brady Regrets Absence of Opposition.

W. A. Brady, president of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, the only speaker in any way connected with motion pictures, prefaced his remarks by saying: "I regret the absence of the opposition. My remarks will therefore be brief." Mr. Brady laid much emphasis upon the great work which had been done here and abroad in the winning of the World's war and combatting the pro-German propaganda by counter-propaganda in the universal language of motion pictures, which all could understand. He spoke particularly of the commendation which motion pictures had received from the President, public officials and other prominent persons, whom he mentioned. In conclusion, he read from a newspaper, an article written by a prominent Methodist minister in which the minister said he thought so much of motion pictures, that he had introduced them in his church on Sunday evenings as part of his service. "True" said Mr. Brady, "he does not charge any admission but he takes up a silver collection."

"The Red Lantern," Metro's Artistic Production, Places Nazimova in Settings of Unusual Beauty.
A telling contrast is offered by a part of the picture which surrounds her with an atmosphere of harsh plainness.

Newark Favors Sunday Movies.

The last speaker was Mayor Chas. P. Gillen of Newark. He said: "The city of Newark as a whole is in favor of Sunday movies. Ninety per cent would favor this bill, consequently I am in favor of it."

The following were among those in attendance: Charles Dooley, Regent Theatre, Paterson; P. A. Adams, U. S. Photoplay Theatre, Paterson; Max Gold, Garden and Lyric Theatres, Paterson and Passaic; William Anderson, New Grand, Paterson; T. F. Blumenthal, National Theatre, Jersey City; Tom Miner and J. B. McNally, Newark Theatre, Newark; W. B. Pertruam, Paramount, Newark; G. W. Jacobs, Paramount, Newark; Joseph Stern, City Theatre, Newark; Dr. Charles Hespe, Jersey City; Fred Cross, Long Branch; Harry Rockfeller, Asbury Park; W. A. Brady; Charles Hildinger, Trenton; Arthur B. Freund; Congressman R. W. Austin; Charles Hillfers; Charles P. Gillem; George N. Seger; Major Chas. F. H. Johnson.

PENDING BILLS HIT COAST INDUSTRY

One Drastic Measure Passes Arizona Legislature and Another Is Introduced in California Body

IF proposed laws now pending before the legislature of the States of California and Arizona are passed, great hardship to the motion picture industry will result.

A bill, passed by the state legislature of Arizona and awaiting the signature of the Governor to become a law, requires that every film exchange or producer doing business in Arizona must have a resident manager; that every film producer must deposit with the state treasurer a sum equal to the price charged the theatre for the film, no provision being made for a refund; that every film producer must file a statement of his financial condition annually, and that the expense of such statement must be borne by the producer; that a copy of every contract made with an Arizona theatre must be filed with the Commissioner of Contracts within five days after it is signed.

Impossible Conditions.

This requirement, according to film exchange managers, is impossible of performance, because every contract made by the local exchange must be sent to New York for approval before it becomes operative.

Another objectionable feature in the bill is that "the Commissioner of Corporations may, when he sees fit, send a committee to inspect the books of the producing company at its head office at the expense of the producer."

It is believed that exhibitors who object to the deposit system used by some exchanges are responsible for the introduction of the measure. Exhibitors of Arizona are said to be divided in their opinion on the matter.

The bill was introduced into the state legislature by Assemblyman Watters, of Mojave County, and until the text of the measure was brought to the attention of the Los Angeles Film Board of Trade by a traveling representative who returned from a trip to the State Capital at Phoenix it was not considered objectionable.

Will Bar Film If Bill Passes.

The discovery of the drastic features in the bill prompted the Film Board of Trade to decide that no film would be shipped to any of the 180 theatres of Arizona if the bill was allowed to become a law.

A committee composed of Dave Bershon, of the Universal Exchange; Charles Marley and Attorney A. P. Michael Narlian, which went to Phoenix to make a personal appeal to Governor Campbell against the passage of the bill, report that the Governor has postponed attaching his signature to the bill for a week, and instructed them to furnish a full and complete statement from the opponents of the proposed legislation.

California Has Blanket Bill, Too.

A measure introduced into the California legislature, now in session at Sacramento, by State Senator Anderson, makes it unlawful for any person or persons, company, corporation or combination to advertise, publish, produce or exhibit at any time or place in the State of California any theatrical play, act, picture show, litograph drama, photo drama, drawing, sketch or historical production which is contrary to good order and the public welfare, and which tends to reflect reproach upon any race or to incite hatred or race riot, and which stirs up race prejudice and tends to disturb the public peace, or that shall represent any hanging, burning or otherwise lynching any human being incited by race hatred.

This bill is regarded as very dangerous to the industry, since under its operation almost any scene in a film might be found objectionable by the censors intrusted with the interpretation of and the enforcement of the law.

Make Strong Fight Against Measure.

A strong fight is being made against its passage, and when it came up for consideration on March 18, it was rereferred to committee on the motion of Senator Lyon, who declared that the measure in its present form would cause disaster to the motion picture industry in California.

Anderson, the father of the bill, is said to have made the statement that the bill was drawn primarily to prevent the exhibition of certain well known film to which the negroes object.

In addition to the two measures spoken of above, there is another law pending in the California legislature which would cause Sunday closing, and still another that would make it unlawful for any exhibitor in the state to sell a ticket except where he could guarantee a seat to the purchaser.

GIEBLER.

Colorado Senate Asked to Vote on Sunday Bill

A CONCERTED effort is being made in Denver to have the bill repealing the old Sunday amusement law of 1862, and known as the Owens-Kelly bill reported out of the State Judiciary Committee's limbo and given a chance on the floor of the Senate.

The measure was passed with a large majority in the house. Active work on the part of its opponents, however, resulted in the judiciary committee, which is headed by Senator Henry O. Andrew of Boulder, filing it away in its receptacle of forgotten things.

A petition signed by legitimate and motion picture theatre owners and employes, and by other citizens, is being circulated and will be presented to the Denver delegation in the senate, urging them to support the bill. The petition asserts that the present law, though not enforced in Denver, remains a potential danger as long as it is allowed to remain on the statute books, as it can be wielded as a spite club or for political purposes at any time. It is also asserted that the law was made at a time—1862—when conditions were entirely defferent than now, meeting evils which do not exist.

"All over the state sentiment in favor of the bill has grown," declares Harry Nolan, a motion picture man aiding in the fight. "In the senate, as it was in the house, the majority is convinced of the justice of the measure, and would pass it. But its enemies have taken this unfair and tricky method of defeating it, knowing full well that the senate would vote in its favor if it is reported out."

Cleveland Film Men Ready for Liberty Loan Drive

PLANS of the moving picture trade for the coming Victory Loan were completed at a meeting in Cleveland March 22 of representatives of the Fourth Federal District, covering all of Ohio, Kentucky and western Pennsylvania.

A picture was shown which will be used extensively throughout the campaign. It is called "The Price of Peace" and shows an intimate view of one American soldier performing a deed of gallantry which later won him the Distinguished Service Cross.

W. E. Lusk, manager of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, Cleveland, who was chairman of the film committee in the last loan, continues in this position again. He expects to use about 200 portable projectors in addition to the screens of the theatres to show Victory Loan pictures.

Engage Melville Brown.

Melville Brown, who has created a number of comedy ideas for Charlie Chaplin and who has also written several scripts for Mabel Normand, has been engaged by Lyons and Moran to prepare scenarios for future productions of the comedians. Brown and Clyde Bruckman, a magazine writer, will alternate in writing the stories for Lyons and Moran.

RORKE BILL ARGUED IN PENNSYLVANIA

William A. Brady Heads Large Delegation Taking Sides Against Sunday Closing Via Old Blue Law

THE activities of the legislative committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry were centered during the past week in Pennsylvania, where two important hearings were held at Harrisburg. Under the leadership of President William A. Brady the representatives of the industry attended a hearing March 19 on the bill introduced by Representative Rorke, which would permit Sunday concerts, lectures and entertainments of an educational nature.

President Brady received an ovation from an audience estimated at three thousand, which packed the House of Representatives, and his arguments were delivered in a forceful and most effective manner. He related in detail how President Wilson had commanded him to mobilize the motion picture industry for co-operation with the war program and that motion pictures had rendered the most distinguished service during the war without any profit.

Mr. Brady claimed that the movies were directly responsible for maintaining the morale of the soldiers, and that if the films were good for the soldiers over there they certainly were all right for the great army of the soldiers of peace over here, as well as the working men and women of America.

President Brady made a distinct hit when, in summing up the answers to the opponents of the Rorke bill, he stated that President Wilson had personally commended the great aid which had been given by the film and screen under the leadership of Mr. Brady by formulating and directing educational campaigns against the Hun propaganda in France and other countries when it was reported that the United States was only giving half-hearted support to the Allies.

Believes in the Public.

"I have the greatest respect for all you men and women who are here in opposition to this bill," said Mr. Brady, "but I truly cannot believe that the great American people are in sympathy with you in your position."

Representative Rorke, who presided, stated after the hearing that he felt confident of the results, and that the bill would in all probability be reported favorably out of the committee next Tuesday. The Philadelphia newspapers carried stories of the hearings, and featured President Brady's presentation of the arguments on behalf of the people and the industry.

On Thursday President Brady appeared at a conference with Governor Sproul to consider the proposal for the moving of offices of the State Board of Censors of motion pictures from Philadelphia to Harrisburg. He related the importance of Philadelphia as a first release territory, of its central location, exceptional transportation facilities offered, and that it would be most embarassing and very expensive to the motion picture industry to have the headquarters of the censorship board removed to the state capital. At the suggestion of the governor President Brady is to prepare a brief, which is to be submitted, setting forth the arguments against removing the censorship headquarters from Philadelphia, and which will also contain pertinent suggestions relative to the whole censorship situation in the state.

Goes Out of His Way.

President Brady spent three days in Pennsylvania at a great personal sacrifice as he was on tour with a new play—with the Grace George company—and upon receiving several long-distant telephone messages from New York while in Detroit he made plans for a hurried visit to Cleveland and then on to Harrisburg. Upon his arrival in Cleveland Mr. Brady was waited upon by a committee representing the exhibitors and exchange managers, who desired to arrange a dinner in his honor. This plan could not be carried out, however, owing to Mr. Brady's sudden departure for Pennsylvania.

SUNDAY SHOW ISSUE UP IN MONTREAL

Film Men Watch Case Reopened by Manager of Scala Theatre for Relation to Lord's Day Act

THE Sunday show issue in Montreal has taken an active turn as a result of the hearing before Justice Mercier, of the Superior Court, Montreal, on March 20 of an application from Oliver McBrien, manager of the Scala Theatre, for the maintenance of a writ to restrain further proceedings against him in a case in which he was convicted in 1915 "of providing a performance contrary to the Lord's Day Act."

Exhibitors Fear Flood of Prosecutions.

As all theatres of Montreal are now being operated freely on Sundays the case is being watched with interest. If the appeal judge decides that further action may be taken against McBrien Montreal exhibitors see the way open for a flood of prosecutions by the Lord's Day Alliance on the charge that the theatre men are violating the Lord's Day Act.

The original offense alleged was that McBrien conducted a theatrical performance on Sunday, September 5, 1915. He appeared in answer to the summons on September 24, 1915, but the case was adjourned until October 6, then to October 22 and then to October 28, 1915. On this latter date the court did not fix a further date for hearing, but on May 5, 1916, the judge issued judgment, finding the accused guilty of having committed an offense against the Lord's Day Act, and imposed a fine of $25, or two months' imprisonment in default of payment.

Claim Recent Judgment Is Illegal.

The attorney for McBrien, in arguing the appeal before the Superior Court on March 20 last, contended that the conviction of May 5, 1916, was null and void as the lower court had no right to render a decision on that date. It was submitted that the case was given its final hearing on October 28, 1915, when no date was fixed for an adjourned hearing. Under the criminal code the adjournment of a criminal case is limited to eight days, and more than eight days elapsed after the hearing on October 28 until judgment was suddenly rendered without warning or order in the following May. It was further argued that there was an entire lack of evidence that the accused was guilty of the offense alleged and that he had not been given the opportunity to state his case. The theatre did not hold a performance on the date in question, but presented a concert, which did not break the Lord's Day Act, according to an interpretation of the act.

Judge Holds Back Opinion.

The city attorney argued that there was no law to compel the judge to render a decision within eight days of the "final hearing" on October 28, nor was it necessary, he contended, that the presiding judge would be compelled to recall the case every eight days or oftener until the court was prepared to render judgment.

The city asked that the writ be quashed and that the conviction be confirmed. Justice Mercier reserved judgment. If the case goes against the exhibitor all theatres in Montreal may be compelled to close tight every Sunday.

We Must Continue Taxes If Loan Is Not Subscribed

OUTSIDE of actual confiscation of private property there are only two ways in which a government can raise money—by taxation and by the floating of loans. To finance its war both ways have been employed by the United States to an extent hitherto unknown here.

Still the Government needs great sums of money to pay up its war debts and meet its obligations to the people in the post-war period. It hopes to obtain several billions of dollars—the exact sum has not yet been announced—from the sale of victory notes in the fifth Liberty Loan. If this last loan should not be subscribed the alternative is a continuation of heavy taxation, from which individuals and industry must shrink.

Choice Should Be Easy.

The Government has gone as far with taxation rates as it deems it wise to go. Too heavy taxation inevitably dries up the source of the taxes. Further than that too long continued heavy taxation can exert a highly unfavorable influence on the economic life of a country; but the war bills must be paid, and the Treasury must have funds for its tasks of reconstruction.

The individual subscriber to the new loan will receive interest on his money, and eventually the principal will be returned. The burden will be distributed so that it will not be dangerous to the economic welfare of the country.

The choice lies between victory notes and taxes. It should not be a hard one to make.

A FRIEND who conceals himself under a sign of fatigue as appended writes thus from the wheat belt: "I note with interest, articles in the several leading trade journals, during the past few months, of various and numerous film productions which have been especially selected to accompany the President on his several trips across the 'briny.'

"What I, and hundreds of citizens of the U. S. A., would like to know, is: 'Does Mr. Wilson do anything else, while on shipboard, but look at moving pictures?'

"If the President actually views one-third of the productions the press agents say he does, he certainly is neglecting his official duties, and the 'League of Nations' is a side-issue with him.

"We may be wrong, but if the facts are true, as stated by the manufacturers and press agents, Mr. Wilson must be seriously considering entering the picture game at some near future date, and is availing himself of the opportunity of familiarizing himself with business and is attempting to take a short-course in viewing every production released in the past five years, not to mention several hundred re-issues of the pre-historic age.

"I wish the delegates would hurry up and sign the peace terms, so the trade journals would use their columns for other items of more interest to the trade.

"The manufacturers had better get busy and get the balance of their productions listed in the 'honor role,' for the return trip.

The Casino Theatre, Louisville, recently experienced an exciting scene that proves how realistic the movies may seem to those who take them seriously. A railroad flagman, influenced by strong drink, kept quiet after he had gained admission until a train came thundering across the screen. The flagman jumped from his seat in the middle of the performance and with a waving lantern endeavored to place a stop signal against the onrushing screen train. He might have succeeded had not willing and eager hands thrown him into Louisville's principal business street in the nick of time.

Barleycorn, Plus Good Continuity, Can't Be Driven from the Screen

WE have received from Raymond C. Hill, the Brooklyn scenarist, some remarks on booze as a factor in screen writings after July 1—so sadly near at hand! Like some of the other Hills this one writes, "From the viewpoint of the story teller who is looking at prohibition from the standpoint of story material." (P. S.—Somebody has said "nobody ever heard of a convention being called to assemble around a pump.")

There is not room in our share of space-killing in this issue to use all Mr. Hill has so cleverly written on the subject, but we'll print enough so you'll easily be getting at what he means. (P. P. S.—Beau Broadway, in Sunday Telegraph, indicates that a lot of people will have considerable difficulty in "declaring the constitution unconstitutional.")

"It is true," writes the Brooklyn Hill (no relation to Brooklyn Heights or this "column") "that the saloon as we know it today will probably pass away, but in its place will come a new type of saloon—the blind pig, the speak-easy. This type will be more vicious than the old, and, from a story point of view, more dramatic, for the place itself will now be illegal and its habitues engaged in an unlawful act.

"Heretofore the saloon was a lawful, open-to-the-public sort of a dump, and had no punch in itself. The lead or the heavy went into the bar, took a snifter of third-rail, went through the motions of being potted and staggered out. Nothing like that any more. The very process of getting one little drink will be fraught with enough dangers and hair-breath escapes to supply almost enough material for a five-reeler, while a fifteen episode serial may be woven about the lead's efforts to get stewed, or to save somebody from getting that way.

"Under the new dispensation, when the lead is determined to go to the devil via the drink route, he will have to make the booze himself in his own home, or buy it from the private still of a friend or secret enemy, or get it at the blind pig, or by way of the crooked doctor's prescription, all of which hold dramatic or comedy interest according to the kind of story. In former times the lead just took a drink or a dozen, and there was no particular punch or interest to it, in fact it was a bore to see him swigging cold tea and pretending to like it, but now—oh, boy!

"If the forces of evil hatched dark plots in the old style saloon, how much more effectively, from a story standpoint, will they be able to plot in the secret, underground, guarded blind pig, with its atmosphere of criminality, its air of alertness against detection and imprisonment, its never-ceasing dread of the law?

"With prohibition will come not only the blind pig and the private still, but a host of so-called temperance drinks and substitutes for liquor, each of them as deadly as the old time booze. All of these factors possess story and plot interest, and will take on an even greater interest and importance as drink develops into a more acute problem that it was in former days. Ways will be invented of evading or circumventing the law, and still other ways to counteract these and uphold the law, which in themselves will provide stories or parts of stories. Drugs will probably be resorted to to provide the "kick" that booze gives its devotees at present, and there again the story writer glimses new fields for grazing."

Speaking of Duplicated Advertising

THE WORLD this week prints the second installment of letters from exhibitors expressing approval of the sentiments uttered by William Sievers, of St. Louis, in response to the announcement from First National that in future it would confine its advertising to straight motion picture trade papers. Sharp pens and clever ones these managers wield, no one will deny. The writers have a message for the trade at large, and wise will be the men who fail not to catch it.

There is one phase of the discussion which gradually is rising to the position of supreme importance. It is even overtopping and outranking—at least to the MOVING PICTURE WORLD—the theme around which the conversation began.

Managers really are concerned about the money wasted by producers in the columns of publications that make a side issue of motion pictures.

But many of them are more concerned over the vital necessity of reviews that review—of getting down to bedrock and calling a spade a spade.

Showmen want facts about pictures. And the WORLD is going to do its utmost to see that they get them.

Our readers will bear witness that for several months the WORLD in its reviewing department has been giving increased attention to the needs of exhibitors. This long established feature was in January placed under the supervision of its newly appointed associate editor a man peculiarly qualified by lifelong experience to comprehend exhibitor wants so far as ordinarily it may be given to one man to estimate those complex requirements.

One of the WORLD'S contributors sets forth as his ideal of an honest trade paper one which will, when justified, condemn a subject produced by a large advertiser and praise a picture made by a non-advertiser. The WORLD will subscribe to that.

Another thought strongly is suggested by the letters from managers: There have been in the past one or two reviewers who have seen fit to write down to what they conceived to be the exhibitors' level. If in the cases of these individuals there yet remain any reforming work to be done it would seem not amiss for them to begin a course of suitable study the better to enable them to reach the plane of good, forcible English so easily and naturally sustained by the showmen.

Here's a Governor With an Open Mind

WHAT the Governor of North Carolina said to the Chief Executive of the Palmetto State means much less to the moving picture industry, all things considered, than what the Governor of Pennsylvania said to William A. Brady. The President of the National Association met Governor Sproul as the outcome of his visit to Harrisburg to defend the industry against the attacks of those who would continue to deny residents of the Keystone State their Sunday chances to enjoy "the poor man's amusement." After the hearing before the legislative committee Mr. Brady repaired to the Executive Mansion and there was received by Governor Sproul in a manner most cordial.

The Governor wanted to know all there was to be known about the picture business as applied to legislation—and he picked the one man in the industry best qualified to tell him. Mr. Brady has been through many legislative battles, paying his own way to the "ring side" and meeting all comers with arguments that might be expected to appeal to men (or women) of open mind. Of his visit to Governor Sproul the President of N. A. M. P. I. cannot say enough; he was treated with a degree of consideration that bespoke a mind open to both sides of an important question and is convinced that the "square deal" will dominate Governor Sproul's influential conclusions.

Frank Marion Brings Back the Bacon

FRANK J. MARION, long time motion picture producer and distributor and more recently representative of the United States in Spain, has returned to his home country. He went abroad to do certain things, and he did them, as his friends were certain he would when he was given his commission by the Committee on Public Information. Breaking in on the close corporation maintained by Germany in Spain was no simple every day job, but it was a task containing no terrors for the Kalem chief. He knew newspaper work and he knew motion pictures. One prominent newspaper publisher and film manufacturer recently remarked these two agencies combine in themselves about all the publicity there is.

So Mr. Marion knew something about publicity and how to get it, even with the doors seemingly closed against him. He has discharged his difficult duties with credit to his country and to himself. He has done more than that—he has brought back a fund of information about the motion picture trade situation in Spain. On another page of this issue Mr. Marion tells of the opportunities opening in that country for American producers. It is a story worth reading, both for the interest the trade has in Mr. Marion personally and for the intrinsic value of the business facts he calls to public attention.

Fred Warren Changes Address

THE resignation of Fred B. Warren as vice-president and director of the Goldwyn organization to take up similar responsibilities with the Hodkinson Corporation is a matter of more than ordinary moment. Mr. Warren is always a prime factor in any concern with which he may be connected. He is an active citizen. His hooking up with Mr. Hodkinson may be assumed to indicate increased activity on the part of the company he joins. His parting with his Goldwyn associates is marked by an incident out of the usual, one containing a touch of sentiment as well as an expression of faith in the solidity of the company he is leaving. Mr. Warren is reported not only to be retaining his interest but also to have purchased additional stock. The trade will wish him a full measure of success in his new home.

Yakima Goes on Record

OUT in Yakima, in Washington state, the residents have expressed their opinion as to Sunday showings. The Ministerial Association centred its efforts on the small community with the intention in case it was successful of sweeping over the state in the belief it could carry things according to the way of thinking of its members. In Yakima, however, is a man named Mercy, who, besides other activities, runs the motion picture shows of the town. The ministers soon discovered they had Mercy on their hands, but they likewise found out his name in a measure belied his efforts to upset their plans. For of it for them there was none to be noted. A plebiscite was taken, with the result that in threescore hundred sterilized votes Mercy and the citizens on his side of the line cast approximately twoscore hundred.

It is possible the statewide campaign will be abandoned.

Connecticut Senate Sets an Example

AT last one legislative body has had the courage to declare for giving communities the right legally to witness the showing of motion pictures on Sunday. Undoubtedly there have been numberless cases where one or both branches of a legislature had the conviction that such authority should be granted, but a majority of the members lacked the stamina and political integrity so to vote.

The Connecticut Senate, with but three members recorded in the negative, has passed on to the House the measure sanctioning Sunday performances of motion pictures wherever the local authorities grant permission. The hours stipulated in the bill are short—from 7 to 10:30. The first two of these three and a half hours naturally will conflict with services in the churches. Had the opening been set at 1 or 2 o'clock in the afternoon there would have been no possibility of such interference, barring Sunday school sessions and possibly one denomination which adheres to afternoon sermons.

Nevertheless the victory is notable. Even should the measure fail to become law by reason of antagonism in the House the vote in the Senate will hearten the friends of Sunday motion pictures.

Killing of censorship bills in many states has seemed a comparatively simple task; but the passing of measures permitting even local option on Sunday showings has proved to be beyond the power of the industry's most skilled tacticians.

The Keystone "Cops"—A Reminiscence

WHERE are the Keystone "cops" of yesterday? The story of the troubles of the Louisville policemen outlined in our columns last week renews to memory one of the classics of the screen, or of the comedy screen—and if you won't stand for that denomination we'll say the slapstick comedy screen. For classics they were—and would be now—and the wide world laughed at the misfortunes of these misfit bluecoats. Otherwise staid and respectable citizens became convulsed with mirth when their caricatures of semi-suburban peace guardians were piled up in the waters of Eastlake Park or sprawled over the Hollywood landscape in their efforts to adhere to the speeding departmental flivver.

It was an indiscreet policeman who placed under arrest a boisterous youngster who in a spirit of fun had alluded to the former as a "Keystoner"; indiscreet because in court the opprobrious epithet was repeated in the giving of testimony. Three newspapers in the city are opposed to the local police administration. "Keystone" sounded good to the writers of all of them. Inevitably the town of Henry Watterson laughed with the newspapers and at the "cops."

Which brings us back to our opening question. If a few twelvemonth ago you had asked a body of film men to state offhand the market value of the brand name of Keystone would any one of them have raised violent objection had a member of the party set the price at a million dollars? Yet this remarkably valuable screen asset fades into nothingness so silently that the average picturegoer is unaware of its passing.

In the minds of the screen's public Keystone represented an individual. Take from behind the brand the person who is credited with creating it and the larger part of its importance is dissipated.

In the film business brand names are valuable as property if and when they represent an institution and not an individual.

Oregon Exhibitors Get Together

WHEN picture showmen plank down checks for thirty dollars covering initiation and a year's dues it is more than a declaration of intention to join an organization. It is valid evidence of enthusiasm. Consequently we may look forward to militant doings on the part of the exhibitors of Portland, Oregon, if any indiscreet and likewise misguided reformers tread on the tail of their respective coats. The Portlanders have affiliated with the Northwest Board of Trade, the exchangemen's body, which makes the combination of distributors and exhibitors complete.

Western Canada Passes Up Daylight Saving

THE exhibitors of Western Canada are more fortunate than their brothers in the United States. The former are congratulating each other over the decision of the Canadian Parliament to shelve the daylight saving measure this year. But as night's shadows are not seen prior to 9:30 in summer up in that northern country there would seem to be little excuse for interference with the normal goings and comings of Old Sol.

HONEST PUBLICITY FURTHER ADVANCED

First National "Ad" Recognizes Value of Truthful Advertising; Also Good Sense of the Exhibitor

IT takes courage sometimes to tell the truth; then again, it is only a matter of common sense. The First National Exhibitors' Circuit by running a trade paper "ad" which contained two reviews, one favorable and the other unfavorable, of its latest release and proclaiming in the same "ad" its belief that both reviews were honest expressions of opinion, has given the cause of reliable and profitable publicity an important advance. The exhibitor is bound to be impressed by such a novel method of drawing attention to a picture and to welcome the frankness that seeks to put him in possession of ALL the FACTS relative to the release. It takes the manager of a moving picture theatre but a short time to make the astounding discovery that the perfect reviewer is still among the unattained blessings of life. Experience has taught him that the critics of the daily press seldom agree on the merits of an attraction, whether it be a financial failure or a moneymaker of the first rank, and that motion picture reviewers are quite as apt not to agree.

Experts Frequently Disagree.

The moving picture theatre manager also knows that his brother managers do not always agree on the merits of a picture, and that the patrons of his theatre are often of different minds.

He can recall playing a certain picture to a crowded house that gave every indication of entire satisfaction and of writing a brother manager in a neighboring town:

"Be sure to book so-and-so; ran it yesterday to big business; everybody pleased."

He can also recall receiving a letter from the man to whom he gave the tip which read like this:

"Took your advice about so-and-so; poor business; my people didn't take to the picture for a cents' worth."

This is another way of saying that exhibiting moving pictures is show business and every manager must study his local conditions and master them if he is to succeed.

Answering a Logical Question.

The logical question that now arises is: Of what value is a review if it cannot always be relied upon?

The answer is: There are many important points about a picture that a trained and truthful reviewer can furnish the exhibitor to help him arrive at the conclusion as to whether or not he wants to show a certain release; and honest advertising by the producer will tell him how the release is being received elsewhere, the trade papers supplementing this information in their reading pages.

During four years of constant attendance at projection rooms and first run theatres the writer has heard many differences of opinion on the merits of the pictures just shown and has always been impressed with the honesty of these opinions.

Exploding One Time Johnstonian Fetish.

It is because the managers of the moving picture theatres have a clear understanding of these facts that none of them advocate supporting but one trade paper. In the letters publish in last week's Moving Picture World indorsing William Sievers' article on trade paper advertising some of the managers discussed the advisability of using but three such publications. Others seemed to think that the five exclusive trade papers now in the field should be supported.

None of the writers showed any disposition to advise the producers to CONCENTRATE all advertising in ONE publication.

Neither did they advocate relying upon the judgment of but one reviewer.

Outside of comparing the reviews, the exhibitor finds every week in each of the five papers exclusive articles that repay reading.

Moving picture showmen are aware that honest competition will benefit the trade papers as well as themselves.

EDWARD WEITZEL.

Personal and Otherwise

W. A. BRADY, W. M. Irwin, G. L. Hess, John C. Flinn and Paul H. Cromelin left New York on Thursday, March 27, for Chicago, to appear before the Chicago Censorship Commission on Friday, March 28. They are to discuss the need of a permanent censorship commission in Chicago and State of Illinois.

Lieutenant Syd Marion, formerly with the Vitagraph, is now leading a military jazz band at Fox's City Theatre in Fourteenth street, New York. Lieutenant Marion has lately returned from France.

The Heights Theatre, at Washington Heights, New York, has raised the price of admission to 20 cents. It is the only theatre in that section charging that amount. The other theatres were charging 11 cents until recently, when taking courage from Proprietor Landau of the Heights, they raised to 17 cents, including The Classic, Palace, Annex and the Empress. The Majestic, the largest theatre in Washington Heights, still retains its old price, 17 cents, very often presenting a double feature at each performance. The increased prices of the smaller houses have not diminished their attendance.

W. W. Young, of the Play House, Ridgewood, N. J., will raise the price of admission for adults from 20 to 25 cents, children, 10 cents.

William Atkinson, general manager of Metro, is making a countrywide tour of Metro Exchanges. He is now working his way East from Los Angeles.

Peter J. Schaefer, president of the new National Exhibitors' Association, it is said, contemplates calling a meeting of the executive board to be held at the Hotel Astor, New York, Thursday April 3.

Files Articles of Incorporation.

Articles of incorporation of the Wisima Film Company, of Salt Lake, have been filed with the county clerk of Salt Lake. The company is capitalized at $50,000, and takes over by transfer rights held by H. A. Sims, a former local theatre man, for the distribution of "The Eyes of the World" in Indiana, Ohio and Illinois, said to be of a fair cash value of $45,000. The officers of the company are C. F. Wilcox, president; F. J. McGanney, vice-president; E. Stevenson Wilcox, secretary and treasurer. These, with H. A. Sims and F. J. McGanney, Jr., form the directorate.

Hirsch Is Triangulating in Busy Cleveland Office

THE busy and interesting job now occupying the attention of Irwin Hirsch, manager of the Cleveland office of the Triangle Distributing Corporation, is "Putting Triangle on the map."

Since the first of the year Mr. Hirsch has been engaged in a campaign to make his company's pictures even more popular than they were a few years ago.

Irwin Hirsch.

"The new idea is catching on fine," he said. "Exhibitors are finding out also that it is something they needed. But best of all, the reports I get are that the new pictures are profitmakers.

Farewell Luncheon to the Johnsons.

The farewell luncheon given to Mr. and Mrs. Martin Johnson by the Robertson-Cole Company at the Hotel Astor, Monday, March 24, was attended by nearly fifty guests, most of them being connected with the moving picture industry. Houdini was master of ceremonies and introduced a number of speakers who told of their regard for the explorer and their belief in the importance of his work.

Chic Sales, the vaudeville actor and a warm friend of Mr. and Mrs. Johnson, expressed the feeling of the entire company in a single sentence when he said:

"There's just one thing I hope they'll get—back."

Martin Johnson outlined the coming trip to the South Seas as given in last week's issue of this publication, and was followed by a short speech from Mrs. Johnson. The couple then hurried away to catch the train for Chicago, the first stopping place on their long journey to the home of the cannibals.

MADAM, DON'T CHANGE YOUR HUSBAND

That Was the Injunction Sent Over the Phone by Thomas of Omaha's Rialto and It Worked

THE other week H. M. Thomas, of the Rialto Theatre, Omaha, put on the film, "Under the Top," and advertised it with a lobby display, a ballyhoo, a side-show and other characteristics of a circus.

Recently with "Don't Change Your Husband," he put over one of the heaviest runs that the Rialto ever had. His campaign kept them coming for an entire week.

First he had sweet-voiced girls call up every woman in the city. The girls would say sweetly, "Mrs. Smith, don't change your husband." Then, before Mrs. Smith could do more than gasp, the sweet-voiced girl would hang up. He also sent out 3,000 neatly engraved cards looking like wedding invitations, on which were simply the words—"Don't Change Your Husband." These were sent to the leading society women of the city.

Fifty twenty-four sheets were printed and put up about the city, bearing only the words, "Don't Change Your Husband." An equal number of six-sheets were put up. He spent $80 in running little one-line teasers through the daily newspapers for a week, saying, "Don't Change Your Husband.—Adv."

Used Suspense to Advertise.

The big space in front of the Rialto lobby, where coming attractions are usually advertised, was nothing but a question mark. On the screen, announcing the next week's picture, was a question mark. The telephone exchanges and the newspaper offices were all but driven frantic by people calling up and wanting to know what everything meant saying "Don't Change Your Husband," but the secret kept.

Then, in the Sunday papers, the day the picture started, were huge ads, with the words, "Don't Change Your Husband," in the largest of large type.

Later in the week Mr. Thomas ran an advertisement such as had never before been seen in Omaha. He printed a big picture of onions, with Webster's definition of an onion, then explained that one of the causes of trouble in "Don't Change Your Husband" was that the husband ate onions.

A wholesale vegetable commission man raised a row in the newspapers, saying Mr. Thomas was making light of the valuable onion, and thereby wronging an edible beloved by many people.

Thus it went, throughout the week, the advertising, coupled with an excellent picture, keeping up record crowds.

Kane Holds Conference in Omaha.

Advices received at the home office of Select from Omaha bring the news of an enthusiastic sales conference in that city, presided over by Arthur S. Kane, general manager. Mr. Kane is now closing a six-weeks' tour of the largest cities throughout the South and Middle West for the purpose of getting in closer touch with his branch managers, salesmen, and especially the exhibitors personally, for, as he so remarks, "the exhibitor has his ear closer to the ground, and the producers should get first-hand information from him as to what our public wants."

To greet Mr. Kane on his arrival at Omaha C. W. Taylor, branch manager in that city, arranged that the Strand, A. H. Blank's well-known first-run house, should be running "The Probation Wife," Norma Talmadge's latest Select Picture.

Pennsylvania Blue Law Bill Dies in Committee

THE Rorke Bill providing for amusements on Sunday in Pennsylvania failed to pass the committee on judiciary at Harrisburg, on March 25, and was subsequently reported killed. The vote was 18 to 6. According to the latest reports this closes the incident for the present, and marks a signal victory for the churchmen, who upheld the ancient blue laws at three public hearings held on the bill. The measure is now officially dead.

There is a possibility that Representative William F. Rorke, of Philadelphia, author of the bill, may try to revive it in the Legislature, under the rules for negatived bills, but opponents of the bill say that his chances for being able to do so are remote. What further action will be taken in the future by the Philadelphia Theatrical Association remains to be seen. However, it is apparent by the manner in which the opponents had the proposed amendment railroaded that they are past masters of the art, when it comes to upholding the old foggy "blue laws" of Pennsylvania.

Eugene Mullin Engaged by Universal as Scenario Head

EUGENE MULLIN, who has become one of the best known men in the picture industry because of his eight years with Vitagraph in the capacity of writer, director and scenario editor, has signed a contract with Universal and has gone to Universal City to take charge of the scenario department at the West Coast studios. Mr. Mullin recently resigned his position at Vitagraph and has been spending several weeks resting prior to taking up his new work.

Eugene Mullin.

In engaging Mr. Mullin Universal believes it has added to its forces a man who will do much to assist in the carrying out of its policy to provide its stars only with vehicles especially suitable and stories only of the best and most original character.

During his eight years with Vitagraph Mr. Mullin wrote over 150 original stories for screen plays and almost twice as many scenarios for production. In addition he also directed a number of film plays that had popular appeal.

Mr. Mullin believes that much of the criticism of producers by editors and the public because better stories are not obtained is the cause of giving the stars in the productions too much to say about their vehicles. The new Universal scenario editor states that numerous good stories accepted for screen production by scenario departments have been spoiled because the producers gave the stars the privilege of making changes in the script that would give the star more prominence in the vehicle but would subordinate many of the best parts of the drama.

Peggy Hyland Near Death as Auto Plunges Into Sea

CARRIED over a sharp cliff and into the sea by a runaway automobile, Peggy Hyland, William Fox star, narrowly escaped drowning. The accident happened at Catalina Island, Cal., where Miss Hyland and her company were filming scenes for "Miss Adventure," her latest Excel Picture.

Miss Hyland, with Director Lynn F. Reynolds, Cameraman J. Dev Jennings and an assistant cameraman, were going to a location on the edge of a sharp bluff overlooking the Pacific. The road was narrow, but it was straight and there were no visible difficulties. Mr. Reynolds, who was at the wheel, was driving at a rather rapid pace. Coming suddenly upon a hairpin turn, he was unable to swerve the car quickly enough, with the result that the machine shot over the edge of the cliff, raced down the sharp incline and plunged into the surf.

Mr. Reynolds stuck to the wheel, and Miss Hyland and the others hung on for life, as the machine bumped over the big stones and into the waves.

The automobile, the property of Miss Hyland, was badly damaged by its bath, but the passengers suffered only a wetting and a shake-up. After they had waded to shore, the four returned to the road, hailed a passing automobile which took them back to the hotel, and an hour or two later were back on location.

Hart Film Breaks Record.

William S. Hart in "Branding Broadway" broke the week's attendance record at the new California Theatre, Los Angeles, according to Harry Leonhardt, one of the owners, in just six days. So great were the crowds in front of the theatre that the management was forced to speed up the program to put on an extra show at midnight to accommodate the patrons who preferred to stand in line to see "Bill" rather than go home or elsewhere.

FABIAN TO BUILD 4000 SEAT HOUSE

Jerseyman Will Erect Half-Million-Dollar Structure in Paterson—Ready to Begin Work on $800,000 House in Newark Which Will Accommodate 3,500 Persons

A MOTION picture theatre seating four thousand people will be the permanent memorial and tribute which Jacob Fabian, owner of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit franchise for New Jersey, and proprietor of the Regent and Garden theatres of Paterson, N. J., will erect there early this summer as his supreme exhibitor accomplishment and in recognition of the remarkable interest that local theatregoers have shown for screen entertainment.

The structure will cost half a million dollars. It will have a frontage of 287 feet on Church street, and 125 feet on Ellison street. The auditorium will be 175 feet deep by 125 feet wide. The first floor will have seats for 2,750 persons, while the balcony will accommodate 1,250.

Will Match Fabian's Newark House.

In size and the magnificence of its appointments the Paterson theatre will be the equal of the new theatre which Mr. Fabian is about to build in Newark, N. J. The latter house is admitted by Newark realty men to have the best business location in the city. It will be situated at the corner of Market and Broad streets, on the site known as Branford place. The junction of these two main thoroughfares of the downtown section are in the exact center of the business section. Ground for the theatre will be broken next week, and it is expected that the house will be opened early in September.

This addition to Newark's motion picture theatres will seat 3,500 persons. It will be 148 feet wide by 175 feet deep, with two entrances on Market street and one entrance on Broad street. The floor will have a capacity of 2,250, while 1,250 more seats will be placed in the balcony.

Represents Investment of $800,000.

The property and theatre, when it is completed, will represent an investment of $800,000. The difference in the cost of the Newark house and the one Mr. Fabian will build in Paterson is almost entirely in the increased value of the property in Newark.

The appointments of the two houses will be similar. Each will be equipped with logia boxes with comfortable, upholstered arm chairs and large, roomy upholstered seats throughout. The sight lines will be studied so that the occupant of any seat in either house will have an absoluteiy clear and unobstructed view of the screen. The angles at which the seats will be faced will be so arranged that patrons at either of the far sides of the theatres will be able to look directly at the screen, without turning or leaning to one side.

The Paterson theatre will be equipped with a $50,000 pipe organ as a supplement to the large orchestra which will be a feature of the programs. The entire Paterson building will be heated and ventilated with an indirect system of blowers and exhaust fans, operated so that they will effect a complete change of air throughout the building every fifteen minutes. To these blowers and exhausts will be connected a series of air washers or humidifiers that will clean and purify the air as it enters the building. The system will serve a double purpose—it will cool the theatre in the summer months, and heat it in the winter time.

A large lounge and tearoom will adjoin the lobby as a form of innovation looking to a greater degree of personal convenience for patrons. Opening off of this will be a retiring room for women and a smoking room for men; an emergency hospital room with a nurse in constant attendance, a check room, telephone booths, sanitary drinking fountains and many other features. The lounging room will be beautifully furnished with deep, heavily upholstered couches and chairs, writing tables, reading tables, in fact, everything that can be found in the best equipped of hotel lobbies.

Roof Garden May Be Closed.

On top of the theatre will be a large roof garden, so constructed that it can be thoroughly closed in the winter time, and serve as a dancing pavilion, in charge of a patroness. This will be operated without cost to the patrons of the theatre.

Fred Wesley Wentworth, one of the best known theatre architects in the East, has been retained by Mr. Fabian to carry out his plans and ideas for these two model houses.

There is a significant indication of the future possibilities of the big special attractions in Mr. Fabian's statement that the tremendous number of people who have been turned away at both the Garden and Regent theatres on every occasion when he has shown a special feature encouraged him to the point of action in his opinion that Paterson, with its population of 125,000, could easily support a motion picture theatre with a capacity of four thousand.

William Gilmore
Manager Grand Theatre, Brooklyn.

How a Brooklyn Exhibitor Advertised "Red Glove"

ONE of the most effective advertising stunts ever recorded by an Eastern exhibitor was used by Manager William Gilmore, of the Grand Theatre, 4618 Third Avenue, Brooklyn, Manhattan, to interest his community in "The Red Glove" serial which he is now presenting at his theatre.

For two weeks prior to the initial showing of the new serial Manager Gilmore displayed a slide on his screen informing the audiences that on the two evenings preceding the showing of the first episode of the film, a number of red gloves were to be hidden about the neighborhood. At midnight on March 15 five gloves were hidden in various parts of a vacant lot near the theatre. The next morning the lot was being scoured by over a hundred boys and girls for the hidden gloves.

The community became greatly interested in the picture because the search for the gloves created so much gossip, and record crowds turned out to witness the initial showings of the serial.

Paul Brunet Entertains.

The home office staff of Pathe Exchange, Inc., were the guests of their vice-president and general manager, Paul Brunet, on Wednesday, March 19, at a dinner at the Beaux Arts. The departmental heads of Pathe have been celebrating the anniversary of their chief's appointment as general manager in various ways, and Mr. Brunet decided to do a little celebrating himself. Jack Kyle, head of the titling department, officiated as toastmaster, and succeeded in inducing the most retiring and modest members of the organizations to get up on their feet and talk.

Berst Returning to New York.

After several weeks' business visit to Los Angeles J. A. Berst, president of United Picture Theatres of America, Inc., is back in New York. In an interview given out before leaving for the East Mr. Berst predicted unparalleled prosperity for the motion picture industry and a revival of production in New York with the summer months. Mr. Berst is enthusiastic over the coming Dustin Farnum and Kitty Gordon productions to be released under the United banner. He stated that the scenario of "Platonic Love" carried a strictly original and daring plot.

TO BRING FAY'S THEATRE UP TO DATE

Prominent Rochester Playhouse Closes Memorial Day for Renovation—To Reopen September 1

ABOUT Memorial Day Fay's Theatre at Rochester will be closed and during the ensuing four months it will be practically rebuilt, opening again with feature pictures and vaudeville fillers about September 1.

An entirely new front will be built, with one of the most attractive foyers that architects and builders can produce. With the exception of the stage the entire interior of the house will be transformed, not merely with paint and decorations, but structurally. Three months will be allowed for the work.

Edward M. Fay, of Providence, owner of the house, planned last year to remodel the entire building, but the plan was given up at the time on account of the war. The idea at that time was to substitute a single balcony seating about 1,500 for the two balconies now in the theatre and to rebuild a great deal of the auditorium as well. The present boxes will be supplanted by more modern structures and the seating capacity of the ground floor will be changed materially and greatly enlarged. The new house will seat between 2,500 and 3,000 persons.

Changed Hands Many Times.

The site on which Fay's stands has seen many changes. The old National was formerly the home of stock melodrama made over from the old Odd Fellows's Temple after the latter had been partially destroyed by fire. It was opened in December, 1902.

After stock companies had passed their hey-dey the Shuberts took over the house and renamed it the Shubert. For four or five seasons it was the scene of some of the best plays of the times. Next the name was changed to The Club, playing burlesque for one season. Marcus Loew then took over the house, called it Loew's and played vaudeville for two years. For two seasons previous to Mr. Fay coming to town it was known as the Avon, playing vaudeville and pictures.

Picture Programs Went Big.

For many years the house was considered somewhat of a lemon. "Bill" McCallum, who had managed the place in the old days, was called to the rescue when the house was christened the Avon. He recognized the tendency of the age to pictures and made a whirlwind success of the house. Mr. McCallum was with Mr. Fay when he opened here, but later quit to assume the management and an interest in the Liberty and Gordon Square theatres in Cleveland. Fred J. Sarr, the present manager, succeeded Mr. McCallum, and under his management the house has prospered.

Teachers Indorse Paramount Films.

The publicity committee of the Massachusetts Teachers' Federation, whose fine work for the advancement of the cause of better pictures has frequently been noted, has just issued a bulletin containing a list of forty more or less recent films which the committee has approved as suitable and desirable pictures for children.

Including the William A. Brady production, "Little Women;" the Benjamin Chapin series, "The Son of Democracy," and the Burton Holmes Travelogues, thirty-nine of the forty films are Paramount or Artcraft productions. The single exception is Charles Chaplin in "Shoulder Arms."

Michigan Film Man Directs Camp Custer's Big Theatre

CAPTAIN J. O. BROOKS, better known as "Ollie," is a film man whose experience has stood Uncle Sam and his boys in good stead at Camp Custer, Michigan. Captain Brooks has been in the service for the past eight months as manager of the Liberty Theatre of Camp Custer. Besides spending much time in looking after the big building, booking the shows and various performances, he devotes a period of each day to horseback riding, which he finds excellent sport and diversion.

Captain Brooks has been salesman and manager of the Paramount exchange in Detroit; manager of the Metro office; manager of the Madison Film Exchange; and special road salesman for Fox. He expects to leave the service in May when he will resume his activities in the film business.

Reveler and "Blue Laws" Advocate Both Extremists

AT a time when everybody, or at least everybody in the reform ranks, seems to be jumping with both feet on everything approaching amusement, and when in Cincinnati and Ohio, specifically, there is an effort on foot to close the moving picture and other theatres on Sunday, it is refreshing to hear a minister take the sensible stand that there is no evil in harmless amusements.

"Legitimate amusement is not contrary to the teachings of Christ," declared the Rev. Henry Westermann, of California, in a public address in Cincinnati. "The advocate of the blue laws and the reveler are both extremists. St. John and St. Paul practiced and encouraged moderate recreation, and the reactionary and self-appointed leaders whom we meet today are certainly not superior in authority to the disciples of Christ."

Strand Prepares Elaborate Anniversary-Week Program

THE week of April 20 will mark the fifth anniversary of New York's Strand Theatre, and Manager Joseph L. Plunkett plans to celebrate the occasion with a show claimed by him to be the biggest ever offered in a motion picture theatre. He has already commenced work on the elaborate program, one feature of which will be a special screen presentation, now being filmed under his direction.

During the Strand's anniversary week the First National Exhibitors will hold their yearly convention in New York, and each exhibitor will witness the Strand show.

Referring to the anniversary program, Mr. Plunkett said, "I am going to use the appropriation usually expended on souvenirs and things of that sort on the stage during the week of April 20. I am sure the majority of our patrons do not care particularly for souvenir programs, and the Strand show will be all the more pretentious."

Kansas City Picture Men Worried by Censor Bill

LIVING so close to the State of Kansas and being under the vigilant watch of the Sunflower censors, Kansas City picture men are somewhat worried over the censor bill now before the Missouri Legislature. They have brought all the influence they could against the presentation of the bill and will do their best to convince the members of the Legislature that such a blow at one of Missouri's most popular industries is unnecessary. It cannot be said that the censorship of Kansas has been productive of a higher class of plays than those shown in Missouri.

Lucas Issues Breezy Organ.

Harry K. Lucas, general manager of the Lucas Theatre Supply Company, of Atlanta, which handles Simplex Projectors in the South, has just given the world an agreeable insight as to his versatility, he having published his first edition of the "Cosiki," an eight-page magazine, crammed full of breezy and timely trade notes, epigrams, illustrations and chatter concerning the supply business.

Mr. Lucas writes of the qualities of his wares in real, big-time style, which cannot fail to interest. A feature of the "Cosiki" is the Lucas editorial, which is a timely after-the-war story with a moral.

Harry I. Day Joines Benedicts.

Another member of the Famous Players-Lasky office force has deserted the ranks of bachelorhood. The new recruit is Harry I. Day, former editor of Paramount Progress, who is now engaged in sales promotion work for the Famous Players-Lasky foreign department. Mr. Day's bride was formerly Miss Marquita Harriss, of Memphis, Tenn.

PETTIGREW'S GIRL SEES THE PARADE

Ethel Clayton Watches the Welcome Home Given New York's Beloved 27th Division with Added Interest—Her Latest Paramount Uses the Stirring Incident

By Edward Weitzel

EVERYBODY agrees it was a marvelous welcome home. New York is so proud of her beloved Twenty-seventh Division and its deeds of valor that it turned out three millions strong to applaud the lines of marching men and cheer them all along the banner bedecked avenue from Washington Square to 110th street.

Pettigrew's girl was among the watchers. Pettigrew is only a private and his girl's name is Dolly Heath, but their romance is just such a one as might have happened to any bashful young soldier and a New York chorus girl whose early training and native goodness of heart had kept her untarnished and enabled her to recognize the true manhood of the shy but handsome private who waited for her at the stage door one night and explained he had fallen in love with her picture and just had to come and tell her how he felt.

Dolly was inclined to laugh at him at first; but, somehow, she didn't. Instead she accepted his invitation to an ice cream soda and forgot that she had promised to go to supper with a rich young man whose only trouble in life was fear of the draft. Private Pettigrew didn't know much about girls in general and chorus girls in particular. But he knew he wanted Polly and he pleaded his cause in the same way he fought the Huns—with no thought of surrender. And he won.

So that's why Dolly stood in the front line of watchers on Fifth avenue when the Twenty-seventh marched by, and gave her own particular soldier a private signal of love and pride.

Romance and Reality.

Sounds like a story in the movies, doesn't it? Well, it is one! But it's founded on a very interesting fact—a fact that was utilized before it happened. Ever since the Twenty-seventh went away to war everybody knew the sort of welcome the boys would receive when they got back and paraded up Fifth avenue. The author of "Pettigrew's Girl" knew it. When he wrote his story he just anticipated that parade and put it in as the appropriate finish to his romance.

And that is why Ethel Clayton, who played Dolly in the Paramount production of "Pettigrew's Girl," was among the most interested spectators of the real parade. It would have been so easy for the whole story to happen that it was hard for her to convince herself it hadn't happened when she looked down from a window in the Paramount office and saw the big climax to her last release in all its glorious reality.

Some Professional Secrets.

It is hardly necessary to remind anyone that timeliness of theme is of great value to a photoplay. "Pettigrew's Girl" is up to the minute.

Watching the parade from one of the front windows of the Moving Picture World office reminded the writer that Ethel Clayton would have some very interesting information as to how the New York scenes in "Pettigrew's Girl" that it is really the Knickerbocker that

An interview with the Paramount star took place the next day at the Majestic Hotel.

"Do you mind giving away professional secrets?" the creator of Dolly Heath was asked.

Pettigrew's Girl was non-committal. "That depends upon what sort of secrets they are," was her reply. "If you want to know if all the movie people who go to California and declare they never want to leave there are speaking the exact truth, I must decline to express an opinion. It has been a fine thing for me physically as well as professionally and I shall be glad to go back."

More Secrets Uncovered.

"Roscoe Arbuckle said the same thing when he was here a few weeks ago, except that he qualified it a trifle by mentioning the number of months in two years he had been confined to his bed. However, some of his most brilliant bits of comedy business came to him when too ill to move so the laugh was still on his side."

"Now you are giving away professional secrets!" exclaimed Ethel Clayton. "What is it you wanted to know?"

"How you managed the New York scenes. I understand that one incident shows a number of men in the windows of the Knickerbocker Hotel throwing down money to the members of the Lambs Club when they were making one of their parades for the Liberty Loan last year, and that you are shown helping to catch the money."

"Yes, it's all in the picture."

Miss Clayton Makes a Great Catch.

"But Truthful Publicity Smith, of Paramount, gives me his word of honor that it is really the Knickerbocker that is used."

"Mr. T. P. Smith is living up to his given names. The money throwing scenes were taken here and my scenes were all made on the Coast. In other words: The money was thrown to me in New York and I caught it in California."

"That's a great catch. But how did they manage to show all those people pouring out of the subway at the real Knickerbocker corner and then show you coming out of the same exit?"

Ethel Clayton smiled and shook her head. "You'll have to figure it out for yourself. I'm not going to give away any more professional secrets, but if you ever come out to Los Angeles I'll introduce you to that subway exit."

Ethel Clayton is on her way to Japan. Having come to New York to attend to important business, which included seeing the parade and purchasing several new frocks, she will sail for the land of the Mikado early next month for several weeks' vacation, accompanied by her mother. On her return she will resume her professional activities at the Paramount studios in California.

An Exciting Hunt.

Like many screen actresses she received her early dramatic training on the speaking stage. Stock company experience and engagements with traveling organizations gave her opportunities to play all kinds of parts, and to know the strain and mishaps of a first night performance.

"What is the drollest slip you ever encountered at an opening performance?" she was asked.

"The night the stage manager mislaid himself," was the answer.

"How did it happen?"

"It was in stock and none of us were any too sure of our lines. The stage manager was a nervous little man and was having his troubles trying to get the actors on to the stage at the right time. He was playing a small part himself and did not make his first entrance until the middle of the second act. The first act had been something dreadful and the second promised to be worse. Presently there was a dead pause. No one was on the stage and the voice of the angry stage manager could be heard all over the house demanding:

"'Jim! Where in thunderation is Jim?'

"As he rushed up stage in search of the missing actor one of the company stopped him. Seizing the excited man by the arm he remarked: 'Go on and stop the stage wait! You're playing Jim yourself.'"

Famous Boston Office to Dance.

Arrangements have been completed for the first annual dance and surprise party given by the employes of the Boston office of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, to be held at the New Strand ballroom on Friday evening, April 25, at 8 o'clock.

Many prominent persons have been invited, and an elaborate program has been arranged.

As it is the first big affair by any of the motion picture interests in Boston a large attendance is assured.

NEBRASKA CENSORSHIP BILL DEFEATED

By a Vote of 62 to 20 the Sturdevant Measure Is Killed—State Safe from Evil for Two Years

NEBRASKA is safe for at least two years from the fear of state censorship. Last week the lower house of the Nebraska legislature decisively killed an effort toward state censorship that was more vigorously pushed than any such effort ever before advanced in that state. Not until the last moment, however, was the outcome certain.

All morning, the day that the fight over the bill was staged, the showmen sat in a serious faced mob in the gallery. Straws pointed in favor of the bill, when the house adjourned for luncheon.

When the legislators returned they were surprised to see a pyramid of petitions piled high upon the house secretary's desk. Each legislator hurried to the stack. Yes, there was a petition from his home town, bearing the names of the people who had elected him to office. He went back to his desk a different man. The bill was too unpopular.

Even Worries About Women's Clothes.

Sturdevant, who introduced the bill, was feverishly fighting for it. He pictured the modern child; how it is being demoralized by the movies. Loudly he declared that what was good for Broadway was not necessarily good for Nebraska.

Mathewson followed Sturdevant. Yes, he said, it was awful. He said the women's dresses are getting shorter at the top and bottom every day, and there should be a board of censors appointed to stop this. He told of the terribly indecent pictures in some art galleries too adjacent to the state house for comfort. He even found fault with the marble statues, and said they ought to be ashamed of themselves. Sturdevant snorted.

Foster wanted to know why Shakespeare isn't censored.

Statts told what an awful failure the Kansas censorship farce has been.

Snow said he depended upon the mothers of Nebraska children to be intelligent enough to tell their children where to go and where not to go.

Only Criticism Is Lack of Shows.

Berka of Lincoln said the principal criticism he heard against Lincoln is that moving picture shows are closed on Sunday.

Hardin rallied to the rescue of the bill by telling of a picture he had seen not many days hence. The heroine, he said, was clothed only in a smile, and a far too faint smile at that.

Miller arose and fervently blessed the movies because they had done away with the ham actors.

Reed, disgusted with the way the bill was losing, made a last desperate effort to save it. He shouted that he hoped the bill would pass. That would close some moving picture houses, he said, and then, maybe, if fortune was kind, every moving picture house in the state would be closed. He became too fervent. His teeth became loose and slipped down. He gave up. The fight was lost.

By a vote of 62 to 20 the bill was indefinitely postponed.

Inactive Film Censor Satisfies Rochester

CENSORSHIP in Rochester, N. Y. approaches the ideal, for there, each manager acts as his own censor and refrains from showing anything objectionable. True, the city ordinances provide for censorship and the power of censor is vested in the commissioner of public safety, but even that official agrees that his department is not burdened with duties in connection with censoring. As evidence of cordial relations existing between movie men and official censor, Commissioner of Public Safety R. Andrew Hamilton addressed the Rochester Motion Picture Theatre Managers' League at its recent meeting:

"Although we have upwards of thirty theatres showing film, we seldom receive complaints regarding pictures shown or the manner in which you managers conduct your business," said Mr. Hamilton, "and I want to compliment you on this splendid condition.

"In fact, if few people should come to register a 'kick' regarding a performance that had been viewed by five or ten thousand people who were satisfied, I am generally inclined to believe that the fault lies in the viewpoint of the person making the complaint, rather than with the entertainment in question."

COMPLAIN OF MARYLAND CENSOR BOARD

Washington Exchange Managers Appeal to Governor to Investigate Lax Ways of State's Film Viewers

THE storm pending for many weeks in Washington over the attitude assumed towards the censoring of motion picture films by the Maryland State Censorship Board has broken. The exchange managers of Washington are up in arms over the laxity which seems to prevail in the office at Baltimore, that has resulted in the delegation of the legal duties of the members of the board to subordinates.

The managers have tried to avoid friction between the film companies and the members of the Board. They have at all times sought to co-operate with the latter, but have found on innumerable occasions, it is declared by individual members of the Washington Exchange Managers' Association, that they do not always get a square deal. By this they mean many things—that films are held up because of the absence of the reviewing authority, and by other like causes and by things that hamper the business of film men.

An Appeal to Governor Necessary.

At a special meeting held in the offices of the Famous Players-Lasky Company it was decided that the matter should be brought to the attention of Governor Harrington, and under a resolution adopted by the association the following letter was ordered prepared asking him to investigate the lax ways in which pictures were reviewed in Baltimore.

We quote the following from the letter:—"We understand also that certain pictures have been viewed in the past by a clerk employed by the Censorship Board, having no legal authority to do so, and that certain of these pictures have been condemned. . . . We seem to be handicapped to a considerable extent by the absence from the headquarters of the Board of Mrs. Harrison, who has not been in Baltimore for some time past, and of Mr. Harper. Consequently we cannot get prompt action on our films."

Must Pay Tax on Copyrighted Music.

Buffalo theatres in which copyrighted music is played for the entertainment of audiences were recently notified that unless they immediately pay a tax to the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers they will be prosecuted in the Federal court. It is said that several of the theatres have not paid the tax.

Court's Ire Stirred When Censors Halt "The Brand"

THAT the members of the Pennsylvania State Board of Censors had overstepped their authority in refusing to permit the exhibition in Pennsylvania of the Rex Beach-Goldwyn production, "The Brand," was the expression from the bench used by Judges Rogers and Wessel in the Common Pleas Court, Philadelphia, where general counsel for Goldwyn had caused an appeal to be taken from the findings of the Pennsylvania State Board of Censors.

Judge Rogers himself interrupted the proceedings to put into the record his own statement that during a view of the picture, given the two judges in the Board of Censors' projecting room just before the trial began, Mrs. Katherine M. Niver told him that no matter what changes were made, either in the picture or sub-titles, it would not be accepted.

"Theme" No Hit with Judge.

The only witnesses called in the proceedings against the board's refusal to pass the picture on an appeal were connected with the board, with one exception, and all admitted that the picture had been rejected not because it visualized anything calculated to corrupt the public morals, but because its "theme" was immoral.

"Theme! Theme!" Judge Rogers finally interrupted sharply. "Drop this talk about the 'theme' and tell us what there is immoral about the picture. I've just seen it, and I'm frank to say that, with two sub-titles eliminated, as the plaintiffs have voluntarily agreed to do, I see nothing immoral about it.

"Do you people know the law under which you view and pass upon these pictures? The trouble seems to be more your condition of mind than in the picture itself. The Legislature distinctly stated in the act creating the Board of Censors what its duties and its authority were to be. It didn't give the board any authority to pass upon or even assume what construction some persons might put upon something imagined, but not shown upon the screen at all."

Censorship Lid Off for New Victory Loan Film

A WAR film, "The Price of Peace," compiled from the official film archives of the Government, is to be released to boost the Victory Liberty Loan. It has been assembled and titled by Betty Shannon and Terry Ramsaye, with Joseph La Rose, of the Rialto-Rivoli, New York, at the cutting table.

The picture, it is understood, has not been designed for ordinary theatre exhibition, but for showing in connection with Victory Loan gatherings of various sorts. A total of 140 prints are in preparation.

A large portion of the picture is scenes of battle, including actions in St. Mihiel, Argonne and Belleau Wood.

"It is the first war picture issued in this country with the censorship lid clear off," Terry Ramsaye remarked. "Also everybody and their work—army, navy, marines, etc.—are impartially represented in the ratio of the pictorial value of the thing done."

The picture has been cut to tell a story—a true story of the war—calculated to make it clear why there is a Victory Loan and why it ought to be bought as a bargain of peace.

CENSOR FOUND NO CENSORSHIP NEEDED

S. J. Baker Tells Judiciary Committee of Missouri Legislature Why It Should Not Make New Film Law

S. J. BAKER, manager of the St. Louis branch of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, and former motion picture censor of Kansas City, Mo., appeared recently before the judiciary committee of the State Legislature at Jefferson City and "showed cause" why the bill providing for a state board of censors should not be passed. Baker was delegated by St. Louis exhibitors and exchange managers to address the committee. Exhibitors throughout the state are fearful that the drastic measure will be enacted. The fate of the bill will be known early in April.

Baker, in his address, said that his experience and his observations convinced him that the censorship of pictures in Missouri is unnecessary, and added:

Censor Found No Censorship Needed.

"While censor in Kansas City I looked at productions day in and day out for six months, often assisted by a committee of obliging ladies, who represented the Parent Teachers' Association, the Collegiate Alumnae and others. During that period I reviewed 3,500 reels of film. Out of those I totally rejected only two pictures, both of which had been rejected four years prior, and the owners of which had tried at least once a year during those four years to exploit them, but without success.

"It did not need censorship to keep those pictures out of Kansas City, or any place else in Missouri, for the exhibitors refused to run them, and would not have done so even with the censor's approval.

"Some one remarked that the motion picture industry is growing and that more and more films are made every year. The motion picture industry is growing, but fewer productions are being made each year. The producers are of ability, and the great majority of the companies are meritorius concerns, and are making pictures that are wholesome, clean and totally fit for the public to see.

Can't Afford Unclean Pictures.

"It is very true that some objectionable pictures are offered to exchangemen and, in some instances, to the exhibitors; but there are mighty few such pictures shown. The motion picture theatre man, with his investment, cannot afford to show unclean pictures; and the producers of an objectionable film seldom make a second one. They go broke trying to market the first.

"I venture to say that offhand not one of you gentlemen can tell me one totally unfit picture that has been produced in the last year."

And not one of them could!

Famous Players to Build Long Island City Studio

THE Famous Players-Lasky Corporation will shortly break ground in Long Island City for the erection of a big studio and laboratory, it was announced recently by Adolph Zukor, president of that organization. It is the ambition of those in charge of the work to make this plant the most complete and up-to-date institution of its kind in the world.

The studio block is bounded by Graham and Pierce avenues, on the north and south, 600 feet, and by Seventh and Sixth avenues, on the east and west, 200 feet. This entire block will house the actual producing activities, and will include one gigantic glass-covered stage and one large open-air stage. Offices of the executives, dressing rooms, property rooms and other parts of the studio will be equipped and arranged in such a manner as to expedite the most efficient handling of high-class photoplay production with the minimum amount of lost motion.

Across the street, on Pierce avenue and Sixth, the laboratory will be erected. The plans for this plant were laid out under the direct supervision of Frank Meyer, who has had many years of experience in the handling of laboratories and who has made special trips to other cities where large plants are located in order to study every modern phase of this work.

At the Famous Players-Lasky home office on Fifth avenue Mr. Zukor stated that the building will be started in the very near future, and that they would begin "shooting" before the end of the summer.

Iowa Exhibitor Convinces Censors They Are Wrong

THE interference of a local board of censors means nothing in the life of W. A. Mattack, manager of the Princess Theatre of Ames, Ia. Mr. Mattack thinks his judgment concerning the moral danger that lies in a picture is just as good as that of any collection of censors.

When Manager Mattack booked "Salome" recently he began to advertise the fact. Several well-meaning residents of Ames, knowing Salome only by the reputation she had made as the heroine of an opera and a stage play, at once petitioned the board of censors to forbid the film in Ames. The board, harkening to the protests of the timid citizens, adopted a resolution recommending that the mayor and the council forbid the showing of the film.

Mr. Mattack, knowing there was nothing wrong with the picture, having previously seen it, went ahead with his preparations; and every day for five days before the showing he carried a two-column advertisement announcing that "Salome" was to be shown at the Princess.

He invited the censor board to look at the picture. This the board did. The result was just what Mattack had expected—complete vindication of "Salome."

Mr. Mattack then went to it strong. He ran half-page advertisements of a type Ames never had seen before. He had heralds distributed all over town; he plastered every vacant space with paper; he had cut-outs made for his lobby, and he arranged with the management of the street car company to have special cars run to the suburbs after the last show at night.

Western Simplex Distributors Expand.

Dutton and Douglass, executives of the Exhibitors' Supply Company, distributors for Simplex in Illinois, Indiana and Wisconsin, were in New York last week on a business trip and included in their itinerary a tour of inspection of the Simplex factory.

They report that the sales of Simplex projectors is so heavy since the let-up of hostilities and the clearing up of the "flu" epidemic that they are forced to move to larger quarters for their main office in Chicago, and are soon to locate in the Famous-Players-Lasky building at 845 South Wabash avenue.

The entire second floor has been taken and the general offices, sales rooms and sales offices will be located here, using the present headquarters for a supply base.

Music Men Open Ohio Offices.

Cleveland, Ohio, March 27.

The Association of Composers, Authors and Publishers has opened Northern Ohio headquarters here and notified all theatres they must pay a license to play music written by members of its organization. Exhibitors say they will not use the music. MALANEY.

Police Find Stolen Film.

The Sterling Film Company, Cleveland, has recovered a chapter of the Gaumont serial, "The Hand of Vengeance," which was stolen recently from the Angela Theatre, that city. It was found by the police on the Nickel Plate railroad tracks.

A. E. SMITH PASSES THROUGH CHICAGO

President of Vitagraph Stops Over for Conference on Way to Coast to Supervise Making of "The Wolf"

ALBERT E. SMITH, president of Vitagraph, accompanied by Mrs. Smith and family, arrived in Chicago March 17. The party was accompanied from New York by John M. Quinn, general manager, and E. Auger, assistant general manager. T. W. Chatburn, assistant general manager, arrived from St. Louis the same day to participate in a conference which was held in Vitagraph s Chicago office at 207 South Wabash avenue. E. A. Tarbell, manager, and T. E. Delaney, assistant manager of the Chicago office, and six salesmen in the city and tributary territory were also present. President Smith and General Manager Quinn shared the duties of presiding officer.

President Smith was seen Monday afternoon, and on being reminded that his visits to Chicago had been very infrequent replied that his first had been made in 1905 to open Vitagraph's Chicago office in the Schiller building, when John B. Rock was appointed as the first Chicago manager. His second visit was made when he attended a convention of the old Film Service Association, about 1907 or 1908

Was Taken for State Governor.

The writer found Mr. Smith a hard subject to deal with when he sought news concerning Vitagraph's activities, present and future.

"We are making pictures, and pictures, and better pictures," he replied facetiously, and then he told a funny story about a trip he made through Long Island a couple of months ago, when Alfred E. Smith, was, as he now is, Governor of New York.

On the trip he was accompanied by Cyrus W. Brady, well known lecturer, photoplay writer and divine. Dr. Brady, in the presence of people they met, as was his custom and also that of many engaged at the Vitagraph studios, always addressed Mr. Smith as "Governor," and it was not for some time that the Vitagraph official could understand why he was received everywhere with such obsequious attention and pronounced deference. Inquiries as to the initials of the visitor revealed that they were "A. E." and that settled the matter for the inquisitive ones.

After considerable embarrassment Mr. Smith explained to those who wished to do him honor that he was not the Governor of New York, but only the "Governor" of Vitagraph, and that by courtesy.

Now this was a clever ruse to escape an interview, but Mr. Smith became interesting and more human when he was reminded that exhibitors throughout the country would be glad to hear from him specifically on the matter of Vitagraph's productions, both at present and in the near future.

One Big Picture Every Month.

"We are going to complete one big, specially produced and well advertised feature every month," said Mr. Smith. "'The Lion and the Mouse,' in six reels, with Alice Joyce in the lead, has just been finished, and we are now working on 'The Third Degree,' in seven reels, with the same star. After that a Rex Beach picture, with Alice Joyce, will be produced." The title of this production was not disclosed.

"Next will be 'The Sporting Duchess,' adapted from the Drury Lane melodrama, in which Rose Coghlan starred in this country. For this there will be a regular, old-fashioned Vitagraph cast. In addition to Alice Joyce, who plays the lead, there will be Anders Randolph, Rogers Lytton, Mrs. De Wolfe Hopper, Gladden James and others, all familiar names in Vitagraph productions.

"Earle Williams is now working on a special story by Mrs. Wilson Woodrow, which will be of six-reel length. When this is finished Mr. Williams will begin work on 'The Wolf,' adapted from the play by Eugene Walters. This will be in seven reels."

To Enlarge Los Angeles Studio.

Mr. Smith left for Vitagraph's Los Angeles studio Tuesday evening, March 18, accompanied by his wife and children. There he will remain for two months, and will plan the enlargement of that studio. This is necessary, as Mr. Smith expects to make there the larger number of the productions which have Western atmosphere and surroundings.

Mr. Smith stated that he was going out West particularly to superintend the production of "The Wolf." He will attend personally to the selection of an able cast and the locations for the outdoor scenes. The story of "The Wolf" has been laid in the woods of the Northwest by Eugene Walters, and Mr. Smith will reproduce the local as closely as possible.

While in Los Angeles a convention of Vitagrphy's Western managers will be held, at which Mr. Smith will preside.

Finds Business Better Than Fair.

I learned from Mr. Chatburn, assistant general manager, that he recently completed a tour of the entire West, covering all Vitagraph branch offices west of the Mississippi River. He found business conditions better than fair and assured me that the future of Vitagraph never looked better. The "flu" in the West has disappeared.

General Manager Quinn announced that the first of Vitagraph's Larry Semon comedies, in two reels each, will be released Monday, April 14, and that one of these comedies will be released every month. He also informed me that Vitagraph's Big V. special comedies will be continued and that one will be released every other week, or 26 yearly.

Assistant General Manager Auger, during a brief conversation, assured me that plans have been laid and the necessary means provided to make Vitagraph productions among the foremost in the country.

Captain Harry E. Rice.

Captain Harry E. Rice Succeeds Irving Mack

HARRY E. RICE, until recently a captain in the machine gun training center in the officers' training camp a Camp Hancock, Augusta, Ga., has been appointed publicity manager in Universal's Chicago office to succeed Irving Mack. Captain Rice was recommended for promotion before the armistice was signed and he expects to receive his commission as a major in the near future.

Captain Rice has had extensive training as a newspaper man. He started in newspaper work on the Hearst papers in Chicago, in 1908, and spent three and a half years in Europe engaged in advertising and publicity for Hearst's Chicago publications.

From 1910-11 he was assistant publicity director of the Magic City, the largest amusement park in Paris, which was built by his father, H. E. Rice.

His acquaintance with the moving picture business dates from 1903, when he was moving picture operator at the old

Globe Theatre in St. Louis, owned by his father. From 1912-14 he owned in Chicago the North Shore, Rex, Lyric and Little Bijou picture theatres. At other times he was assistant manager of the Virginia, Kedzie Ave. and Hamlin theatres.

In 1917, just before joining the army, Captain Rice was connected with the Arizona Film Company, of which he was vice-president and secretary.

Captain Rice is a strapping young man about thirty years old, and he has taken hold of his new position with a snap and vim that promise big things for Universal's product in Chicago.

Harry Carey Covers Chicago.

Harry Carey, who stars in the Western features of Universal, spent a week in the city ending March 23. During that time he was busy visiting theatres where he is well known to patrons of the screen. He appeared at all the theatres on the Ascher Bros. and Lubliner & Trinz circuits, the Woodlawn, Casino and other well known houses.

E. S. Flynn Pays Short Visit to the Windy City

E. S. FLYNN, special representative of Film Clearing House, Inc., came into Chicago Wednesday, March 19, from Kansas City, Mo., and left the same night for Cleveland.

When seen, Mr. Flynn reported business very fair in the Missouri district and in other territory tributary to Kansas City. "Wanted for Murder" is going over big, he said, and its fine advertising possibilities, as furnished by the exchanges to exhibitors, are being duly utilized by the latter.

Among these clever aids to publicity are grocery paper bags, which are furnished free to the grocer nearest to the theatre, on each of which is printed the title of the feature and nothing more. Then there is a sniper 9 by 42 inches which also bears the title, with not a word about the picture. This is followed by a small dodger which gives the description of the man wanted for murder, and it is followed by a larger one which is carefully distributed throughout the neighborhood of the theatre.

By this time the neighborhood is quite excited over the mystery, which is still further heightened by the pinning of a special deputy's badge on people indiscriminately, appointing each a special deputy for the arrest of the criminal. The final aids in this well planned publicity campaign, are a newspaper advertisement, with the title of the feature only and still omitting the name of the theatre, and a form of summons citing the man or woman who receives it to appear at the trial of the man "Wanted for Murder" at the theatre where it will be shown, on the day mentioned.

The Johnsons Are Off Again to the Fabled South Seas

MR. AND MRS. MARTIN JOHNSON arrived in Chicago Tuesday, March 25, where they made a short stay. A luncheon was given in their honor at the Hamilton Club that afternoon, and many notables were present. The moving pictures taken by Martin Johnson on his first trip to the South Sea Islands, and which have made a wonderful success thus far wherever shown in America, were screened and created unbounded enthusiasm among the favored people present.

This stop ended the first leg of the second journey of Mr. and Mrs. Martin Johnson to the South Sea Islands, where they expect to spend the next three years in securing their second picture in those romantic and primitive surroundings.

Mr. Johnson appeared at the Randolph Theatre, where his first pictures are being shown for an indefinite and exclusive run, and Mrs. Johnson was also present and contributed to the novelty of the occasion by delivering a characteristic and most interesting address, in which she described some of the nerve-testing experiences undergone at the hands of Chief Nagapate, head of the Big Numbers tribesmen.

Before taking passage at San Francisco, Mr. and Mrs. Johnson will visit Los Angeles and will afterward be the guests of Mrs. Jack London in the city by the Golden Gate.

Mr. Johnson's extensive equipment of cameras, projecting machines, films, and other requisite material connected with the development of negatives was shipped to Sydney, Australia, some time ago, and at that city a schooner has been chartered to take them on their long trip through the sunny waters and islands of the South Seas.

Senate Passes Buck Bill by a Vote of 32 to 10

STATE SENATOR BUCK'S machine in the Senate at Springfield passed the Buck state-wide censorship bill Tuesday morning, March 18, by a vote of 32 to 10. The Senate is strongly Republican, and it is predicted that the bill will be defeated in the House, which is strongly Democratic.

The bill, as passed by the Senate, which excludes films run by religious associations, fraternal societies, libraries, museums, public or private institutions of learning, stereopticon views or slides, advertising announcements or slides and news bulletin slides, contains a provision which makes void all city ordinances affecting censorship of films after October 1.

Strong protest against the action of the Senate has been made by Chicago officials and members of the Chicago Censorship Commission. Chairman Hurley of the commission charges that the Senate did not act in good faith, as when representatives of the commission appeared before their committee they were promised that Chicago would be given the right to re-censor films approved by the State Board.

The matter was brought before the meeting of the commission, Friday afternoon, March 21, and action was taken for the purpose of defeating the bill in the House.

State Exhibitors Against Buck Bill.

Since last writing the Illinois Exhibitors' Alliance held two meetings, on March 18 and 21. At both plans were fully discussed for securing members in Chicago and throughout the state for the organization.

At the Friday meeting, March 21, a strong stand was taken against state censorship in Illinois. Special attention was called to the unlimited power which the passage of the Buck bill at Springfield would place in the hands of one man, namely, the head of the Department of Registration and Education. The next meeting will be held Monday, March 24.

M. H. Livingston Joins the Staff of Universal

M. H. LIVINGSTON, formerly owner of the Livingston Film Company and widely known as the inventor of the Nu-Movie-Lite, has been appointed special traveling representative of the Middle West for Universal by I. L. Lesserman, general sales manager. Mr. Livingston has disposed of his interests and patents in the concerns already mentioned and will devote his entire time and attention to his new duties.

Just eight years ago Mr. Livingston was the first road salesman for the old Laemmle Film Company's features, when the Chicago office was at Lake and Fifth avenue. "The Crusaders, or Jerusalem Delivered," the first feature film released by Carl Laemmle, was booked, shown and lectured throughout Illinois by Mr. Livingston.

Mr. Livingston celebrated his thirtieth birthday on St. Patrick's day last. This fact gives him a strong claim to the favor of Ireland's patron saint, but he blushingly refuses the honor of being called an Irishman, notwithstanding the old tale that a remnant of the "lost ten tribes" settled on the "owld sod" some time in the misty haze of long ago.

An Old-Time Exhibitor Now a Crack Salesman

I HAD an interesting conversation with Julius A. Alcock the other day. He is one of the old-time exhibitors and owned the Edna, 4138 West North avenue, years ago.

Mr. Alcock is one of the six exhibitors who founded the Chicago branch of the M. P. E. L. of A., the others being Frank J. Flaherty, F. O. Nielson, Walter Altman, Charles M. Anderson and Ed Hassett. The meeting was held in the office of Joe Hopp's Standard Film Exchange on West Washington street, during the fall of 1909.

Mr. Alcock terminated his lease of the Edna about five years ago and became city salesman for Metro, filling the position for two years. He is now northside salesman in Chicago for Select, a position which he has held since Select was founded in 1917. His territory covers the city from Madison street north to Evanston and from Lake Michigan to the Desplaines river.

He stated that present conditions are excellent among exhibitors in his section and that ideal weather has boomed business.

Musicians and Other Men Wanted for Navy Recruits

THE Navy Recruiting Station, Transportation Building, Chicago, is now accepting men for practically every branch of the service. Men between the ages of 18 and 30 are wanted to enlist as musicians. Men entering this branch of the service must be able to read music and play easy grade on band instruments, either string or brass. Upon enlistment in this branch men are sent to a musician's school, where they are given a valuable and thorough training in music.

Men are also particularly wanted to enlist as hospital apprentices.

Opportunities are offered to men who have some machine shop experience to attend the Navy Machinists' School at Charleston, S. C. Men who do not live in a city where there is a recruiting station, and who are desirous of making application for enlistment, will be furnished free transportation to the recruiting station nearest their homes. Apply to your postmaster for further particulars.

Moving Pictures Help Americanization Work

AMERICANS in the making at the Minneapolis Jackson School night classes went out to see America last week. They saw it all, from East river to the Columbia river, through moving pictures shown for them by the Seven Corners branch of the public library.

Tracey B. Peycke, assistant in the organization of Americanization classes in the public schools, explained the pictures as they came. But there wasn't much explanation needed. Potato raising pictures, wheat harvesting pictures and salmon fishing pictures tell their own story to men and women who have fished and raised potatoes and bound wheat in countries over the seas.

Moving pictures will in the future be a regular feature of the Americanization classes. These classes will be continued during the regular Easter vacation of the school beginning March 21 and will go on into the summer months as long as attendance warrants it.

Free Pictures Talked of for Indianapolis Parks

IF the proposal of free shows in parks made recently by Mayor Charles W. Jewett, of Indianapolis, to members of the Board of Park Commissioners is carried out, the attendance at some of the motion picture theatres in that city may be materially decreased during the coming summer months.

At a recent meeting of the board Mayor Jewett asked James H. Lowry, executive officer of the board, what he thought of free picture shows in the parks through the summer. Mr. Lowry replied that there should be motion pictures and dancing in all the city parks, and presented the matter to the board for its consideration.

If the proposal is accepted the plan will work a hardship on many of the exhibitors—especially those who operate theatres in the neighborhood districts. In the summer time business at the picture theatres is not any too good at its best, and with free shows in over a dozen parks it is easy to see what will happen. The downtown theatres probably would not be seriously effected.

In discussing the plan Mr. Lowry said he believed all the recreational forces in the city should be co-ordinated so that constructive work could be accomplished. In this connection he mentioned censorship of motion picture shows by the recreation department. It was then agreed that if it was decided to establish a form of censorship, the recreational department would have charge of it.

FINDS DEMAND FOR SERIALS INCREASING

Universal Official Back from Trip Reports That the Continued Story Is Gaining in Popularity

THREE months of studying conditions in various parts of the country visiting with hundreds of exhibitors, exchangemen, editors and critics has convinced Joe Brandt, head of Universal's serial department, that the serial market is better today than at any time during the past four years.

Mr. Brandt returned to New York Monday, March 24, from Universal City, after supervising the starting of "The Red Glove," featuring Marie Walcamp, and "The Midnight Man," which will introduce James J. Corbett to the screen.

In practically every territory visited, Mr. Brandt states, he found serial conditions improving and a demand for the continued films increasing steadily as the warmer months drew near. In the West and Middle West exchanges have recorded a large number of bookings on "The Lure of the Circus" and "The Red Glove," and exchangemen are reported already to have received numerous requests for bookings on the Corbett serial, which is not scheduled for release until May.

While on his tour Mr. Brandt booked "The Red Glove" into over a score of leading theatres in the West and Middle West, in which no serial had ever previously been shown. The Strand Theatre, Denver and the Orpheum at Seattle are among the theatres that have inaugurated new policies with showings of "The Red Glove." Last week "The Red Glove" was booked into Ray's Garden at Los Angeles, and the People's Theatre at Butte, Mont., two theatres that recently decided against running serials.

Mr. Brandt spent several days in San Francisco, Portland, Seattle, Spokane, Salt Lake City, Butte, Denver, Kansas City, Omaha, Des Moines, Chicago, Detroit, Cleveland, Pittsburgh and Philadelphia before returning to New York. While in Chicago he attended the initial showings of "The Red Glove" at neighborhood theatres and the reports that at the Woodlawn, West End, Covent Garden, Paramount, Oakley and other large neighborhood houses "The Red Glove" attracted such large crowds that it was necessary to turn away several hundred people, the first nights of the showings.

The newspaper co-operation which Universal has arranged for exhibitors showing "The Red Glove" has brought considerable commendation from theatremen, according to Mr. Brandt.

Mr. Brandt will remain in New York for several weeks and will return to Universal City to supervise the starting of work on the new Polo serial.

Vidor to Produce Another Feature.

King W. Vidor, producer of "The Turn in the Road" for the Brentwood Film Corporation, has begun production on another story for the same corporation. The story, which was written by Vidor himself, gives a message of practical and wide application in the power of a brave heart to hold its own sunshine regardless of black clouds of despair and apparently insuperable obstacles to overcome. The same careful consideration as regards cast and direction as was given to "The Turn in the Road," will be given the new play, which Mr. Vidor calls "Better Times."

Picturizing Women War Workers.

Frances Marion, scenarioist, who has been in France making a film of "American Women in the War," arrived in Los Angeles last week for a short visit, and also to film the activities of the Los Angeles women war workers. Miss Marion is making short strips of film in each large city of the United States showing women leaders at the head of war organizations. New Art Film Produces "Mystery."

The new six-reel picture that has just been completed by the New Art Film Company at the former Balboa studio in Long Beach, Cal., has been taken to New York by Mabel Condon and will be given a private showing to the trade immediately upon the arrival in New York of George D. Watters, general manager of the New Art Film Company.

The picture was produced under the direction of Frederick Sullivan, and Jack Mulhall, borrowed from the Lasky company, played the leading male role, with Helene Chadwick opposite. In the cast are Pauline Curley, Gordon Griffith, Leo Pierson, Irene Aldwyn, Charles Spere, Edward Jobson and Anne Schaefer.

The producers are not divulging the nature of the story, but the plan to spring a surprise on the audience that first sees the picture.

Miss Condon has added the marketing of pictures to her many enterprises, such as handling the engagements of players, the sale of screen plays and the placing of publicity.

Chaplin Studios Damaged By Wind Storm.

A wind storm struck Hollywod on March 17, causing much damage to the Charles Chaplin studio, and to the lemon and orange groves in the vicinity. A scene had just been finished in the big glass stage of the studio, and all the players, including Chaplin himself, had just gone to their dressing rooms when the wind struck the building. Glass and woodwork began to crash down inside the stage, breaking and damaging the set that had just been in use, and sending the workmen flying in all directions. No one was seriously injured, but the damage to the glass stage and sets on the lot is estimated at between $6,000 and $7,000. The final scenes for "Sunnyside," Chaplin's new comedy for the First National Exhibitors, has just been shot in the studio when the storm broke.

Twenty-four Silk Shirts Gone.

Charlie Murray, film comedian, with Mrs. Murray, returned from a trip to the beaches last Saturday night to find that the front door of their home on Hoover street had been broken open and that thieves had carried off, in two very valuable walrus skin bags, some twenty-four silk shirts, silk socks, silk underwear, silk pajamas, and practically every other article of wearing apparel of silk that the Murrays owned, besides a $180 fur belonging to Mrs. Murray. Altogether, the articles stolen were valued at about $1,000.

Harry Lyons Dead.

Harry Lyons, brother of Eddie Lyons of the comedy team of Lyons and Moran at Universal City, died at his home in Hollywood on March 13, of heart failure, after an illness of two weeks. Lyons has appeared in support of his brother in Universal comedies during the past four years. Besides his brother, Lyons leaves his wife, Gladys, and his mother, who lives in the middle west. Interment took place at Calvary Cemetery in Los Angeles, and the pall bearers, all actors with whom Lyons has worked, were Lee Moran, Eugene De Rue, Al Cawood, Arthur Smith, Hal Matthews and Charles Christie.

Constance Crawley Dead.

Constance Crawley, noted stage actress, died at her home in Los Angeles, of heart failure, on March 17. Miss Crawley was thirty-nine years old, and had been suffering from various ailments for some time. The death of her young daughter, Vera, last April, caused her intense grief and suffering, from which her friends say she had never fully recovered. The actress was a beloved member of the stage and film artists' colony of the West Coast. She was at one time associated with the American Film Company, playing leading roles in the Arthur Maude company. Her last stage engagement was in vaudeville on the Orpheum circuit.

Film War Association Asks Dissolution.

Because the close of the war has ended the usefulness of the Motion Picture War Service Association, that organization has petitioned the Superior Court of Los Angeles to dissolve the corporation, and Judge Weller has set April 14 as the date for hearing the case. R. Cecil Smith, continuity writer at the Ince studio, has just recovered from an attack of pneumonia.

Francis Ford has returned to Los Angeles after a three weeks' trip to southern and eastern cities on business connected with his recent serial, "The Silent Mystery." Ford made a number of personal appearances during his trip.

Madge Kennedy will soon begin production on "Fanny and the Servant Problem," a play by Jerome K. Jerome, for which Samuel Goldwyn has just secured the film rights.

Thompson Buchanan, author of "A Woman's Way" and other plays, will join the Goldwyn scenario staff about April 15.

William C. Dowlan has been engaged to direct Peggy Hyland in her next picture for the Fox program.

Ellen Cassity Hurt in Making Scene.

Insistence on realism by Director Richard Stanton, who is producing "Checkers," the racing play, for William Fox, resulted in a painful injury to the right eye of Ellen Cassity, who plays one of the leading roles in the production.

The accident occurred during the filming of the ballroom scene, in which Herbert Kendall gives a party to Alva, his fiancee. Miss Acker entered the ballroom and raised her glass in a toast to Elliott. With a quick sweep of his arm, Elliott dashed the goblet from her hand, breaking it into fragments. One of the pieces of glass struck Miss Cassity in the eye.

Film Messengers Violate Rules.

Complaints have been received by the Transportation Committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry from several of the railroads that messengers in the employ of exhibitors have been making a practice of carrying motion picture film into the coaches of passenger trains.

This is in direct opposition to the rules of the railroad companies and the Interstate Commerce Commission, which state that film must be checked in the baggage car.

Fineman Goes on Exchange Tour.

B. P. Fineman, manager of the accessory sales promotion department of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, left New York last week on a tour of all the Famous Players-Lasky exchanges. Mr. Fineman's immediate purpose is to consult with managers on the handling of accessories with the idea of enhancing the service of this material. He will also explain in detail the new system of advertising and publicity whereby complete co-operation of exhibitors and the exchanges will be effected.

GRIFFITH REFLECTS FIGHTING SPIRIT

In "The Girl Who Stayed at Home" the Director Has Given the Screen a War Picture Filled With Romance and the Intrepid Humor of the American Soldier

By Edward Weitzel

EASILY the best Griffith picture since "Hearts of the World," the eminent director's latest contribution to the Artcraft program, "The Girl Who Stayed at Home," will lose nothing of its timeliness by coming after the close of the war. Filled with romance and the intrepid humor of the American soldier, it reflects the spirit of the fighters who crossed the ocean and of their womankind who stayed at home. To France and her soldiers the conflict was of such a desperate nature that it left no room for any feeling but grim determination. Italy and her troops shared the same emotion.

The "Tommies" of Great Britain showed their scorn of danger and contempt for hardship with characteristic humor, and lost no opportunity to belittle their task and turn the most desperate situation into a laugh. It was all in the day's work, and they fought, side by side, with their allies in the spirit of the Continental soldier who had a minister next to him in one of the battles with the Red Coats. The two men were brothers and were firing from behind a log. Both were expert marksmen and all their shots told. Every time the religious brother hit one of the enemy between the eyes he would remark piously: "God have mercy on his soul!"

And every time the other sharpshooter bowled over his man, he would give a satisfied chuckle and drawl "There's another one gone to hell."

Intrepid Humor a Birthright.

The American boys who fought in the Argonne Forest and at the Hindenburg Line were direct descendants of the brother who chuckled. Intrepid humor was their birthright, the courage that laughs and jokes in the face of danger their common heritage. And if the time came when, through physical weakness they were no longer able to make a jest of death, returning strength found them ready to respond to the sally that meant defiance to the enemy and to every engine of destruction he might devise.

Eager, smiling confidence was written on the faces of the army of three million men that answered the call of the Allies. News reel after news reel, from the departure of the first troopship to the last, attested the truth of this proud boast. It thrilled the hearts of all that saw it—the men and women of the United States who did their share of the work at home and the anxious watchers of England, of France and of Italy whose despairing souls gained strength and courage in the buoyant bearing and sturdy step of the lads who carried the stars and stripes.

It is this inspiring phase of character in the heroes that are daily returning from the scene of conflict and of those who are sleeping their last sleep in the tender care of grateful France that is the theme of "The Girl Who Stayed at Home." Scenes are shown of battle, destruction and death; of heroic deeds and the horrors of war. But only in sufficient number to furnish a background for the purpose of the story. Smiles and not tears are the spectator's portion, although he will witness at least one episode of compelling dramatic power which reveals David W. Griffith at his finest expression of screen art.

The Romance of Two Brothers.

There are two girls whose lives are closely connected with the central interest of the story and who wait at home while the boys they love are at the front. Ralph Gray and his brother are sons of a wealthy shipbuilder. Ralph volunteers at the first call for soldiers. The girl he loves is a French maiden who is betrothed to one of her own countrymen. He is wounded in battle and dies in her father's chateau, and the American finally wins her.

Jim, the younger of the two brothers, tries to evade service. He is engaged to a little cabaret dancer, and life has always been a pleasant joke to him. His father treats him with a mixture of contempt and indulgence and tries to have him put in the exempt class when an official document informs Jim he is in class A.

Making a Man of Jim.

The scenes where the elder Gray carries the matter up to the highest authority only to be told that his efforts are useless are among the most satisfying in the picture. When Jim informs the chairman of one of the higher boards that he wants to fight but his father will not let him, the callow youth receives the grim reply:

"Don't worry, young man: Uncle Sam wants you and you'll fight, all right."

Training camp methods have their usual effect and when Jim starts for the transport he is a different chap physically and mentally. The meeting in the trenches between the two brothers is a clever touch. Jim spies Ralph first. Stepping quietly up to him, he takes out a cigarette and asks for a match. His brother turns to comply with the request and the next instant the two boys have their arms around each other.

The heedless youngster with too much money to spend has been licked into a man by a drill sergeant several times before on the screen—but not in the Griffith way. Also, Robert Harron plays Jim! He makes the boy a joy in all his moods, and creates the larger part of the abundant laughter in the picture. Whatever the original intention of the scenario writer, Jim Gray is the most entertaining character in "The Girl Who Stayed at Home," thanks to the easy skill of young Mr. Harron. As the elder brother, Richard

Barthelmess, is natural and quietly efficient.

A Valuable New-Comer.

The big tragic scene takes place when the Germans capture the chateau of Monsieur Le France while he and his granddaughter are hiding in the cellar of the dwelling. A wounded German officer has staggered into their retreat and fallen to the floor. His faint moan for water is answered by the French girl. The moment to repay her kindness comes when one of the dying man's countrymen discovers Mademoiselle Blossom and attempts to drag her away. Finding that appeals to his comrade's manhood are useless the wounded soldier draws his revolver with his last ounce of strength and shoots the ravisher dead. He then sinks back lifeless.

The scene is splendidly played by Carol Dempster, Adolphe Lestina and David Bitler.

Carol Dempster is a new-comer to the screen. She has beauty and ability, and her face is capable of expressing deep tragedy. Her performance of the compassionate French girl places her among the really valuable young leading women of the silent stage. Clarine Seymour as the cabaret dancer is sufficiently lifelike to have been lured away from a lobster palace in Times Square. Director Griffith has grown overpartial to heroines who jig in place of walking, but Cutie Beautiful comes naturally by her dancing feet.

The Impudence of Bobby's Jim.

Good comedy subtitles help to amuse the spectator, and the comedy ending will send him away chuckling. The production is worthy its director, but the story does not warrant seven reels. It is still excellent entertainment as it stands, however, and the innocent impudence of Bobby Harron's Jim never grows stale.

HALL A HUB RADIATING CORPORATIONS

Chart Needed to Discover Particular Company in Office Suite—Rothapfel Showing Early in May

FRANK G. HALL, one of the youngest of the successful men of the film business, and by the same token one of the most successful of the young men in the same film trade, is a little island of ideas completely surrounded by corporations. A visit to his offices for the purposes of obtaining an interview is akin to locating a spot on a coast you've lost the chart of overside. His private office is the hub. From it radiates the Film Clearing House, the Independent Sales Corporation, the Film Finance Corporation, and the Rothapfel Picture Corporation.

It was in reference to the Rothapfel Unit Program that a representative of the Moving Picture World called upon Mr. Hall, but finding him in a corporation mood, decided to obtain an exposition of his various businesses for the trade.

Concerning the Rothapfel Picture Corporation, which he formed with Samuel L. Rothapfel at its head, Mr. Hall was most enthusiastic.

First Rothapfel Showing in May.

"I believe our friend Sam would be able to tell it to you in a more artistic manner," he said. "If you could see him at the studio with his sleeves rolled up and his hair standing on end, directing his first unit program, it would be a treat."

"We are going to present the first Rothapfel Unit Program in New York at a trade showing about May 10 at the Rialto or the Rivoli. We are going to release six unit programs a year, giving to the exhibitors a most unique and high class entertainment."

Clearing House for Independents.

Mr. Hall told of his selling end of the motion picture industry, and went on to explain the functions of each of his various organizations.

"The Film Clearing House," he said, "was organized for the sole purpose of providing independent producers or groups of producers an agency through which they could have films shipped and inspected, their rentals collected and turned over to them weekly. Within a month after its founding in October, 1918, we had eighteen units in operation, having purchased the Kleine exchanges.

"I soon discovered that while this was the first step in the right direction, I had to furnish a sales organization to get the product. Hence the formation of the Independent Sales Corporation. I figured that, doing business with a number of producers, I wanted a sales force so that if one man had a star series we could contract with him to sell his pictures on an independent basis."

10-20-30 a Special Hall Idea.

In response to a question concerning the Film Finance Corporation, Mr. Hall stated that this company had been formed to finance the cost of prints and to make the producers an advance on the cost of production. The Film Finance Corporation has contracts with the Film Clearing House and the Independent Sales Corporation to have the pictures which they acquire sold and distributed by them.

Taking up the 10-20-30 idea which is a child of his, Mr. Hall made it clear that $30 is the price which prevails for about the first eight weeks on these special pictures, $20 after the pictures have passed the eight-week stage, and $10 after another specified time.

"The exhibitor likes to have a fixed price and this plan of mine gives it to him," concluded Mr. Hall. "We have already signed up over 2,800 exhibitors, and I hope in a short time to reach the 4,000 mark." REILLY.

Rothacker Visits New York.

W. R. Rothacker, president of the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company, is in New York City on business. He intends spending two or three weeks doing the Florida resorts.

Brazilian Editor Here to Get Data on Pictures

UGO LEAL, associate editor of the Rio Journal, of Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, arrived recently in New York on the first lap of his transcontinental tour, and his first visit was to the offices of the Fox Film Corporation. He spent all of last week at the Fox studios watching Richard Stanton direct scenes in "Checkers." He is to spend a year in this country gathering data on the moving picture for a series of articles he is to write for his paper.

"I picked the Fox Film Corporation for my first visit because Fox pictures are the best known in South America," said Mr. Leal.

"With about a hundred first-class theatres in Rio de Janeiro all but one play the Fox pictures. Theda Bara is the best known screen actress in South America.

"Of the men George Walsh, in his clean, thrilling comedies, easily leads the male contingent.

"Another Fox star who is well liked is Gladys Brockwell. She has become very popular during the last two years.

"I never have been in the United States before. When I decided to write a series of articles for my newspaper I made up my mind to study the moving picture business. My first thought was of the Fox Film Corporation. I was interested in the company's pictures, have seen every one shown in my city and felt on an intimate footing with the company."

Mr. Leal is a South American by birth, but has traveled extensively. He speaks English, Spanish, French and German. He will remain in New York another month and then will start on a swing around the country, reaching Los Angeles in the fall, where he plans to spend at least three months studying the motion picture industry. In the meantime his articles will appear once a week in his newspaper.

Receiver for Educational Distributing.

Bankruptcy proceedings were instituted in the United States District Court on March 20 against the Educational Distributing Corporation, distributors of moving pictures, at 2 West Forty-fifth street, by David W. Kahn, representing Thomas J. Edwards, on a claim of $25,000.

Judge Mayer appointed Charles A. Riegelman receiver of the business under a bond of $2,000 upon the application of the petitioner, who alleges that the company is insolvent and that it has committed acts of bankruptcy.

Rich to Write for Screen.

H. Thompson Rich, writer and editor, formerly at the head of The Forum Magazine, has joined the Vitagraph scenario staff. Mr. Rich, before he gave up his career temporarily to "do his bit" in the great war, was a contributor to a number of prominent magazines.

Following demobilization Mr. Rich decided to make the change, and submitted to George Randolph Chester, scenario manager at Vitagraph, two photoplays that secured for him a place in the scenario department of that company.

MAKE AN AUDIENCE FOR EVERY FILM

First National's Director of Publicity Believes In Selecting From the General Public, by Means of Your Advertising Copy, an Assemblage of Sympathetic Fans

C. L. YEARSLEY, director of First National's publicity, has his own ideas, born of exhibitor experience, for the promotion of every picture that passes through his department. He believes that there is something in every photoplay that will appeal to a large body of the showgoing public and in evolving advertising he aims to create an audience in sympathy with the individual proposition immediately in hand.

"Every fan has his or her own type of pictures that most appeal," said Mr. Yearsley to the World representative. "There is little use in trying to create advertising that will appeal to everybody, everywhere, in the thought that all classes of showgoers can be attracted to every film that is screened. We aim here to have pictures of sufficient variety to appeal to all types of theatregoers and fit each picture with publicity helps and advertising copy that will appeal directly to the class of people whom we believe will be most interested."

Mr. Yearsley speaks of long experience; as a publicity man for film distribution who has "the exhibitors' angle." As an American interested in theatrical publicity and advertising he went to Australia several years ago, becoming publicity man for James D. Williams' theatre interests. At the end of a year an amalgamation of theatre circuits was effected and Mr. Yearsley continued in his capacity as advertising manager.

Gains Actual Exhibitor Experience.

The union of theatre and film interests resulted in Australasian Films, Ltd., the distribution branch, and the Amalgamated Theatres in exhibition. There were at all times forty theatres served by Mr. Yearsley's advertising forces and at times as many as forty-six cinemas throughout Australia drew upon him for advertising and publicity service.

"We always tried to select our audience for the picture we were working on," said Mr. Yearsley. "If the picture was good—no need to always be great—we advertised it honestly to the public, attracting the class of ticket-buyers who liked that particular type of picture and thus our audiences were always better satisfied than they would have been had we attempted to attract everybody with advertising of promiscuous appeal. That's the way we do here at First National. We furnish exploitation that fits the picture and aim thereby to select the proper audience for the greatest percentage of satisfaction."

Putting Over an American Serial.

As an instance of direct exploitation Mr. Yearsley cited a series of films that were sent over from here to be exploited in fifteen reels—the original length of the American serial, "Gloria's Romance." Billie Burke was a great personal favorite in Australia, made so by her work as a star in features—but the serial passed a poor inspection when it came to a showing before the men who were to exploit it in that country.

"We cut enough material out of the serial to get it into six episodes of 1,000 feet each—making what we called a 'chain story.' What was left was all Billie Burke. Then we started to play on the personal popularity of the star. There was a baby just arrived in the Ziegfeld family and we played that baby to the limit, always coupling Billie Burke as the beautiful and popular mother; always playing up the 'human interest.' We selected the proper house and advertised and publicized the serial in proper manner—appealing to only the public that was strong for Billie Burke. The result was a greatly successful outcome of what appeared on the face of the first returns as a failure of most doleful outlook.

"There was another failure that we turned into success that illustrates what

C. L. Yearsley.

I mean by advertising films along special lines for each output. One of Melbourne's leading citizens was a scientist; an explorer who sought the South Pole. He took along cameramen and returned with some amazing pictures of blizzards, ice, snow and terrible weather. Ordinarily productions were opened in Sydney and then sent along to Melbourne and the other towns. In the case of the South Pole picture Melbourne, the home of the scientist, was thought to be the proper place to open. The advertising was all aimed at local interest; plain statements of 'Arctic Pictures' and a play upon the explorer's local standing. They failed utterly in Melbourne. Then the proposition was put up to me to exploit in Sydney and elsewhere.

"When we ran the films in our projection room the blizzard scenes and the ice and snow struck me—I pitied the cameramen who had to stand that kind of treatment from the weather. The idea impressed me as the appeal we should make to the public, and all of our advertising and publicity was related to the privation and courage that were required to take these pictures for the public's benefit. We played up the 'human interest'; we packed our houses and turned flat failure into a big money maker."

Playing Up "Human Interest."

Just at this moment the manager of First National's Pittsburgh interest dropped in on Mr. Yearsley and began discussing some recent productions. He spoke specifically of Anita Stewart's "Virtuous Wives" and said he had been to considerable pains to find out from exhibitors what special items of attractiveness were most effective in getting their crowds:

"They told me," said the man from Pittsburgh, "that it was twenty per cent. star; thirty per cent. story and fifty per cent. drawing power of the advertising and publicity furnished for exploitation."

Testimonial to Theory Applied.

The World man, having just listened to Mr. Yearsley's recitals of many experiences he had with films in Australia, thus had his impression more firmly fixed—that it's a mighty good thing to have exhibitor experience plus the ability to create publicity and advertising for pictures. In the First National system Earl Hudson prepares the newspaper publicity, but among his cues are those which come from Mr. Yearsley's keen sense of fitness in applying the campaign on each picture to the more potent elements of the individual production.

Cites "Italian Battle Front."

"There is an instance right here with the First National," said Mr. Yearsley. "'The Italian Battle Front' is a case in point—the value of advertising to a specific purpose. We had in these pictures the first films of actual warfare—and we impressed the fact upon the public that they were real and not the 'fake stuff' they had been getting in the 'war plays' that had been issuing from the manufactories. We told why these pictures were real, told how they had been taken; went into details and made our appeal directly to the class of theatregoers who would be presumed to have special interest in seeing them. Exhibitors who advertised the pictures as we suggested in our press sheets 'cleaned up.' Those who simply advertised 'Italian War Pictures' without going into convincing details were not so successful with them."

Experience, after all, is the best teacher, and Mr. Yearsley is fortunate in the possession of exhibitor knowledge plus an immediate sense of discrimination; an ability to pick out the "human interest" element in features that are turned over to him. HILL.

Doings of Organized Showmen

FORM AFFILIATION WITH SEATTLE BODY

Oregon Exhibitors Join Northwest Film Board of Trade at Big Organization Meeting in Portland

AGAIN an organization for Portland (Oregon) exhibitors! Hot upon the heels of two dismal failures comes the affiliation of the Oregon exhibitors with the Northwest Film Board of Trade, with headquarters in Seattle. At the most enthusiastic organization meeting in years, held at the Benson Hotel, the Seattle exchangemen enthused the assembled exhibitors sufficiently to persuade them to part with $30 each in cold cash as payment of initiation fee and dues for a year, and the bond of union between the exchanges and the exhibitors was affected, or at least strengthened.

Just who deserves the credit for bringing the exhibitors together this time is a question. Harry Sibmond, Seattle attorney and general counsel of the film board of trade, was a hard preliminary worker and an intelligent speaker on the problems which he maintained must be solved by exchange and exhibitor in union. J. A. Koerpel, manager for the World Film Corporation in Seatle, acted as toastmaster at the Benson luncheon and consistently selected the speakers who created the enthusiasm necessary to organize. H. G. Rosebaum, manager for the Seattle Paramount-Artcraft office and president of the board of trade, delivered the leading address, while Al Eden, Seattle manager for Select, passed the blank checks around for signature as the climax of the meeting.

Sunday Question Needs Attention.

Sol Baum, Portland manager for Universal, explained where the Sunday closing issues now coming to a head in Oregon need the united attention of all the branches of the industry, and explained that the feeling existing with some exhibitors that the Film Board of Trade was an institution organized to the disadvantage of the theatre men was an error. George Guthrie, Oregon Theatre, Salem, delivered one of the most intelligent addresses of the session, speaking on the Sunday closing question and pointing out that successful Sunday shows in unliberal localities depended upon the proper selection of pictures. The entrance into the industry of such nationally prominent men as Mr. McAdoo, Mr. Guthrie said, would elevate it to a higher plane.

Tells of Trade Board Work.

A. H. McDonald, who controls the theatrical situation in Eugene, followed Mr. Guthrie's sentiments by saying that the danger of Sunday closing lay with the exhibitor rather than with the public. Eugene is now closed on Sunday, but Mr. McDonald says he has convinced the city selectmen through the presentation of proper pictures that the business of the silent drama should be classed with the best businesses of the land and not be stacked alongside of the liquor and tobacco industries.

Mr. Koerpel told of the work of the board of trade in the Yakima Sunday closing fight and the influenza-prevention campaign, J. J. Parker, of the Portland Majestic Theatre, gave the history of the Sunday closing fights in Oregon, Mr. Eden explained the Board's effective work for improved express service and in the adjustment of differences between exchange and exhibitor, and other film men called upon by Mr. Koerpel indicated that only love and harmony existed between the distributing and exhibiting branches of the industry. A stirring address by Charles P. Salisbury, in charge of the Liberty Theatre at Camp Lewis, on the question of the sane selection of photoplays and co-operation along these lines between theatres and exchanges, was most enthusiastically received. Then Al Eden showed the boys where to put their names on the dotted line in order to make them associate members of the Northwest Film Board of Trade.

Participating of the feed at the board's expense were Robert A. Brackett, Seattle; George B. Guthrie, Salem; A. S. Kolstad, Hood River; Albert W. Eden, Seattle; V. M. Schubach, Universal, Portland; Sam Sax, Princess; Sam Fleishman, Rex; J. B. Washtock, Victoria; E. H. Marston, Tivoli; E. J. Myrick, Liberty; W. A. Graeper, Union Avenue; W. W. Ely, Hippodrome; C. S. Jensen, Liberty; S. Bernstein, Elite; W. A. Lewis, Scenic; J. A. Bradt, Echo; J. C. Stille, Peoples Amusement Company; W. Strahlman, Isis; Elliot S. Itzikowitz and Isaac Geller, Peninsula; J. J. Parker, Majestic; R. Wingham, Exhibitors Mutual; Jack Tiilman, General Film; C. M. Hill and Vernon R. Moore, Famous Players-Lasky; J. B. Rosebaum, president Film Board of Trade, Seattle; Harry Sigmond, general counsel; F. Trode, Famous Players-Lasky; J. A. Koerpel, World Film; A. H. Huot, Film Clearing House; E. F. ## New Miami Valley League Makes a Vigorous Showing

THE new organization which came out of the remains of the old Miami Valley Exhibitors League in Dayton has been doing good service in the present fight in Ohio to legalize Sunday motion pictures and give local option to the several communities. It is said that the strongest organization that ever existed is now in effect in Dayton and that local managers are giving their unlimited support to the movement started by John Seifert, Al Kinzler and Mark Gates.

No officers have been elected as yet for the new organization, but it is thought that one of these will land the president's chair. Any one of them would be fully able to take care of the job. The signing of thousands of petitions and telegrams a week ago in every one of Dayton's film houses in favor of the Banker Bill to legalize Sunday shows is evidence. The fact that on the first day of the signing of these petitions over twenty-five thousand names were secured gave faith to the league and they continued the good work throughout the week.

Although many have said that exhibitors could not stick together there is now more money in the coffers of the local league than ever and almost all local managers have paid their initiation fee of $10. According to those prominent in the affairs of the league that body's activities will not stop with the end of the Sunday closing trouble; rather will they multiply. Another very promising outlook is the fact that exhibitors in territory surrounding Dayton have expressed their willingness to join the new league, and it looks as though that body of exhibitors will establish itself as a real power.

Weeks Leaves for Coast.

C. A. Weeks, treasurer of the Zane Grey Pictures, Inc., and Great Authors' Pictures, Inc., left New York on Wednesday, March 26, for a hurried trip to Los Angeles, where he will confer with B. B. Hampton, president of the two organizations, and other associates in the western offices of these companies.

Mr. Weeks will arrive in Los Angeles in time to witness the filming of several of the biggest scenes in "Desert Gold" and "The Westerner." He will remain only a week, the purpose of the trip being solely to consult with his associates upon some of the details of the service campaigns to be put behind these two productions.

Blackton Star Back from California.

Sylvia Breamer, star of J. Stuart Blackton's current Vitagraph special, "The Common Cause," and also of his next feature release, "A House Divided," distribution of which has not yet been announced, returned from California Saturday, March 29.

Miss Breamer had to leave the West earlier than she had originally planned so as to be back in New York to start work on her next Blackton production.

NORTHWEST ORGANIZATION IMPROVING

Film Board of Trade Meets in Seattle and Adds Fifteen Members—Sees Need of Concerted Effort

TO prepare for opposition to Sunday closing and to combat the present tendency toward excessive taxation of theatres forty-two film men and theatre managers of Spokane and the Inland Empire met in the Davenport Hotel, Spokane, March 19 and received fifteen additional members for the Northwest Film Board of Trade.

The meeting was opened by H. G. Rosenbaum, of Seattle, manager of the Famous Players-Lasky Company, and president of the board. Mr. Rosenbaum said: "The theatre men are the poorest organized of any body of men. It is not our intention to take in any but managers at this time. We are proud of our record in the Yakima situation, where Sunday closing was successfully opposed."

Harry Sigmond, Seattle, general counsel for the board, said: "The bad boy in the film business, whether it is the manager or the producer, is the one who makes it hard for the other fellow. One of the aims of this organization is to get justice for all. The general run of the clergy is with the film men and will admit the power of the screen, but there are a few loud-mouthed reformers who oppose it."

Soldiers Will Want Sunday Shows.

"In the 2,000,000 men coming back from overseas you have your greatest support," said John Koerpel, of World Film, "for they will oppose being denied amusements on the only day they have off from work. They will have some European ideas."

P. L. Carroll, manager of the Pathe exchange in Spokane, said: "During the influenza epidemic they closed the theatres for twelve weeks, but the department stores were crowded."

Other speakers were Dr. H. S. Clemmer, E. Clarke Walker, C. S. Stilwell, J. W. Allender, Spokane, and H. S. Graham, Winchester, Idaho. All spoke in favor of the organization.

The Trade Well Represented.

Those present were: J. William Houck, Spokane, manager Liberty Theatre; R. A. Grombacher, Spokane, secretary Liberty Amusement Company; J. S. Nelson, Seattle, traveling representative of Exhibitors-Mutual Distributing Corporation; H. H. Brownell, Seattle, branch manager of Exhibitors-Mutual Distributing Corporation; W. A. Baker, Chewelah, manager Empress Theatre; T. H. Terhune, Spokane, manager Rex Theatre; J. H. Hurley, Davenport; L. A. Todd, Seattle, traveling representative of Fox Film Corporation; C. C. Spencer, of Wallace, Idaho, manager of Grand Theatre; F. F. Moe, Wallace, Idaho, manager of Liberty Theatre; William Humphrey, La Crosse, manager of Scenic Theatre; A. M. Hogle, Seattle, traveling representative of Vitagraph; Joe Madson, of Salt Lake City, representative of American Film Corporation; Harry Arthur, Seattle, manager of United Theatres; P. G. Lynch, Seattle, representative of the Paralta Pictures in the Northwest; W. J. Drummond, Seattle, manager of the George Kleine Company; W. L. Casey, Newport, manager of Fid's Opera House at Newport, also the Liberty at Sandpoint, Idaho; W. A. Mead, Seattle, manager of the Universal Film Exchange, also vice-president of the board; R. C. Hudson, Spokane, booker for the Universal Film Exchange; Wallace Potter, Spokane, manager of the Universal Film Exchange; O. W. Newton, Hillyard, manager of the Liberty Theatre; K. L. Burk, Seattle, manager of Fox; C. C. (Doc.) Crews, Walla Walla, manager of Liberty Theatre; Dr. H. C. Lambach, Spokane, of Clemmer Theatre; Leon Potter, Spokane, of Universal; Lieutenant J. G. Bushnell, of the Universal Exchange, Spokane. The last two recently returned from France.

Ontario Exhibitors Plan to Meet April First

IN issuing the call for the April general meeting of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Protective Association, Secretary Thomas Scott, of Toronto, announced that the Ontario association now boasts of a membership of 211 members, 94 of whom are in the City of Toronto.

The outside centers hold the balance of power in the organization, and it is a fact that a considerable proportion of the outside membership has been attending the general meetings in Toronto during the past three or four months. Secretary Scott also points out that the City of Hamilton enjoys a 100 per cent membership in the association, the 17 exhibitors of that city being members of the body. This does not include the vaudeville houses of Hamilton.

Will Discuss Exchange Franchise.

Secretary Scott has also announced that the Ontario association is now affiliated with the exhibitor associations of the Province of Quebec and of the Maritime Provinces so that all the exhibitors of Eastern Canada are now working in harmony. It is expected that the Manitoba Moving Picture Exhibitors' Association will also fall in line with the Easterners shortly.

The Ontario organization has received its government charter for the Canadian Exhibitors' Film Exchange, Limited, and the capitalization has been fixed at $100,000 as a start. This amount will be increased if the necessity arises. Announcement is made that over one hundred exhibitors have already taken stock in the new exchange. The association has not yet decided upon the franchise which will be bought, but this matter is down for discussion at the April meeting which will be held at 143 Yonge street, Toronto, on Tuesday, April 1. The prospectus of the new exchange company has been prepared and will be distributed among all exhibitors within a week or two.

Secretary Scott visited Ottawa on March 21 to interview government officials regarding the desirability of the abolishment of the fifteen-cent a reel a day tax. He will make a report of his work at Ottawa at the April session.

The general membership fee for exhibitors outside of the City of Toronto is only $10 a year.

Ohio Labor President Says Workers Want Sunday Shows

At a regular meeting of the Central Labor Union representing seventeen labor organizations in the city of Piqua, Ohio, resolutions favoring the passage of the Banker Bill to legalize motion pictures on Sunday after the noon hour were adopted and copies of it were sent to the state representatives and senators at Columbus. In regard to the new bill, Joseph J. Welsh, president of the labor union, said:

"The proposed legislation does not interfere with churchgoers and their desire to worship on Sunday, and it would give the masses an opportunity to visit an amusement, the privileges of which they are denied here in Piqua at the present time. The class of people who are compelled to earn their living are entitled to some sort of recreation within their reach on the one day of the week that they have to themselves. There is no more harm in attending picture shows than the amusements of which many churchgoers partake without the slightest twinge of conscience. Picture shows have an educational value that is just as great on Sunday as it is on Monday."

Mr. Welsh also mentioned that many workers have left Piqua with their families to live in Dayton, Springfield and other towns for no other reason than that they were denied the right of amusement on Sunday. Mr. Welsh went to great length in urging the support of the Banker Bill by all of the senators and representatives from the Piqua territory. Piqua is only one of the Ohio towns that is now closed.

Dedicate Song to "Fatty" Arbuckle.

"Oh, Helen!" the comedy stuttering song, which has taken the country by storm, has been dedicated to "Fatty" Arbuckle by Joseph W. Stern & Company, publishers of the hit. The run on this song is rapidly approaching the million mark.

A special cover for the song has been designed, presenting Arbuckle's smiling photograph, duly autographed; and the publishers have started a big drive among their local dealers to co-operate with exhibitors of Paramount-Arbuckle pictures.

HODKINSON TAKES ZANE GREY PRODUCT

Stirring Novel of Western Life Furnishes Scenario for First Film of New Line Chosen by Distributor

THE announcement this week that the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation is to handle the Zane Grey Pictures, Inc., identifies the second of the big, new lines of product it will distribute. The Augustus Thomas—Harry Raver Artco Productions, known as the Four-Star series—as noted in these columns two weeks ago, was the first large contract undertaken by this corporation.

The Zane Grey Pictures company is the novelist's own company. The books of Zane Grey will be used as the basic material for the productions, and the author himself will co-operate in making the pictures.

The company is now working on the first of the series, a master picturization of the author's great novel, "Desert Gold." The part of Dick Gale is being played by E. K. Lincoln. Casting for this production has been carried on both in the West and the East. One of the latest additions, for instance, is William Bainbridge, noted for "Hands Down," "God's Country and the Woman," and many other pictures, who in "Desert Gold" takes the part of the rancher, Belding. The rest of the cast has been just as carefully chosen.

Benjamin B. Hampton is president of Zane Grey Pictures, Inc. Van Campen Heilner, one of the editors of "Field and Stream," is associated with him. The man mainly responsible for the organization of the Zane Grey company is Eltinge F. Warner, owner of "Field and Stream" and "Smart Set," who "discovered" Zane Grey when he was a struggling writer nearly a dozen years ago. T. Hays Hunter is in charge of the direction of "Desert Gold." The New York offices of the corporation are at 3 East Forty-fourth street, and are in charge of Charles A. Weeks, treasurer of the company.

Discussing the affiliation of the Zane Grey Pictures with the Hodkinson organization Mr. Weeks, treasurer of the Zane Grey company, said:

"The Zane Grey Pictures are going to be a revelation to the trade.

"As an example of the painstaking care being put back of and into the Zane Grey Pictures three months were given to the preparation of the scenario of our first picture, 'Desert Gold.' Three of the ablest scenario writers obtainable and Mr. Grey himself were engaged constantly. This same exacting attention has been given to every detail of the making of the picture—cast, direction, location, sets, etc.

"Starting, as a foundation, with a story of which more than a million copies have been sold, it will be obvious that the finished product can scarcely be other than one that will make for the increased prestige of the author, the producer, the distributor and the exhibitor."

Prizma, Inc., Moves.

Prizma, Inc., producers of the Prizma Pictures in nature's colors, has outgrown its quarters at 11 East 14th street, New York, and has made arrangements to move its executive offices on April 1 to 71 West 23rd street, where it has leased the entire fourteenth floor.

The work of enlarging the Prizma laboratories at 3193 Boulevard, Jersey City, in order to provide facilities for meeting the demand for prints is being carried on rapidly under the supervision of William V. D. Kelley, inventor of the Prizma processes.

First National Gets Ready Many Prints of Peace Film

THE First National Exhibitors Circuit will send through its exchanges, a hundred prints of "Whom the Gods Would Destroy." Simultaneous showings in a hundred cities either on April 15 or 21 are hoped for.

Harry Scherer of the Cambria Theatre, Johnstown, will close his film season with the MacCauley feature, playing it at seventy five cent top prices April 21, 22 and 23.

The MacCauley representative, who will make a tour of the First National eastern exchanges, announces his concern's willingness to play the film anywhere on a percentage scale.

The League to Enforce Peace, of which ex-President Taft and other noted men are heads and of which over four hundred thousand people are participating members, are behind the picture, and it is expected now that an immense advertising campaign, coupled with the hundreds of discussions and conventions on the subject of a League of Nations, will be begun shortly.

Already over a million letters have been written to sympathizers with the movement, suggesting that they support the film.

A Broadway showing of the film will likely be announced within a few weeks.

It Pays to Explain.

Manager Stolte, of the Strand Theatre, Omaha, Neb., was to show "The Probation Wife."

"What does 'probation' mean?" he asked his cashier just for fun.

"Oh, I know. Let me think," said the cashier.

Manager Stolte asked the same question of twenty-four others and got practically the same answer.

"What's the use advertising a picture with a word in the title that people cannot grasp at once?" he asked himself. So he clipped from Webster's dictionary a definition of the word "probation" and also the definition of the word "wife" and ran them in the advertisements.

The response to his advertisements proved he did not go wrong.

Louis Jacobs Coming East.

Louis Jacobs, general manager of the L-Ko Komedy Company at Hollywood, will arrive in New York shortly following a visit to various large cities of the West and Middle West for the purpose of learning what the public likes best in comedies. Mr. Jacobs will spend some time in the East before returning to California. Julius Stern, president of the L-Ko Company, who has been in California since the first of the year, will remain at the studios until Mr. Jacob's return.

TO DISTRIBUTE GARSON FILM ABROAD

Important Deal Transfers Foreign Rights on "The Unpardonable Sin" to Apollo

CLOSING one of the most important film export deals which have been recorded during the past six months, the Apollo Trading Corporation, Longacre Theatre, New York, has purchased the sales rights of Harry Garson's "The Unpardonable Sin" for all territories excepting the United States and Canada. The contracts were signed a few days ago, and the Apollo people are already considering many attractive offers for territory, which have been made them as the result of the sensational success of the picture in Detroit, where it was given its premiere.

The Apollo Trading Corporation is a comparatively new concern in the export field, but is already identified with some preferred product for the foreign fields, including the new series of Billie West comedies. Bobby North, well known in the motion picture industry as a director of productions, and Lawrence Weber, producer of both legitimate and motion picture productions, are prominently identified with the Apollo company. Their deal for "The Unpardonable Sin" was handled in the same manner as other deals involving territory on the North American continent. Mr. North went to Detroit to see the picture, and was so impressed with it that he wired Mr. Weber, his associate, that the Apollo company simply "had to have" the picture for the foreign territory. When he returned to New York to take further counsel, after the very stiff price for the picture had been quoted him, he found that Mr. Weber had gone to Florida on a fishing trip. Telegraph and telephone messages failed to raise the fishing partner, for Mr. Weber was bobbing around off the coast of Florida in a little boat. In desperation North hopped on a train and rushed back to Detroit, where he closed the big deal himself, shouldering all the firm's big responsibility himself.

It is conceded that wherever "The Unpardonable Sin" is shown, whether in this country or abroad, it will attract attention as one of the most important photoplay productions ever made. It will advertise itself, its star, Blanche Sweet; its director, Marshall Neilan; its producer, Harry Garson, and every person who has had anything to do with getting it before the public. The Apollo company's enterprise in undertaking the foreign distribution of the big production is considered highly commendable in that it will immediately establish the firm as one of the most important in its field.

Simplex Employes Hold Dance.

The First Reception and Dance of the Simplex engineers, which was recently organized among the employes of the Simplex Motion Picture Projector plant, was held at the United Club, Thirty-fourth street, New York, on Monday night, March 24. The hall was filled with the members of the association and their families.

A splendid picture program was first given with song numbers interpersed between pictures. The songs were sung by T. Schrager, E. Morfesi and J. Benedikt, employes of the Simplex company.

Music was furnished by the Simplex Jazz Band under the direction of Mr. Kneuer, of the Simplex order department. Refreshments were served. The heads of the various departments were present, as were a number of the executives. E. M. Porter, the general manager of the Precision Machine Company, was present, accompanied by Mrs. Porter. The festivities ended at one o'clock.

Minneapolis Film Board Aids Showmen in Trouble

SINCE the announcement of its five new trade rules the Minneapolis Film Board of Trade has become a regular "high court of appeals" for the exhibitors of the Northwest, who have come to it for a settlement of their various difficulties.

Those who have suffered through misunderstanding or misrepresentation on the part of any exchange or salesmen are finding relief by presenting their "case" to the board. In all cases the facts have been quickly ascertained and adjustments made accordingly.

Exchange managers who have been lax in some matters are being brought to time by the board, while exhibitors are finding that it pays to live up to the rules of the new organization.

"Since the application of the five trade rules disappointments due to the late return of films have been reduced by fully 75 per cent. in the Minneapolis territory," said Charles Stombaugh, manager of the Pathe exchange, and prominent member of the Minneapolis Film Board of Trade.

"Several exhibitors have received adjustments of their claims even in excess of their expectations. We solicit the filing of claims by exhibitors covering any irregularities of our member exchanges. They will receive immediate consideration and adjustment.

"The objections to our trade rules have been very rare, and no one has pointed out any fault that those rules as a unit do not themselves provide against."

Teaches Exhibitors How to Run Projection Room

THE operators' school for exhibitors, originated in Balimore by the members of the Maryland Exhibitors' League, is probably the first of it kind. Frank Durkee, proprietor of the Palace Theatre, Gay and Hoffman streets, is its parent. At a meeting of the league, December last, after the committee, detailed to meet the operators relative to the signing of the new contract, reported back that the Operators' Union would not come to terms with them as they did not represent an Exhibitors' League, a school for operators to teach members of the league who desired to learn how to operate their own projection machines was decided on.

A committee was appointed, including Frank Durkee, chairman; Eugene B. McCurdy, of the Lafayette and Eureka theatres, and Harry Cluster, of the Crystal and Waverly theatres.

The school began in January with a good sized class and sessions have been held regularly in a class room especially fitted up on the second floor of the Crystal Theatre, 528 North Gay street. The school has been successful so far and it has been carried on with the idea of giving each man a chance to understand the working of everything in his theatre.

White to Edit Stone Productions.

Philip H. White has been especially engaged for the important position of film editor for the Lewis S. Stone Productions. Mr. White has had extensive experience with the George Kleine, Thomas H. Ince, Universal and Triangle organizations prior to his present affiliation.

MAKING THE PICTURE HELP LEGITIMATE

Shuberts Are Advertising Constance Talmadge in "Scandal" to Put Over Stage Production

WITH the Messrs. Shubert advertising Constance Talmadge in one of her old Select pictures, "Scandal," in which she is presented by Lewis J. Selznick, in order to put over their own stage production at the Garrick in Chicago, and Select's Chicago exchange working double time to take care of the reissue bookings at the first-run houses, "Scandal" has literally taken that city by the ears.

"Scandal" was Constance Talmadge's first Select picture. It was written by Cosmo Hamilton. Several weeks ago the producing firm of Lee and J. J. Shubert placed "Scandal" in rehearsal for a stage production. The piece was taken to Chicago, and opened at the Shuberts' Garrick Theatre. Immediately Select's Chicago exchange got busy booking reissues.

Lubliner & Trinz rebooked the subject over their entire circuit. As soon as the Lubliner & Trinz management took account of the enormous interest the combined advertising of the picture and stage play had awakened they booked "Scandal" at the Lakeside for seven days instead of the original three.

This established two records. It is the first time in the history of the Lakeside that any production has played for a solid week, and it was the first time in the history of any Chicago theatre where a reissue had been booked for an entire week. The Lakeside is in one of the strongest competitive districts.

In addition to the Lubliner & Trinz houses Select's exchange then booked the attraction for seven days at the Star Theatre, in the downtown district, thereby establishing another record in that it was the first time the Star had booked a reissue for seven days and the second time that a reissue had been booked for a solid week in that city.

Close on to the Star contract and the Lubliner & Trinz bookings came an order for play dates at each of the fourteen Ascher Brothers' theatres.

Each day public interest in "Scandal" grew greater. The Shuberts were using big space in the Chicago dailies to advertise their stage production at the Garrick, and all of the pictures houses were going in for big advertising to get the benefit of the Shubert space. In other words, it soon developed into a battle for space between the big New York producers of the spoken stage version and the Chicago exhibitors of Select's original screen attraction.

Both sides were doing a big business. People were attending the stage version at the Garrick and the following night were going to one of the picture houses to see how Constance Talmadge played "Scandal" on the screen, but the accounts of the Shubert experts must have seen a balance on the side of the picture exhibitors.

Last week the Shuberts came out with one of the most unusual advertisements ever seen in any newspaper. They actually advertised Constance Talmadge in the screen production over their own stage version at the Garrick. One of the biggest advertisements to this effect appeared in the Herald and Examiner. The advertisement referred to "Scandal" on stage and screen as the hit of the year, but it expressly advertised Constance Talmadge in "Scandal" at the Star Theatre. In six-point type, at the bottom of the box, it said: "After you have seen this delectable film see 'Scandal' on the stage at the Garrick, where it is the talk of the town."

This rivalry has stirred up more interest over "Scandal" than any other stage or screen production Chicago has ever seen, but it is believed exhibitors in other cities also will be able to take advantage of the unusual opportunity.

Moving Picture Entertainments Made to Pay for Philanthropic and Other Enterprises

WARREN M. COVILL, of the National Board of Review, opens up the question of making moving pictures pay for the little "extras" required in carrying on the good work of church and school, and also those of philanthropies and charitable institutions. The suggestion is a good one which has been acted on quite frequently and with good results. An article in the March Bulletin of the Affiliated Committees for Better Films by Mr. Covill, and which we quote in part, is as follows:

Social Workers, let's be real daring! Let's go into business! Let's finance our welfare work and abandon in part the old heart-breaking plan of private solicitation! Let's let all the people help in paying for the needy! Regular motion picture entertainments daily, semi-weekly or weekly, high-grade, thoroughly entertaining and wholesome, with the understanding spread broadcast through the town that all the profits will go for some charity. How can that combination help interesting the typical American? The returns from a bright, first-class entertainment of selected pictures will bring enough to keep any ordinary organization in funds. Think of the wealth of material, the special benefits which can be held, the local talent which can be drawn in, and then take off your coat and go to work.

Here is a church in the country town that wants funds for a new Bible, pulpit, furniture, new seats; funds for a new roof, fresh paint and an increase in the minister's pay, hymn books, coal or a Sunday School visitor. You know how hard the money comes by social suppers, socials, contributions or house to house begging. All the while the Sunday School room is idle during the week and the town hall is used so seldom that the air becomes musty. All the while the townspeople are spending money for some form of entertainment. There is no motion picture entertainment in the town to draw together the people, even on Saturday nights. Some of them drive fifteen miles in their autos to find pleasure they crave in the nearest large town. Why not use regularly some hall which will accomodate the townspeople and farmers near by, and let them enjoy a thoroughly pleasant evening while they pay for the church upholstery and the bell.

Then there are the people who have co-operated with the regular exhibitor, leaving him the field for most of the year for his own profits. They have raised the money they need by special benefits. The committee in Providence, R. I., showing pictures regularly for young people on Saturday mornings in the Strand Theatre, has helped the exhibitor draw crowds each week, but they have an understanding that on the fifth week the money will come to them. One benefit raised $1,800 for a Red Cross canteen. The Rialto in New York City has aided the Seaside Hospital for Crippled Children two years with special performances. The association evidently regards the plan a good one. Two benefits were given in Buffalo at Christmas time and the funds for one went to the orphans in France.

A church in Colorado raised more than enough to put a new roof on its building by working out a plan with the nearby motion picture exhibitor to increase his theatre patronage. In New Haven, Conn., the motion picture men agreed, during the war, to contribute to the mayor funds which were made up of their net profits from Sunday night performances. Mayor Fitzgerald announced recently that nearly $20,000 had been divided by him among the Girls' Patriotic League, Red Cross Civilian Relief, Babies Welfare, Civic Federation and about fifteen other philanthropic war agencies. You see that money can be made even with local benefit shows.

"Comets."

In release B-6109 of the Paramount-Bray Pictograph E. Lyle Goldman, of the Bray studios, has illustrated, by means of animated drawings, the theory of the origin of the comet.

The most spectacular and best known comet of this generation is Halley's. This speedster put in its appearance at exactly the time that scientists said it would, for they had been able to determine that this comet travelled over an exact course and at a certain speed so that it approaches the earth each seventy-five years.

The picture shows that the comet is a rather shapeless nebulous mass about which the luminous gases are seen. As it approaches the sun, however, the gasses are repelled so that they stream out in an opposite direction, resulting in the fiery tail which appears to follow the comet.

This is another example of the tremendous field which animated technical drawings have opened to the screen, for once again the unphotographible has been translated to pictures.

"An Essay of the Hills."

The current Bruce-Educational release is based on the idea of rest and motion in nature. These two elements carried to greater or lesser degrees cover the moods of nature and form mediums of expression for her emotions. Some of the scenes of the picture are not out of the ordinary, but the majority of them are of unusual beauty. The most distinctive scene in the picture shows the meeting of the sun and the storm in a mountainous region. "Little streams that soon become raging torrents" and an early morning scene in which the time of day is betokened by the mists which hang over the valleys, are also noticeable for their beauty.

Pathe Review, No. 7.

This number opens with some attractive tinted views of the oasis of Kantara, in the Algerian desert. It pictures an old Roman road, still being used, and also shows various forms of desert life.

We'd Point Out the Striking Contrast in These Scenes from "Put Up Your Hands," but You Glimpse it Immediately.
Margarita Fisher's personality is striking not only in the picture on the right, but throughout her American Film feature

An unusually good feature by the Ultra-rapid camera is included, showing an athlete in numerous "turns and twists." Sugar growing in Java and a study of polar bears are other subjects pictured.

Blind Soldiers Develop Sense of Touch.

The Fifty-second issue of the Gaumont News contains some interesting scenes in which we see blind soldiers developing the sense of touch before taking up a vocation suitable to the blind. The pictures were taken at U. S. General Hospital No. 7, the former home of Mrs. T. Harrison Garret. The teachers in this hospital are volunteers, and one of the most interesting things in the picture shows blind men learning to use the typewriter.

Interesting Items

Motion pictures are now regarded as part of the curriculum at the Seymour High School at Seymour, Ind. The school authorities recently purchased a new projecting machine, which has been installed in the auditorium, and say that it is proving of great educational value. Educational films for exhibition at the high school are obtained free of charge from Indiana University, at Bloomington, Ind., which has offered to lend its films to all high schools of the state that are equipped to use them. A number of the other high schools in the state are contemplating the installation of machines, it is said.

Everett Dean Martin, director of the Cooper Union forums, conducted under the auspices of the People's Institute of New York City, has just been elected chairman of The National Board of Review of Motion Pictures. Mr. Martin has been influential in developing the "little university" at Cooper Union, the underlying idea of which is to offer an opportunity for the masses of the people to thresh out moot questions of fundamental social significance. He recognizes that forum work, to be of value, must lead to new activities by the people. The "little university" furnishes opportunity for this new work in the field of intellectual effort. Mr. Martin sees in the wide range of questions raised by the motion picture drama the chance to further arouse the intellectual processes which so often lie down in the masses for sheer lack of stimuli. He believes that motion pictures frequently constitute the stimuli through which people generally may be moved to contribute actively as intellectual beings to the stream of thought of the world.

Ballet in Big Parisian Set Exploits "Infatuation"

WITH a novel stage setting, two principals and ten live chorus girls, manager William M. Vance, of the New Lyric Theatre, Minneapolis, packed his house for the week in which he showed Gaby Deslys in "Infatuation," the Pathe feature. During the showing of the photoplay, the projection machine was stopped, the picture screen raised, footlights flashed on, and the principals and chorus performed the "Infatuation ballet."

The dancing of the ballet occupied less than five minutes at each showing. It took a week's preparation by carpenters, electricians, and decorators to reproduce the scene laid on the stage of the Casino de Paris. The ballet over, the screen was dropped and the showing of the picture taken up exactly where the live principals had left off.

A more extended account of Mr. Vance's exploitation was printed in our issue of March 29. The innovation was the first of its kind to be introduced into Minneapolis moving picture houses, and the performance was greeted with hearty applause at each showing.

Bringing Paris and the "Infatuation Ballet" to Minneapolis.

William Vance's New Lyric exploited Pathe's "Infatuation" with a living chorus in a beautiful prototype of the Casino de Paris.

Attractive Program Issued By New Orleans Theatre

A STRIKING illustration of how press book material issued by film producers can be used to good advantage was given recently in "The Saengerette," the attractive twenty-page program issued by the Saenger Amusement Company of New Orleans for its Strand, Liberty and Globe theatres.

The Saengerette of March 12 featured "Why I Would Not Marry," a Fox production. A picture of a young man and girl embracing within a large interrogation point constituted the cover design, the question mark being made significant by the billing, "Why I Would Not Marry," printed directly beneath it in red ink.

The picture was booked for the Liberty Theatre for four days beginning March 22, and interesting data regarding the play and the problems propounded in its story were given in a four-page insert printed on pink paper. The material in this insert was all taken from the press book issued by the Fox company in connection with the film. One of the pages contained a list of things under the heading, "What Every Woman Would Like to Know." On the next page was a general talk on the picture, and on the third page of the insert was given a list of queer marriage laws. The fourth page contained an article on "How Blackmailers Mulct Women."

The Saengerette was printed in red and black ink throughout its twenty pages and cover, and contained general advertising from business houses in New Orleans.

Universal Star Blocks Traffic.

Dorothy Phillips and Allen Holubar personally appeared at the Strand Theatre, San Francisco, recently during the showing of "The Heart of Humanity." So large was the crowd that attempted to gain entrance to the theatre that the police got Miss Phillips to address part of the crowd from the markee of the theatre so that order might be maintained.

Traffic was practically paralyzed prior to Miss Phillips' appearance outside the theatre, because of the size of the crowd seeking admission to the theatre and a glimpse of Miss Phillips and Director Holubar.

Sidney Meyer Showed 'Em All Right.

W. A. Matlack, of the Princess Theatre, Ames, Ia., booked "Salome," and encountered the opposition of the Woman's Club of his town. The city council framed an ordinance prohibiting the showing of any Theda Bara picture in Ames. Manager Sidney Meyer, of the Fox exchange in Omaha, Neb., went to Ames with the film of "Salome" under his arm, showed it to the council, and the ordinance was not passed.

Vera Steadman Joins Universal.

Vera Steadman, formerly one of the leading comediennes of the Keystone comedies, has joined the Universal forces and will be seen shortly in a one reeler entitled "Happ Returns," being directed by Jack Dillon. She is also seen in the two-reel special animal comedy directed by William S. Campbell and entitled "And the Elephant Still Pursued Her."

GETTING A LINE ON THE SOUTHLAND

Nat Bregstein, Touring Atlantic Coast States in the Interest of Moving Picture World, Finds Business Good in Many Thriving Communities

THE trip of Moving Picture World's representative into southern territory has been productive of the usual good results—his mission extending the circulation of the World in every place he has visited. But apart from his immediate mission Bregstein is sending back reports of favorable business conditions in the Atlantic Coast communities with some exceptionally prosperous time single out from the general run of good cheer. Nat Bregstein has visited the Middle West, Canada and the Eastern States for the World within the past nine months and his present trip will carry him into all sections of the South and Southwest before he turns northward.

Bregstein has sent reports from many of the towns he visited and the details are expected to be interesting to our exhibitor-subscribers as reflecting general business conditions. In his story are several items of special importance and we give his narrative as his journey has run:

Here Is Bregstein's Story.

My first stop, after leaving the home office was Richmond, Va., where ten picture theatres are in operation. From my room in Murphy's Hotel I saw the Colonial, Bijou and Isis theatres and decided to visit them first. These three houses belong to the Wells Circuit, and are under the supervision of H. Burstein, who told me business is coming back into its own in Richmond. The New Theatre, also a Wells house, formerly the Rialto, closed for some time, opened its doors March 3. This Movie seats 450. The other Wells theatre in town is the Odeon, seating 500, admission 11 cts. Miss Allen, in charge, informed me the house gets a good matinee business on account of being located opposite a department store.

The Rex: Manager Lay, after signing a subscription blank for the World, led me a few blocks to the office of Mr. Hoover, the owner, who gave me a check for $3 and says, while his name may be Hoover, he doesn't believe in Hooverising when it comes to paying for the World. The Rex is a 325 seater, admission 10 cents, uses Pathe, Universal, etc.

Another new theatre soon to open in Richmond is the Broadway, seating 700, situated on the Main Street. This house will be under the direction of R. D. Craver, who is associated with the First National Exhibitors Circuit, Inc. of Virginia. They maintain an exchange here which is the only one in town. Supplies are also sold at this branch. Mr. Craver was out of town at the time of my visit. V. L. Keith, the manager, says the South looks promising for the picture industry.

Richmond's Only Exchange.

C. Vaden, of the Theato Theatre, seating 375, admission 10 cents, is doing a good business, and uses Paramount, Artcraft, Triangle, Fox, and other brands. Charles A. Somma, of the Hippodrome, seating 730, has a colored house, admission 11 and 22 cents, runs "Tabs" and pictures; serials go big here. Mr. Somma has been here for years, and is packing them in. Another colored house in the same block is the Globe. R. M. S. Hollinger is the manager. The house seats 380, admission 11 and 15 cents, uses Universal and big features, doing splendidly.

Bluebird Theatre Company, operating Bluebird Theatre, has a pretty little house, seating 633, admission 11 and 15 cents. There is a pipe organ and also there is a lightning effect of red, white and blue around the sides of the interior. Manager Coulter switched on the lights for me, and it looked nifty.

Reports on Norfolk Houses.

From Richmond the Seaboard Air Line runs a distance of ninety-five miles to Newport News, Va., then ferries across to Norfolk. The town is crowded these days, full of men in uniform.

The Wells Circuit controls practically every theatre in town, among them being the Wells Theatre, seating 650, admission 15 and 20 cents; the Granby, seating 1,400, admission 25 cents; Strand Theatre, seating 1280, admission 15 and 20 cents; the American Theatre, seating 800, admission 10 cents; Arcade Theatre, seating 500, admission 5 cents. Among the other theatres I visited was the Columbia, seating 425, admission 10 cents. This is a colored house, Mr. Nutter manager, seating 700 admission 10 and 15 cents. The Star Theatre, also under the management of Mr. Nutter, is a colored house seating 500, admission 10 cents. The Palace seats 1,000, with admission of 10 cents. Everybody is getting the business.

Concerning Newport News.

Newport News has several houses doing business, with another soon to open. W. F. Crawl, president and general manager. Southern Motion Pictures Corporation, controls the Academy of Music, seating 1,400, the oldest house in town. The Olympia seats 800, admission 15 to 50 cents, and runs Keith vaudeville and pictures. The Imperial, at present the most up-to-date in town, seats 850, admission 15 and 25 cents. On account of the phenomenal business in town Mr. Crawl will open a new theatre seating 1,000, which will be copied after Moore's Washington Theatre.

I visited William Gordon at the Palace, seating 800, admission 15 and 20 cents. He has had this house two years, going well. He believes the producers are giving better productions.

I dropped into the K. of C. hut and saw a picture screened. It was so old J. E. McGurk, the operator couldn't find the title. I don't know it yet. The boys in uniform enjoyed the picture very much.

The Lynch Enterpises also has a house in Newport News. The Strand has been opened about fifteen weeks, running combination pictures and vaudeville, seating 650, admission 15 and 30 cents. Manager Cohn says the house is playing to capacity. There was a big line on the outside waiting to get in at the time of my visit.

Runs Bank and Theatre.

Raleigh, N. C., has the distinction of having the only theatre in the United States that has a combination movie house and bank doing business on the same premises. In an interview with R. G. Allen, the proprietor, he said the reason for this is the saving of valuable space. Under the old plans of the theatre ten feet of the most valuable land in North Carolina was practically wasted. Five feet on the north side of the lobby was being used for a women's room, five feet was also used for janitor's room. With the change the women's room was eliminated and used for an entrance.

Uses a Booklet.

The New Albany Theatre, Brooklyn, uses a sixteen-page and cover booklet for its program, employing a ready print which lets in its own trade advertising. We show the centre pages, which are given over to the program itself. They get a good display with a clear, light type that is more inviting to the eye than the heavy black letter, and get the same relative display because the lines are kept away from the titles. Most of the smaller subjects are also titled and help to draw. The cover is a simple, but very effective design in red and black, largely effective because so little red is used.

Playing "Weeks."

The Winnipeg, Manitoba, theatres seem to have a run on weeks. Lately the Province advertised a Charles Ray week, with Madge Kennedy at the Gaiety. The bill was changed mid-week as shown. The Province got the better marked display with a two tens, in which the titles were displayed side by side with equal prominence, but the Gaiety, with two tens, had to tier the advertisement, with the result that the second half of the week was thrown into an obscure position. The Province, too, uses some selling talk, where the other house has room only for a line of comment. One is "A love story as sweet as the days of childhood," and the other, "It's the best comedy-drama in which that adorable young actress has ever appeared." Both lines lack argument. Both houses rather slight their current feature, taking only a small portion of the space. The Province dismisses DuBarry with two twelve point lines. The Gaiety gives an inch and three-quarters. Both are well set, but the larger display is by far the better worth while.

A One-Sheet Program.

The Minor Theatre, Arcata, Cal., sends in its program for comment, adding that it knows the cuts are not well suited to the paper used, but that they are the best to be had. The paper is a rough wood stock, 5 by 12½ inches. It is not a news stock, but a rough finish, which accounts for the cuts not taking well. We think that if we ran a program and could not obtain the right sort of cuts, we would use no cuts at all rather than get a blob of ink instead of a portrait. A second cut prints even worse than this, and is the one apologized for. It does not pay to run a cut that will not show up well. Either get one suited to the stock or leave it off. Only a line cut will print well on this stock, and unless these can be had it would be well to use none. We like the arrangement of the program with its side dated days, but think that setting the descriptive matter in an eight point would work better than with the twelve. With no more matter in the form, the eight point could be leaded and would show up better. We would also use an eight point for "Music program includes," holding the title in twelve point as it stands. It is a good idea to play up the song and make this a feature instead of an interruption. More care should be taken with the names. Jewel "Carman" is announced, though most fans will know that it is Carmen and wonder that the management should be so poorly informed. There might be a little more spirit in the announcements. Most of them are a little too placid to arouse any enthusiasm in the mind of the reader who is not a rabid fan. Apart from this the program works very well, but we thing that half the back page could be sold to some local merchant for enough to pay the cost of the double printing if not better, and give half of the blank space for a house talk, making the same stock into a four-page folder at no additional expense. Most merchants will be glad to go into the program, because they know that they will be read, where their own circulars might not gain attention.

Half Tones Again.

Annabel Davidson, of the City, Strand and Rialto theatres, Brockton, Mass., sends in this advertisement, and says that the cut is an example of the cuts supplied by most exchanges. It is, but the point is that what is wanted is not half-tone, but line cuts. Few of the smaller papers can give good results with even a fifty screen half-tone, and the thing to do is to know what your paper will be able to give from a half-tone and not to use them unless you are reasonably certain of good results. The half-tone is no worse than a news half-tone printed on the reverse of the display, showing that the fault lies with the printing rather than with the half-tone. Most companies try to strike a compromise between the newspaper and the program stock, and suit neither exactly, though the other day we got very good results with a "Mickey" cut on coated paper in a fraternal organ. The question is largely local and depends upon the results the newspaper is able to give. The other big fact is that there should be some line work supplied, as well as half-tones, to completely fill the demand. In the case of "Mickey" this has been done. There are four doubles and six singles in line and benday which will come out even in a poorly printed paper, and one of these should have been supplied. If Miss Davidson will turn to pages 18 and 19 of the press book she will find there just what she should have had. The thing to do is to insist upon the right cuts at the time you make your contract.

A Dayton Double.

Here is a nice display Mark M. Gates, managing director of the Dayton Theatre, Dayton, Ohio, used for "Hoop-la" and the second instalment of the "Cannibals" picture. The first "Cannibals" made a record, he writes, and, to make this one easy, he had a story of the circus, which gave him the side show exterior with two paintings that really belonged. But nothing is done in the display to emphasize the fact that this is not a repeat of the first picture other than that "another picture" just below the figure of the savage. That this is a second section and not a repeat should have been made more emphatic, otherwise the design is excellent. It is a four sevens, rather full.

Third Street Again.

After a lapse during which nothing appears to have been used the Third Street Theatre, Easton, Pa., is using a Cahill-Igoe ready-print four-pager, with the house work done neatly in green and photo brown, the latter for cuts. This forms a very effective combination if the green is a dark shade.

Making It Stick.

S. C. Hurley, of the Hayden-Gibson Theatre, Campbellton, New Brunswick, sends in a valentine he recently set out. It will not reproduce, but the idea is excellent. The card is white stock, 5½ by 9, with a huge red heart into which is let a half tone of Chaplin about four inches high. On the face of the heart is printed, "Yours for fun, and fun for all." Below is the legend Charlie Chaplin, the comedy valentine of the screen. In the lower right-hand corner, running off the sheet, is the bust of the comedian with, "I'm coming soon in 'Shoulder Arm'." There is no house signature, for valentines are not signed, and the omission of the house name will help greatly to create the desired effect. Mr. Hurley sends in some other pieces—mostly rather old—which show that he believes in making his stuff stick around. One example is shown here dated last May. The program for a single week runs in one column, with calendars for May and June in the other. Those boxed days are calendar logotypes, cast on a slug. They are to be found in most printing offices or can be bought cheaply, being supplied with logos for the days of the week and month and sufficient numerals to set a month. It makes a neat dating. The same logos are used in another program, which carries alongside a method for calculating interest. Other folders give space for shopping memorandum, with a suggestion of the daily matinees to help out. Always there is the effort to make the program hang around and keep on working. It is not something to be glanced at and thrown down, and some of that matter will cause the cards to be held (still an advertisement for the theatre) long after the week has passed. It is work well done throughout, but the valentine is, we think, the best bet.

For British Film.

These two displays from the Allen Theatre, Toronto, serve chiefly to advertise a British-made film, "Kiddies in the Ruins," for which Jule and J. J. Allen are Canadian handlers. One is three tens and the other four nines, the additional six inches for the latter making a big difference in the value of the display. The film is made by the makers of the British production of "The Better 'Ole," and the smaller advertisement starts off with, "Everybody's anxious to see the successor to 'The Better 'Ole'." We think that this coupling is bad. A story dealing with the desolated children in France has nothing in common with the comedy, and cannot in any sense by a successor. The compositor made a very poor job of the larger space. He has eight solid lines of bold, all capitals, 6½ inches long. Few will stop to read so forbidding a bank. The space is largely thrown away. The line is over-long for upper and lower case, let alone all caps. The best thing in the space is the tab on the house signature. One side reads, "Music you love," and the other, "Pictures you remember"—two very good slogans when taken in conjunction.

A Good Novelty.

Paramount has issued a decidedly attractive novelty for "False Faces" in the form of postcards in colors, which serve as masks. The picture side is printed up with half-masks, with punched eye holes and die-cut noses which can be pushed out with the finger, so that the card may be slipped upon the nose. The address side is printed as a mailing card, with an advertisement for the play and a place for the house advertisement. The stunt is simple, but it will widely advertise the film if the cards come into the children's hands.

Just Right.

The Alhambra Theatre, Shelbyville, Ind., which is a part of a chain of five houses, had an anniversary the other day, and handled it as though it were an event. The cut shows a six nines on the front page of the local paper, with pictures of the house staff and a reader at the side. From its placement it is difficult for the lay reader to tell whether it was a paid advertisement or a tribute to the house. In addition, the program is a four-pager, with a Hennegan colored cover. The same cut is used for the double middle page, with some cracking good house talk on the first page and a program on the fourth, but this, from the back page, is best of all. It is cordial and sincere:

"Come on Over to Our House."

Father invites his business associates to his house to dine:
Mother invites her sewing circle to "my house" to tea;
Little Bobbie tells his boy chums to come over to "my house" and play;
Sister Louise invites her gentleman friend down to "my house to spend the evening."
THIS FRIENDLY THEATRE WELCOMES YOU!

It is this we would like to have you feel about this Theatre—"Your Theatre," if you please.

To make a theatre the best, both orgination and patron must grow to a friendly itimacy, which permits of a free discussion of your amusement likes and dislikes, both in the theatre and in the printed advertisement.

It is our aim and desire to make this such a home-like theatre that every one who enters its doors will feel that it belongs to them in some sense.

Our programs are chosen with but one idea—Calculated to please and increase our ever widening circle of patrons and friends.

LET'S ALL GO!

Coming Attractions.

The Alhambra Offers More.
HER MISTAKE—Evelyn Nesbit Thaw.
GODDESS OF LOST LAKE—Louis Glaum.
HOOP-LA—Billy Rhodes
TWO-GUN BETTY—Bessie Barriscale.
LION AND THE MOUSE—Alice Joyce.

There are two good slogans used, one on the first and the other on the fourth page. One reads, "Our creed: Courtesy, Cheerfulness, Cleanliness," and the other, "Our hobby: Winning new friendships—holding old ones." Both are good pick-ups. The whole spirit of the anniversary stuff is that of rejoicing and hopefulness, and it will do a lot toward cementing friendships.

From Maine.

Maine managers do not seem to be very energetic, and to get material from them is out of the ordinary, but the Star, Westbrook, sends in a nice valentine program for that day, and does it better than usual, at that. It is a four-page folder, 4 by 6, buff stock printed in red and black, and for that day only. They did not merely print up a red heart on the regular program, but got out a special issue. There is a large heart with "Valentine Greetings," the date and house signature on the front, the two inside pages carry the drama and comedy announcements with "A joyous program for a joyous occasion. See it today" on the back. This is sound work, good work, and we think it paid. The regular house program is very like that of the Fifty-sixth street, Philadelphia, printed in a recent issue, but it is set more solidly, yet neatly. For neatness it compares with the Theatre Louisiana, Baton Rouge, which has long stood as the standard of neatness for small type work. It bears the imprint of H. S. Cobb, a local printer, and "printer" means just that in his case. He is a real printer and knows type values as well as a showman. It may not be the best program in the state of Maine, but it is the best planned and printed program we have ever seen come from there. There is nothing fantastic about it, but it is sound work both for composition and press work, and we congratulate the Star management upon having such good work available. But the management is "there" too, for the copy is as good as the printing.

Cost and Effect.

If you pay two dollars for a throw-away and get a poor job, you are apt to lose your two dollars. If you pay four and get something presentable, you may bring in ten dollars' worth of business. It pay to do it well.

Play Stunts.

Compared with three or four years ago there are few good stunts being brought out. Managers seem to be losing their intimate touch with their patrons. What has become of all the birthday book ideas, the anniversary souvenirs and all that sort of thing? They are never reported. Are they still being used? They are still good.

Conducted by F. H. RICHARDSON

Important Notice.

OWING to the mass of matter awaiting publication, it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost), will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar. Both the first and second sets of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

Shutter Position.

W. J. Neff, Reno, Nevada, says:

"Have been following the optical dope closely ever since it started and am glad we now have a lens chart in such simple form as the one published in Dec. 28 issue. As soon as it arrived I got busy. Here is what I now have: 50 amperes D. C., 6.5 and 7.6 condenser lenses spaced 1-16 inch apart. Centre of condenser to aperture 16⅞". 3.75" E. F. Gundlach-Manhattan lenses working at 3 1-32" B. F. Am using regular Power's shutters set as close to lens as it will go, but it still is ¾" ahead of aerial image. Have been able to trim ¼" off main blade. Question now is, if I can get it back to aerial image will saving warrant the change. Table calls for 6.5" from aperture to shutter position, and 7.25 is least can get with this shutter; also aerial image is approximately size of aperture, instead of .7x.55", with shutter in present position and slide carrier not in place. Have two Power's 6As, working at pretty steep pitch (two balconies) with a 16 feet picture at 70 feet. Have been reading the department ever since I started in the business of projection in 1912, and today, Brother Richardson, one can surely see the great improvement your propaganda has worked. My best wishes for your still greater success."

Any improvement is good, and worth perhaps as small a sum as this one would cost. Every bit of light you gain by trimming off the shutter blades is a gain coming many times a second; also you would get a still better balanced shutter. Why not make yourself a shutter to try. Make a wooden hub, using some light weight wood, such as basswood, and blades from stiff cardboard such as business cards are printed on. Such a shutter will last a long time. The size of the aerial image would be slightly greater with the slide carrier removed, but I think you will find by holding a sheet of black paper at the correct shutter position the size will be not far from that given in the table. Three quarters of an inch ahead the ray would be larger, of course. Brother Neff is a member of local union 363, Reno. Wish we had more like him.

Good!

Tom C. Smith, Hamilton, Ontario, orders question booklets and says:

CARBON STUBS WANTED.

Some weeks ago we asked for carbon stubs, both A. C. and D. C., from projectionists using amperage in excess of 60 and up to 100.

The response has not been at all satisfactory. These stubs, which need not be more than an inch long (it is the crater I want), are to be used in extending the lens table from 60 to 100 amperes. Only upper stubs are wanted, and it is imperative that the exact amperage be given.

Surely you can help to that extent. Don't think the "other fellow" will send stubs. DO IT YOURSELF, because there is no danger of having too many. The more the better. Get busy.

"Am enclosing sample of leader I have been using for the past two months. I insert it at the last, after all the names of the others who have had a finger in the pie have appeared. Can you tell me the name of best book on optical work for the projectionist? I want to thank you for the knowledge I have gained from the handbook and from the department."

The leader is something that I certainly approve. The audience is surely very much more interested in who is rendering the play on the screen than who photographed it. As a matter of fact the average theatregoer is merely bored by the long string of names of director, cameraman, artists and near artists. But the projectionist is right there in the theatre with them. He is a fellow townsman, and many would really like to know his name, I would even suggest to the I. A. that the union slide is issued with a clear space, in which the man to whom the slide is issued could insert his name in some prescribed way. As to the book, well, that depends on what you want. There is no book of which I know dealing directly with projection optics, except my own handbook and "Optic Projection," by Simon Henry and Henry Phelps Gage. The latter is $3.00 from Comstock Publishing Co., Ithica, New York. It contains a great deal of valuable data, and is well worth its price to the projectionist, though much of it will have slight value to him.

Hebrews 11th Chapter, 4th Verse.

For title to this article I would respectfully refer readers to last line of above verse. And who do you think is here now? Why, W. S. James, the bold buckoo who started all the light ray mess that has kept us all jumping sidewise for years. He is in Detroit now, and resurrects himself, at least, long enough to inquire:

"Concerning a remark you made with regard to high amperage, I ask the following, the same being prompted by the amount of current used in search lights: As the size of the crater image (D' of the elyconjugate) is always at least approximately the same size, and the crater larger in proportion to the increase of amperage, and the volatization temperture of carbon the same for carbons of same quality, and the luminosity the same per square mm, why is it that the lesser the magnification the greater the light at the aperture does not hold good? In other words, were we to disregard the condenser action, and had a crater the same size as the aperture, then the illumination at the aperture should be the same as the crater, less the loss of the condenser system. Can you show that the condenser system loss curve is as great as the curve of the increased crater size?"

I am not quite sure that I grasp brother James' meaning, but as I understand it he asks why screen illumination does not increase in proportion to increase of amperage. This is a question the answer to which this department has been seeking for some time. It involves many things. In the first place if we accept the theory that back testing shows the available area of crater for use, then the increase of amperage would make no difference at all, unless crater position be changed. But it does not work that way. Then, too, there are those, Lester Bowen among them, who claim that the temperture of the crater may be pushed above normal volatization temperture by high amperage, through a process of "speeding up" in volatization. With this I neither agree or disagree, but do think that the temperture may be raised by reason of the greater mass of incandescent carbon, which naturally acts to remove the surface further from the cooler carbon beneath. But in practice there is another and more serious equation encountered, viz: as amperage in raised the condenser is, if lens system is handled correctly, advanced toward the aperture, which makes for large light loss, if the projection lens diameter is not increased, provided it be not already large enough to accommodate the increased ray diameter. I shall presently present incontrovertible facts on this phase of the matter which will make you who have been sneering at "Richardson's diverging ray" look like twenty-six cents with several punctures.

Answering your last question concretely, the condenser loss is not a fixed quantity. It depends upon (A) percentage of reflection, which, in turn, varies with distance of crater from lens, size of crater, dirt on lens, and polish of surfaces. (B) Thickness of lenses. (C) Distance they are spaced apart, increased spacing making for increased loss very rapidly. (D) Clearness of glass. Your proposition that the spot is always approximately the same size, whereas the crater increases with amperage, raises a point I had not considered, because it is a fact that even with back testing as a basis of crater area used, it seems to me that under those conditions a greater crater area would be represented by the aperture, since the magnification would be less. But then comes in the matter of added loss entailed in securing the smaller magnification and—Well, if any of you chaps can do anything with the matter, go to it. Glad to have our old friend back anyhow.

Projectionists of Alberta Awakened.

Howard Douglas, chief censor Province of Alberta, in course of a personal letter says:

"I have reason to believe you will receive many orders for the handbook within the next few weeks. The propaganda started by this office has awakened the majority of the projectionists in Alberta to the necessity of a deeper knowledge of projection, with result that they are inquiring where the best instruction can be obtained."

We feel highly complimented by the implied meaning of the chief censor, that he is giving the handbook as one of the chief sources of knowledge. We personally believe that the handbook and the Hawkins Electrical Guides should form the base of every projectionist's library. These are the very first works he should secure, and believe me, they will keep him busy for quite some considerable time. These books, supplemented by a study of matters constantly coming up in the projection department, will give the average projectionist absolutely all he can do for a long, long time. I firmly believe the study of these books alone is very much better for the average man than to try to spread his study over more. It is all, or very nearly all, contained in the books named, and in mighty good form too.

Likes the Handbook.

Henry Sorensen, Mechanic, with the Southern Theatre Equipment Company, Dallas, Texas, says:

"Inclosed find price of question booklets. Read your handbook very often and if the questions are as good for the money as the book they certainly are worth what you ask for them. Have sold many of your handbooks and must say they will in some way help the very best of crank-twisters, operators and projectionists included."

Glad you like the handbook, friend Sorensen. The questions are intended as a guide to study—to point out those things the projectionist ought to know, and must know in order to be thoroughly competent.

Strain on the Union.

Recently the projection department of a Canadian trade paper, in speaking of the comparatively low standard of knowledge of his profession possessed by the average projectionist said: "Let us get down to some self dependence (meaning some real knowledge of technical matters as applied to projection. Ed.) and relieve the strain we constantly put upon the union."

Now this is more than usually well put. It is precisely what I have been telling you for years, put in most excellent form. Lack of knowledge does put a strain on your union. It forces the union to carry the whole burden of advancement. It places the union in the position of saying to the exhibitor, "We demand a raise in pay, but we cannot supply thorough competency. Our men lack knowledge, but want more pay. They demand that you do your duty and pay them well, but refuse to do their duty and improve their knowledge so as to supply more efficient service in return for the higher pay."

That is what it really amounts to, is it not? It really is "putting a strain on the union," is it not? My colleague of the Canadian paper has put the thing very well indeed.

Incompetent License Laws.

The editor is in receipt of a communication under the seal of Local Union No. 306 (New York Projectionists) containing draft of a license law which has been presented to the New York City Board of Aldermen for adoption. The proposed law has, we are informed, the opposition of Commissioner Nicholas J. Hayes, who has disapproved it. The writer of the letter says: "Harold Williams and myself have succeeded in having the Committee of General Welfare of the Board of Aldermen, to which the ordinance was referred, bring in a report that the ordinance should be adopted by the City of New York, but Commissioner Hayes seems to be obstinate in the matter. Brother Richardson, I am appealing to on behalf of the members of this organization to do all that you possibly can to help us get this ordinance passed by the Board of Aldermen."

We are sorry gentlemen, but are compelled to decline to support this matter. On the contrary we shall oppose it. The proposed license is incompetent. All that can be said for it is that it is perhaps some improvement on the utterly foolish law we now have. Commissioner Hayes is quite right in opposing it, though I very much doubt he would not even more strongly oppose the law this department would propose. The Commissioner is, so far as I am able to find out, opposed to any competent examination. In this he is perfectly honest. He just simply does not understand the urgent necessity for shutting out the incompetents. The writer firmly believes he could appear before the Commissioner and convince him of the necessity for a really competent ordinance. He believes that he could even more readily convince the Board of Aldermen of the vital necessity for such an ordinance, provided he be allowed to address that body. But most certainly he could not give support to the law now proposed.

Here are some of our objections to the proposed law, as drafted: (a) The word "operator" is retained, which is a deliberate slap in the face of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, of which we are a member. In this the proposed law is not in keeping with up-to-date practice, and we want no laws which are out-of-date to start with. (b) The proposed law fails, utterly, to outline the subjects upon which the candidate shall be examined, which enables the examiners to omit that hugely important subject, "Optics of the Projector," as well as other important subjects, entirely, and makes it quite possible for the examining board to give any sort of examination it may see fit, without regard to the subject heads contained in the profession of projection. (c) The proposed law (Paragraph 3, Section 43) reads: "The Commissioner shall makes rules and regulations governing the examination of applicants and the issuance of licenses and certificates; provided each applicant shall be given a practical examination, under the direction of the Commissioner (?) and an Examining Board which shall consist of two employees of the Electrical Bureau, and a moving picture machine operator who has not less than five years' experience as an operator; the last-named shall serve without compensation."

Um. I can take you into projection rooms in this great city where LICENSED "operators" are working who are utterly, absolutely and entirely ignorant of even the most fundamental knowledge of their profession. They would be no more competent to conduct an examination than we would be to examine a candidate for the professorship of dead languages in Yale College. They are a disgrace to the profession, and it is nothing short of a crime that they hold licenses from the City of New York, declaring them competent projectionists. Yet under this proposed law one of these men could be appointed examiner, and with a commissioner who is opposed, and who might desire to make the law he objects to ridiculous, one of these very men might be appointed.

This department is opposed to the enactment of any more half-baked license laws in this or any other city. It has itself forced the adoption of a rule by the New York City Department, requiring an examination in optics of the projector, though that has, we believe, of late been dropped, as it could be, being merely a rule approved by a commissioner not now in office, instead of a part of the law. We had taken some steps to stir things up down at the Commissioner's office, when we were obliged to go to the hospital, and the thing was perforce dropped. We were not consulted in the drafting of this ordinance, therefore, certianly cannot be expected to support it when we firmly believe it to be entirely incompetent, and in some respects decidedly objectionable.

What we would respectfully suggest is this: First, that leave be asked of the Board of Aldermen to withdraw the proposed law and submit an amended draft. Second, that a committee consisting of the Committee of 306, now in charge of the matter, Will C. Smith of the Powers Company, Edwin S. Porter of the Precision Machine Company, a representative of the Commissioner of Water Supply, Gas and Electricity, and the editor of this department be formed to draft an ordinance to be presented as a substitute for the present one.

With such a committee we believe we can present to the Board of Aldermen an ordinance which will be a real ordinance, and will have the united support of us all. Having done so it might be well to put forth an effort to enlist the sympathy of the daily papers for this proposed ordinance, and we have no doubt but that such sympathy could be enlisted.

I am sorry, gentlemen, to have to reply to your request for help thus, but it is no one's fault but your own. This department would not support a thing which it believed to be wrong, even though it came from the editor's own father. We are only sorry the local did not present this proposed law to us while it was in the forming, so that our objections thereto could have been submitted and considered.

Not Self Satisfied.

R. I. McClain, Johnstown, Pennsylvania, orders a handbook and says:

"Am starting in on my eleventh year as a crank-twister, and often wonder if I will ever be an A 1 honest to Gawd projectionist. Seriously, friend Richardson, I don't think I have finished a show in the last ten years that I was perfectly satisfied with. As to repairing and a knowledge of the mechanical end of the work (machine operating. Ed.) I can hold up my end with the best, but it is the artistic possibilities (projectionist. Ed.) which seem to be always just a little beyond reach. However, I will keep on plugging, and have several suggestions to submit later on, when I have a chance to make some pictures."

Neighbor McClain you will, or should succeed. Your suggestions will be welcome. Shoot 'em along. I say you should succeed because you are not one of those self-satisfied, cheerful idiots, who imagine there is nothing further to learn. The woods is full of that sort of critter. He can see nothing in his profession beyond the meager store of knowledge he already has, rather accidentally, accummulated. He sneers at "artistic projection" and turns up his nose at suggestions for improvement. The sight of a textbook on projection almost gives him hydrophobia and the projection department is to him an abomination. His one-idea brain is centered on pay day, and how little he can do in return for the union scale and get away with it. As to anything above the union scale being obtained through sheer ability, why, to him it just simply could not be. He is self satisfied, hence does not progress. But the man who is not self satisfied—who can see faults in his own work, who realizes the fact that there is room for improvement and is not too lazy or indifferent to make the necessary effort to improve, will surely forge ahead, provided he hides not his light under a bushel. He must not "brag" BUT, without doing that he can quietly show to the manager or the exhibitor those things wherein his knowledge has worked improvement, and in due course this will be an effective argument for something more than the union scale. And the argument will succeed unless you are unfortunate enough to work for one of these one-idea managers. But even then there is vast satisfaction in the knowledge that one knows his business and is a projectionist, in all that term implies; also there are other employers and better jobs which may be had if one can prove himself extra competent. You are on the right track, brother. Stick to it and success will come.

Damaged Film.

The Visual Instruction Service of the Iowa State College submits samples of film and asks what is wrong. The film is faded badly in a wide section through its centre—in fact through all its width except an irregular strip on either side, which varies in width.

It is difficult to correctly diagnose the difficulty, but it is one of two things, either smearing with oil of such nature that it has set up chemical action, or, (B) improper washing after development. I incline to the first assumption, because the spotted effect of the fading and the fact that it has not taken place the full width of the film, but only on that area subject to highest degree of heat from the light ray. If the film has at no time been smeared with oil for a considerable time, then the trouble is to be found in cause B. That is, I think, certain.

An Open Letter to Hugo Riesenfeld.

Dear Mr. Riesenfeld: You now occupy the position of Managing Director of two of the foremost photoplay theatres of this country. In fact, I might not perhaps exaggerate by saying the foremost theatres of the world. These theatres, the Rivoli and Rialto, occupy their exalted position purely by reason of merit. They have been leaders in many innovations, and in excellence of artistic beauty of decoration, splendid lighting effects and excellence of both motion picture and musical program they certainly are unexcelled.

And now, my dear Mr. Riesenfeld, I would like, in all friendliness, to ask you a question. I prefer to ask it publicly because of the fact that a very large percentage of theatre managers offend (if I may use the term) in the same way you are offending, and the question to you, the Managing Director of the Rivoli and Rialto, will serve as a question to them as well. I ask this question, believing it to be a right and proper one, also because the Moving Picture World has had very much to do with spreading the fame of the two theatres named, and has repeatedly held them up as an example for others to follow.

In looking over your program for the Rivoli and Rialto I notice that, while the name of your orchestra leaders still appear thereon, you have eliminated that of your projectionists, only one of whom was, by the way, ever named. And now for my question:

Do you, Mr. Riesenfeld, really consider this as being good practice? True, there is more than one projectionist in these theatres, but also there are two orchestra leaders, or directors, each of whom is named, and the names of even four projectionists would not take up much room. Do you not think the public is as much entitled to know who renders the picture on the screen as it is in who leads the rendition of the music. Don't you think the public is just as deeply interested in knowing who renders a one-hundred-thousand-dollar production on the screen as it is in who directed the production, who photographed it and who controls the music which accompanies it?

But there is a deep-rooted reason why I ask this question. Recently in conversation with a projectionist in a very high-class theatre—no matter where—I took him to task because he did not remain constantly at the port, watching his screen and changing the tempo of projection to bring out all the beauty of each scene. And here was his answer:

"Mr. Richardson, I freely grant that your criticism is just; that I should do that very thing, that such work as that requires intense application. It is very wearing. It is like all other high-class work—exacting—and, with all due respect to you, Mr. Richardson, the management does not pay for that kind of service; also, it gives us no encouragement whatever to excel. Our salary is the union scale for this class of house, which is NOT based on high-class service, but on what an organization can get for all its members alike. Second, we get absolutely no recognition before the public, hence are unable to build up a reputation for high-class work. The name of the director, the actors and the photographer, all of whose efforts depend, in the end, upon the excellence of our work, are duly displayed on the screen. Even the ushers' photographs appear there for an instant. The public is carefully informed as to who the orchestra leader is, but we, who are directly responsible for the excellence of at least two-thirds of the show, remain absolutely unknown to our audiences. At Christmas time we are handed a bit of money—exactly the same amount as the ushers get.

"Mr. Richardson, I am disgusted and discouraged. I intend to quit the profession, as soon as I can locate myself in some other where effort to excel will be appreciated and where I will not be placed on the level with the ushers and scrub women."

And Mr. Riesenfeld, I had little to say in reply, for the man was absolutely RIGHT. Please understand, I am NOT intending to criticize. I am calling your attention, and the attention of other theatre managers and exhibitors to a thing which operates to the decided lowering of the screen result all over the country. Most men will work very hard to excel if they feel their efforts are appreciated. The projectionist stands next in importance to the manager himself in the scheme of affairs in a motion picture theatre. Failure to give him proper recognition is a tremendously costly thing to the motion picture industry. Many managers have awakened to that fact, and are now doing the right thing, but, doubtless through not having given the matter that deep thought it deserves, others are not.

In closing, allow me to again say this mater is taken up in the most friendly spirit. I am asking from you and from other theatre managers nothing but plain, simple justice for the projectionist. I am asking it for the reason that its granting will react to the immense benefit of the industry and to the benefit of the screen result in the individual theatre as well.

Boylan Even Tension Reel.

R. J. Dwyer, Koch, Missouri, sends in page from "Popular Mechanics" containing picture and brief description of change-over signal device for motion picture projectors. He asks:

"By the way, whatever happened to the "Boylan Even Tension Reel," which you at one time recommended. Some months back you said there would be forthcoming, from the company supposed to manufacture them, an announcement, but thus far we have failed to see it. Have they decided not to place the reel on the market?"

You are at liberty to search me, friend Dwyer. The reel in question was sponsored by one George R. Collins, Salisbury, North Carolina, who informed us a company was preparing to place the reel on the market at once, and that an announcement would be forthcoming soon. That was, if I mistake not, sometime in 1917. What happened I do not know. Maybe it was the war. I am today writing Mr. Collins in an endeavor to find out. If any information is obtained it will be published. As to the change—over signal, it was described in this department long, long ago. It is old tin-foil contact scheme, which never gained favor with projectionists.

Society Motion Picture Engineers' Meeting.

The Society of Motion Picture Engineers will hold its spring meeting at the Adelphia Hotel, Philadelphia, Pa., April 14, 15 and 16. We are promised a most interesting program of papers. The meeting has been lengthened to three days because of late, two days have not been sufficient to transact the business of the society. Will C. Smith and J. C. Moulton are the committee on arrangements. The papers committee consists of R. P. Burrows, John Allison and Max Mayer. We don't envy them their job. The membership committee, headed by A. C. Roebuck, is doing good work. H. A. Campe, Pittsburgh, Pa., is president of the society.

Argus Has New York Office.

The Argus Lamp and Appliance Company, Cleveland, Ohio, has established a branch office in New York City, which same will be in charge of W. C. Wing. Mr. Wing has been decorated with the title "District Manager." The office will be at 45 West 34th street. It will handle a full line of Argus specialties, including the DeVry portable projectors. Welcome to our city.

Addresses Wanted.

This department has occasional inquiries for addresses of dealers in motion picture supplies in various cities or parts of the country. For instance, just now a large manufacturer asks addresses of all reliable dealers on the Pacific Coast.

My records in this are a bit out of date. Will dealers kindly send me a letterhead, so that I may get an up-to-date list of addresses?

MANY NEW DETROIT HOUSES ARE PLANNED

All the Present Theatres Are Doing Such Good Business That They Are Almost Unpurchasable

DETROIT will soon boast of many new theatres—all of the larger size and most modern type. Already the Motor City has 135 theatres devoted exclusively to motion pictures, and everyone of them is doing a good business and cannot be bought except at a stiff price. Weather conditions and industrial conditions in Detroit have been ideal since the first of January and as a result the attendance at the movies has been unusually large.

John H. Kunsky, who already operates a circuit of ten houses, is having plans drawn for a theatre downtown that will seat 3,000; one in Highland Park that will seat about 1,800 and two on the west side of the city that will accomodate about 1,500 people each. He fully expects to break ground for some of them early in the summer.

George Harrison, manager and a large stockholder in the Jefferson theatre, in Fairview district, Detroit, is having plans drawn for a 2,000 seat house, one block northeast of the present house. It will probably have a combination policy of vaudeville and pictures. Ground will be broken for the new house very shortly.

In Hilldale, George Brookins is having plans completed so that work can start at once on a new house in that city to seat 800 people.

George Nichols, of the Superba Theatre and manager of the Isis in Grand Rapids, is having plans drawn for a house in the Furniture City that will seat 2,000 people, and will be exclusively for high-class first-run motion pictures. The theatre proper will be in the rear of the Superba.

The Columbia Theatre in Grand Rapids is being remodeled into a first-class motion picture house and will re-open soon under the name of the Temple.

Floyd S. Wadlow, of the Virginia Theatre, Detroit, is preparing for the erection of a new and much larger theatre several miles north of his present location, on the same thoroughfare.

Sidney Alexander, with offices in the Penobscot building, is getting ready for a new theatre on Oakmand Boulevard, Detroit, that will seat about 900.

On Kercheval avenue, Detroit, George Spink will build a new house that will seat about 1,800.

Herb Weil, of Port Huron, who controls every house in that town is having plans drawn for a new house that will seat 2,000.

"Mickey" Goes Right Along.

"Mickey" continues to be the sensation of Detroit so far as sucessful bookings are concerned, and breaking house records. Everybody is asking "Why is it?" Some say it's because "Mickey" is a freak picture—it is something no one can really explain, but the fact remains that no picture ever caused as much talk and interest as "Mickey." And the best part of it all is that people like the picture and boost for it. For the first time in the history of these houses, the Colonial, Liberty and Lakewood theatres are repeating it, while John H. Kunsky has booked it for a week at his Washington theatre, after it has played other first-run houses—something unheard of before in motion picture bookings, as far as Detroit is concerned. Joe Horwitz, who owns the Michigan rights, now has five prints booked solid.

Michigan Notes.

Howard O. Pearce, who is managing director of Liberty theatres, will return to Detroit about the first of April.

Nat Lefkowitz, Fox salesman for many months in Detroit, has resigned to engage in the state rights basis. He has bought the Michigan rights to "The Spoilers."

E. V. McGrath, of the Knickerbocker Theatre, Detroit, is back after spending three weeks taking the mineral baths at Mt. Clemens.

Herb Weil, of Port Huron, is back from an extended vacation at French Lick Springs.

The Standard Film Service, Film Building, Detroit, is now the Michigan distributor for the products of the Educational Film Corporation, and will do all of the selling and booking, in addition to the distributing.

Harry Abbott, former Detroit manager for the Educational, will shortly announc a new connection.

George Guise is now doing the publicity for the Majestic Theatre, Detroit, coming here from Minneapolis.

A. J. Gillingham, of the Empire Theatre, Detroit, is on an extended tour of the West.

The Garson Photoplays, Inc., has been capitalized under the state laws of Michigan, the stockholders being Harry Garson, Art Blankmeyer and Phil Gleichman. They will exploit in Michigan the "Unpardonable Sin." Three prints have been secured and engagements will be on percentage only for the present. Offices have been established at 53 East Elizabeth St.

Cincinnati News Letter

Keith Addition Under Way.

THE plans for the construction of large additions, including an office building, to the Keith theatre on Walnut street, are progressing in a most businesslike manner. The wrecking of the several buildings which lie between the present theatre and the alley on the south has started, and before long the contractors will start work on what is promised to be one of the most ambitious theatrical projects initiated in Cincinnati in a number of years.

New Projection Machine to Be Marketed.

McGraw, of San Francisco, who has come to Cincinnati for that purpose. The Eagle Mfg. C., on Blue Rock avenue, will make the machine for the film company.

ORGANS ARE IN DEMAND IN KANSAS CITY

The Only Trouble That the Dealers Experienced Is to Secure Enough Instruments to Go Around

MUSIC dealers of Kansas City state that the demand for organs from moving picture theatres in this territory is far in excess of the supply. They are unable to furnish the goods. The Wurlitzer company, however, has placed half a dozen or more recently. The New Strand in Tulsa, Okla., has recently purchased a Wurlitzer theatre orchestra at a cost of $3,500, and the Princess in Eufaula, Okla., one for $1,800. The New Central in Oberlin, Kan., now has a $2,000 Wurlitzer and the Palace in Pittsburgh, Kan., one for $1,800. Several of smaller size have been installed in theatres of Kansas City, Kan., and the suburbs of Kansas City.

Garden Will Copy the Strand.

Improvements and remodeling estimated at $100,000 will be made in Marcus Loew's Garden Theatre this spring. The interior of the Garden will be remodeled along the lines of the Strand in New York City. A New House Is Planned.

The Electric Theatre in Kansas City, Kan., is planning to build a house that will seat 1,200 people and is only awaiting the arrival of the steel to begin work. The new theatre will be equipped for legitimate productions and motion pictures, and when completed the Electric will be quite an improvement upon the old Electric when it was started fourteen years ago. It was opened in a saloon and had nothing but a screen, some wooden kitchen chairs, a motion picture machine and a rusty stove.

Mutual's New Manager.

Earl McAvoy has been promoted to the position of manager of the Kansas City branch house of the Mutual. He began at the bottom of the business and has worked up to his present position. First in the shipping room he made good. Later, in charge of southern Kansas, he materially increased the Mutual business. Before entering the moving picture business he was upon the vaudeville stage for a number of years, traveling from coast to coast.

Failed to Advertise.

The Christian Science play, "A Still Small Voice," came to Kansas City and passed almost unnoticed. The contract was made for it by the Twelfth Street Theatre in a hurry and the play was put on without any advertising. Had it been properly promoted, brought to the attention of the many Christian Scientists who are in the city, it would have made a decided sensation.

The stage and auditorium scenes which figure prominently in the story were shot in a theatre, not a studio set, with an eager audience out in front, recruited from among the fans of the vicinity.

Miss Fisher's leading man is again Emory Johnson. Roy W. Neill, a new acquisition to the "Flying A" corps, is the director.

PITTSBURGH TO HAVE NEW FILM CENTRE

Paramount, Metro, Universal and Also the Pathe Exchanges Will Locate at 1018 Forbes Street

THE Paramount-Artcraft Corporation, located at the corner of Penn avenue and Twelfth street, Pittsburgh, has taken a fifteen-year lease on the large fire-proof building at 1018 Forbes street, which will be remodeled as a film building at once, in order that it may be occupied May 1.

Other exchanges will also be located in the building, the Paramount having sublet space to the Metro, Universal and Pathe exchanges.

The building is now occupied by the Bunting Mattress Company. It is five stories, 50x100 feet, with the exception of the first floor and basement, which, on account of being built on the hillside, is not as large as the upper floors.

Paramount will occupy the fourth and fifth floors; Universal the third floor; Metro the second floor and Pathe the first floor and basement.

It is likely that another film building will be erected in the vicinity of the Paramount building, as there is an abundance of comparatively cheap property close by. That more space will be needed is an assured fact, as the World and a number of independent exchanges now located at 938 Penn avenue, will be obliged to seek new quarters.

The new location will tend to make the film exchanges still more scattered over the city. With the Seltzer Building at Twelfth street, and the film colony at Fourth and Ferry, the new offices of the four of the most prominent exchanges will necessitate some traveling for the exhibitor when he comes to town.

Sliter Honors St. Patrick.

If any of the local or out-of-town exhibitors missed the office of the Exhibtors Mutual on their way down Fourth avenue on St. Patrick's Day it wasn't Manager Sliter's fault, for the color scheme on the exterior of the building was a shamrock green, and he had the painters at work on St. Patrick's Day. Talk about timeliness! Sliter has gone Kent, of Cincinnati, one better in emphasizing the slogan, "Follow the Green Trail to Mutual."

The interior and exterior decorating and painting of this exchange is now completed, and it is the contention of many that the Mutual now has the classiest film exchange in Pittsburgh. Manager Sliter is very original and has installed many novel features, such as photo frames built right on the wall, attractive display windows, etc.

Pittsburgh Has Another Exchange.

MOXLEY RESIGNS REGENT MANAGERSHIP

Russell Theatre of Ottawa Will Be the Field of His Amusement Activities in Near Future

JAMES T. MOXLEY, manager of the Regent Theatre, Ottawa, Ont., is severing his connection with Messrs. Jule and J. J. Allen, who control the Regent Theatre, to take over the Russell Theatre, which is the only theatre in Ottawa playing legitimate attractions. Mr. Moxley will formally take over the Russell on September 1 next, but in the meantime he proposes to make a considerable number of changes in the house.

The Russell has been enjoying only fair success as it has been dark a great deal of the time during the past winter. Mr. Moxley announces that he will adopt a combination policy for the theatre. He will play road shows whenever he can get them, but at other times he will book leading features. He also intends to employ a large orchestra, and one of the attractions of the moving picture programs will be solo numbers by prominent artists.

The Russell Will Be Renovated.

The Russell needs considerable renovating and this will be carried out immediately. The theatre is on a side street, but arrangements are being made for an entrance and runway from Sparks street, the main thoroughfare, and a large electric sign will be erected over the new entrance.

Under the management of Mr. Moxley the Regent Theatre has become one of the best-paying investments of the Allen Theatrical Enterprises, and he has built up quite a friendship among theatre patrons of the Canadian capital.

A short time ago it was announced that Pantages' vaudeville would be seen at the Russell, inasmuch as Alex Pantages has entered into an arrangement with A. J. Small, lessee of the Russell Theatre and owner of a circuit of theatres in Ontario. It now appears that the contract between Pantages, Miles, of Detroit, and Small, of Toronto, does not affect the Russell.

Negro Gets Nominal Damages.

A law suit of unusual interest to theatre managers of the Province of Quebec has just been settled in the Montreal courts. A negro sued Loew's Montreal Theatre, Ltd., for $500 damages because he was refused permission to occupy a seat on the orchestra floor of the theatre after a ticket of admission for the orchestra floor had been accepted from him by the doorkeeper. An usher instructed him to take a gallery seat.

Picture Man Pays Ten Dollars.

Judgment was issued by Justice Fortin for the plaintiff and the defendant company was ordered to pay $10 to the man and also to pay the costs of the action.

The defense of the company was that one of the printed conditions under which tickets are sold to the public is that the contract represented by the sale of the ticket may be revoked if desired. The judge pointed out that this rule did not hold good after the ticket had been accepted by the ticket-taker and the purchaser had been admitted to the theatre. The judge reduced the damages, however, because of the admission on the part of the plaintiff that he knew that he would not be permitted to occupy a seat in the orchestra floor and that he had purchased the ticket for the purpose of entering action against the company. The judge ruled that he was only entitled to nominal damages, but the company would have to pay the costs of the case.

Making Railway Strike Film at Trenton.

Justice Fortin pointed out that in Canada colored people are governed by the same laws as the white citizens and that they enjoy the same rights as the whites.

Announcement has been made that the moving picture studio at Trenton, Ont., formerly the home of the defunct Canadian National Features, Ltd., has been reopened for the making of several film features, one of which is a railway strike story. It is understood that this production is being financed by the Canadian Pacific Railway or officials associated with the great Canadian railroad system. Intimation is also given that the leading role in this feature will be portrayed by Tyrone Power. Charles Brownridge, who was the general manager of the old company at Trenton, is back on the job at the studio for the making of the new releases.

Half Million Dollar Home for Winnipeg.

M. Hellman, representing the Universal Film Company, visited Winnipeg, Manitoba, on March 11, for the purpose of arranging details for the erection of a $500,000, moving picture theatre in that city. According to Mr. Hellman, the house will have a seating capacity of 2,500. This will be the second theatre in Canada to be controlled by Universal interests, and it is the intention of the company to build up a chain of large theatres throughout the United States and Canada for the purpose of taking care of first run Universal productions, according to an announcement made by Mr. Hellman. Almost simultaneously with the visit of Mr. Hellman came the announcement that Joseph Kelly, president of the J. J. McLean Music Co., had sold a large site on Donald street, in the heart of the retail shopping district, to the Allen Theatrical Enterprises for the proposed new Allen Theatre in Winnipeg.

Wanted to See Himself on Screen.

At the recent presentation of "Intolerance" at the Dominion Theatre, Winnipeg, Manitoba, a rather singular incident occurred when a soldier in the uniform of the Fort Garry Horse, the Canadian Cavalry Regiment, presented himself at the box office and asked if he could see himself on the screen. The soldier was Sergeant Alfred Paget, 6 feet 2 inches high in his stocking feet. It developed that he had portrayed the role of "Belshazzar" in the big Griffith spectacle. He had been serving with the Canadian forces for a year and a half. Incidentally, he is a veteran of the Boer war also, having served with the Royal Horse Guards during that scrap. He expects to be mustered out soon and is planning on returning to California to resume his picture work. His wife, who is an actress, is also in Winnipeg.

"Copping" a Millionaire's Daughter.
William Russell's smile does it in American's "Brass Buttons."

"The Heart of Humanity" Ran Four Weeks.

The Jewel special, "The Heart of Humanity," enjoyed a run of no less than four weeks at the Holman Theatre, Montreal. This theatre, which is controlled by Universal interests, had the first Canadian run of this attraction.

Following the presentation of this picture the theatre changed its policy with respect to the number of changes of program each week. The previous arrangement had been to change the bill twice each week, but it will now be three times weekly, new shows being presented on Sundays, Wednesdays and Fridays.

Allens Are Building Right Along.

Shortly after announcing plans for the erection of a $200,000 moving picture theatre on St. Clair Avenue, Toronto, Messrs. Jule and J. J. Allen made known the first details of a plan to erect another large suburban theatre on Queen Street West, in the Parkdale district, to seat 1,500 persons. The Allens have just opened one large new theatre on Bloor Street, are finishing another big place on Danforth Avenue, and have announced their intention to build two more houses —all in Toronto alone.

Scott Confers with Ottawa Exhibitors.

Thomas Scott, of Toronto, general secretary of the Motion Picture Exhibitors Protective Association of Ontario, conferred with the exhibitors of Ottawa on March 21 and discussed with them various phases of organization work. The Ottawa exhibitors are organized as a branch of the Retail Merchants' Association of Ontario, but there are indications that the theatre men of the Canadian capital will throw in their lot with the real exhibitors' organization in the Ontario province.

Harry Price Will Go to England.

Harry Price, Winnipeg manager of Regal Films, Limited, has announced his intention to move to England, where he will continue to engage in the film business. He has been succeeded at Winnipeg by David Freeman.

Short Notes.

Professor Metcalfe, formerly the organist of the Province Theatre, Winnipeg, has become quite a tourist. After presiding at the concert organ of the Province for two years Metcalfe went to Brooklyn last fall. His next move, taken a few days ago, was to Vancouver, B. C., where he has become the organist of the Rex Theatre.

The first important presentation of "The Heart of Humanity" in the Province of Ontario was the showing of the feature at the Grand Theatre, Hamilton, during the week of March 17. The picture drew great crowds all through the week. The feature was screened twice daily at special prices.

Paramount Theatres, Ltd., of Toronto, a subsidiary of Regal Films, Ltd., has added to its chain of theatres in Eastern Canada by the acquisition of the Royal Theatre, Peterboro, Ont. Manager Pappus will remain in charge of the house.

Mrs. Griesman, owner of the Brighton Theatre, Toronto, has taken over the Parkview Theatre, Roncesvalles avenue, Toronto. Both theatres are in the heart of the Parkdale district in the West End.

Sammy Fine has disposed of the Dundas Playhouse, Toronto, which he took over last fall. This theatre will now be under the management of H. Carpol.

When the moving picture theatre at Midland, Ontario, owned by A. Bugg, was destroyed by fire, the Regal Films, Limited, Toronto, lost twelve reels of pictures, including a print of "My Four Years in Germany."

Sidney Clarke Is in Italy.

SIDNEY R. CLARKE, former secretary of the Rochester Chamber of Commerce, is now cinema director in Italy for the Community Motion Picture Bureau. Since the signing of the armistice the clamor for motion pictures in Italy has increased to such an extent that during the month of January 1,610 shows were given, which means entertainment for 482,000 soldiers. American, English and French markets are combed for film to supplement what can be obtained in Italy. When Mr. Clarke returns he will wear a war cross for bravery on the Italian front.

Strand Has a Kiddies' Day."

For two weeks Miss Florence Fennyvessey, manageress of the Strand Theatre, announced that Saturday would be "Kiddies Day." It looked as if about all of the kids in the city turned out to be her guests and see "Little Red Riding Hood" and like pictures, but the surprise came when each youngster on leaving was presented with a book of fairy tales. Miss Fennyvessey has such an event for the little ones at regular intervals, and says that she is sure that her house is the most popular in the city with the families of many kids—all of which helps swell the box office receipts.

Fisher Leases Canandaigua House.

F. C. Fisher, proprietor of the Fisher Theatre, Seneca Falls, has leased the Temple Theatre, Canandaigua, with the privilege of purchasing it. The Temple has been showing vaudeville and pictures. George Bachman, who has been resident manager of the Fisher, will manage both houses.

WASHINGTON FILM MEN WILL AID LOAN

The Exchange Managers' Association Will Work Along Lines of Last Year's Distribution Plans

IF the Treasury Department furnishes the films on time there will be no hitch in the distribution of the Victory Loan features in this territory. Plans for handling them were worked out at a meeting of the Washington Exchange Managers' Association along the lines adopted last year, when the association inaugurated a model service. The work will be handled through a committee of which Sidney B. Lust is chairman. Associated with him are A. Dresner and S. J. Flax. Clarence L. Linz will serve in an advisory capacity and look after a part of the publicity.

A Committee Will Handle Bookings.

All bookings will be handled by a committee consisting of A. C. Eckhart, of the Famous Players-Lasky Company; Gerald A. Payne, Fox Film Corporation, and Arthur Van Dyke, of Exhibitors Mutual. These men are bookers of long experience, and can be counted upon to move as smoothly as possible the two hundred films allotted to this territory.

For the purpose of marketing these films, the Washington territory has been extended so that it will consist of District of Columbia, Maryland, Virginia, Delaware and North and South Carolina. All film activities will be under the supervision of Harry Webb, manager of the Parkway Theatre in Baltimore, who will be the film chairman of the Victory Loan Committee for this section.

Reels Sent Out in Advance of Release.

It is planned to shoot the reels out one week before they are to be released. Each reel will be routed, and, where instructions do not accompany the film, the exhibitor will be notified by telegraph where to send it next. Oscar A. Morgan, manager of the Famous Players Exchange, one of the men who has been instrumental in perfecting the system, expresses the belief that in following out the plans made one hundred per cent. of bookings will be obtained on each film. Mr. Morgan is secretary of the Washington Exchange Managers' Association, and is co-operating with Mr. Lust's committee in carrying out the plan.

Lenten Business Was Good.

All of the Washington exhibitors are in accord over the statement that the Lenten season has not materially affected the motion picture business. The first week found the box office receipts somewhat lessened, but soon the same old line in front of the box office appeared, and even the houses with mediocre shows have been doing well. Exhibitors are well pleased with the way in which the attendance at the theatres keeps up. They declare they have to pack them in in order to be able to meet expenses and pay the various war taxes.

Lambden Will Boost Sales.

Thomas Lambden, formerly manager of the Solax Theatre, Baltimore, Md., has been appointed head of the advertising accessory department of the Famous Players-Lasky Exchange here. Mr. Lambden, with a knowledge of the exhibiting end of the business obtained from his connection with the theatres as manager, will be able to help the exhibitor patrons of the exchange to a considerable extent. He is going to try and show them how to put on their shows to the best advantage.

Reese Will Manage Two Houses.

BUSINESS IS VERY GOOD IN LOUISVILLE

Exhibitors and Exchangemen Are Cleaning Up on More Than Satisfactory Lenten Attendance

BUSINESS with Louisville exhibitors and exchanges is better than it has been for months past, as the loss of business resulting from the Lenten season is being equalized by the fact that influenza is no longer dangerous, and the finest spring weather on record is bringing the people out. Saturday and Sunday evenings found long lines at most of the local theatres, the Alamo and Majestic being especially busy. The exchanges report that conditions out in the state are excellent again, with all houses running and steadily increasing their showings.

At Lexington and Winchester, as well as Irvine, the theatres have been doing an excellent business due to the large floating popualtion that has been brought in by the oil industry, and which is constantly seeking amusement. # HIGHER ADMISSIONS WORK WELL IN IOWA

Leading Exhibitors of the Hawkeye State Now Favor Policy of Real Money for Good Pictures

THAT 25-cent and 50-cent prices are O. K. in Des Moines for good pictures seems to be the feeling of Abe Frabkle, who starts a week's run of "The Shepherd of the Hills" at that figure at the Rialto. Bill O'Hare, press agent of the house, has put over a smashing advertising campaign. Longer runs and high prices for the real ones seems to be the prevailing idea locally following the big returns on "The Eyes of the World," "The Heart of Humanity" and others.

Cedar Rapids and Sioux City See the Light.

A. J. Diebold, of Cedar Rapids, and M. Weil, of Sioux City, were recent Des Moines visitors. Both report that business is booming in their respective cities, and that they are getting higher admission prices for longer runs than ever before. "I believe that the time is coming when we will do fewer shows a day at higher prices, with fine music and short reels to fill out a program," said Mr. Diebold. "I know this is coming in Cedar Rapids and that our public is willing to pay more money than ever before for the proper kind of a program properly exploited and presented." Mr. Weil looks for the week's run on the big ones at Sioux City, and is already running many subjects four and five days, where two years ago three changes a week was the ironclad policy of the house.

"The Heart of Humanity" Gets Record.

So successful was the first week's run of "The Heart of Humanity" at the Palace, where Universal bought the house and showed the picture at 25 cents and 50 cents admission, that A. H. Blank purchased the picture for the second week at a record price in Des Moines, and will continue the run for seven days longer. The picture went over with a bang, and indications point to a tremendous second week's business. General manager of the "Heart's" shows in the Middle West, James V. Bryson, is delighted with the Des Moines run.

Blank Contracts for First Runs.

To take care of his rapidly increasing string of theatres, A. H. Blank has contracted for first-run Fox pictures for his Des Moines houses. He will divide the service up between the Garden, the Palace and the new Des Moines to open early in the summer. Mr. Blank has also signed for the Exhibitors Mutual stars for use locally. The deals for these pictures were closed through Manager Sid Mayer, of the Omaha office of Fox, and Manager Bob Ballantyne, of Exhibitors Mutual. The first Fox pictures will be run in the Blank houses in May.

Yamada and Kaiti, the Japanese owners of the Atlas Theatre in Seattle, have just opened a new motion picture house in Tacoma, which is to be called the Angel. The house seats 350, and has been equipped with the latest in projection. The H. A. Johnson Company, of Seattle, furnished the two Power's 6-B's and the motor generator set.

Hill and Hudson Buying More Houses.

C. F. Hill and Ed. I. Hudson, two Seattle film men, who bought the two theatres in Albany, Ore., last summer, have bought the Atlas Theatre in Roseburg and have closed it for two weeks for repairs and redecorating before opening under the new management. They have also acquired control of the Rialto, Medford, Ore.

Put on "Barbary Coast" at the Auditorium.

The Liberty and the Clemmer theatres in Spokane combined to play the "Fall of the Barbary Coast" at the Auditorium, Spokane's largest legitimate theatre, and the picture broke all records ever made by a motion picture in Spokane.

Items of Trade Interest.

W. C. Walker, who exports films to Java and the Straits Settlements, reports that the motion picture business in that part of the world is flourishing.

George Bessinger, long known in Seattle as the manager of the Union Theatre, has bought the Gem from O. S. Anderson. Mike Lyons bought the Union from Mr. Bessinger several weeks ago.

Nazimova's "Out of the Fog" has been the most successful of her plays shown at the Clemmer Theatre, and they have all gone over well.

H. B. Warner in a Story of the Desert and Caravans

NO MYSTERY equals the mystery of the desert, and no group of men are as mysterious as the lurking, wandering bands of Arab brigands. In "The Man Who Turned White," which will be especially notable because it brings back to the screen in the Jesse D. Hampton productions H. B. Warner, the elusive and sensational tactics of these fast-riding Arabic raiders will be shown.

It is a tale of the desert and caravan, of weird Arabic towns in which the East never blends with the West, of men as unpitying as they are daring and of love as primitive as it is dangerous.

In the role of Captain Rand of the Foreign Legion, who transforms himself into Ali Zaman, the leader of a band of desert marauders, Mr. Warner has a role that has given him full opportunity to live up to his reputation of being one of the most finished actors in America.

"The Man Who Turned White" was written especially for Mr. Warner's Hampton debut, and work on the production has proceeded so far in California as to permit of the prediction that it will be the most successful photoplay from an artistic and story viewpoint, at least, the noted actor has ever appeared in.

Make Record Booking on "Humanity" Film.

What is claimed as a record for booking a film attraction was established recently by Henry Huber, of the New York Universal exchange. Huber booked "The Heart of Humanity" into ten theatres within a radius of two square miles for showings during the same week. Eight of the theatres played the attraction the first four days of the week and the remaining two presented the attraction the last half of the week. The theatres to show the film within the week were the Metropolis, Colonial, Wonderland, Spooner, Elsmere, Pictorial, Elkwood, Model, Concourse and Paradise.

These bookings followed an eight weeks' presentation of the film at the Broadway Theatre, showings in each of the Loew theatres of the city and over a score of other bookings.

"The Better 'Ole" A Crashing Hit in Chicago.

The following wire was received by Ricord Gradwell, president and general manager of the World Film Corporation, from a representative of World Pictures in Chicago: "With a steady rain all day 'The Better 'Ole' opened at the Rose Theatre Monday to the best Monday business the house has done in months. The combined receipts of two other houses in the same block owned by the same people and playing pictures of best known stars, failed to equal 'Better 'Ole' business by one hundred dollars. One of our best known newspaper critics after looking at the picture, summed it up by saying it is such great fun of strange fashion that it has a distinct appeal that is of lasting qualities." "(Signed) L. A. Rozelle."

"Better 'Ole" Goes Big at the Rose in Chicago

LEE KUGEL, publicity director of World Film, is back from Chicago, where he handled the opening of "The Better 'Ole," at the Rose Theatre, Madison street, and had the pleasure of seeing the picture go over as emphatically as in New York.

"The big thing about the Chicago success," said Kugel, "was this: That it couldn't be charged to the legitimate production.

"In New York the show had been playing for months when the picture opened and some people were fond of ascribing the pictures' success to the 'turnaways' from the show.

"This hollow excuse doesn't serve in Chicago, where the show itself opened only the other week. The people wanted to see Old Bill of the films in response to his advance advertising and no other source should receive credit."

A banner was strung along Madison street for a distance of seventy feet and read: "Why the blinkin' 'ell don't you see the 'Better 'Ole' for 25 cents?" This worked directly to bring business, in the management's opinion. Old Bill "heads" were a strong feature of the lobby.

Heart Interest and Thrills Mark "Fighting for Gold"

HEART INTEREST and romance are generously mingled with the thrilling stunts in "Fighting for Gold," announced by the Fox Film Corporation as the current Tom Mix Victory Picture.

"Fighting for Gold" is an adaptation of a novel by William Macleod Raine. The picture was directed by Edward J. LeSaint from the scenario of Charles Kenyon.

Miss Teddy Sampson plays the feminine lead opposite Tom, and others in the supporting cast are Sid Jordan, Jack Nelson, H. Lounsdale, Robert Dunbar, Hattie Buskirk, Frank Clark and Lucille Young.

One of the most thrilling incidents ever shown in any Tom Mix picture is enacted in this production, when Tom Mix—as Jack Kilmeny, who is developing a mining claim in the West—catches Miss Sampson as she jumps from a wagon behind runaway horses into his arms, Mix galloping alongside on horseback.

Considerable of the action centers around a grizzly bear. When the grizzly breaks his chains and stampedes a party of picnickers the runaway is one result.

Another big moment occurs when Mix fights with three men for his mining claim and the girl he loves. The gun battle which follows is said to be packed with new Tom Mix stunts.

Sergeant Daly in Rothapfel Film.

Sergeant Dan Daly, said to be "the most decorated hero of the war," whose challenge, "Come on you ———, do you want to live forever," has gone down in history, is seen as one of the features of Samuel L. Rothapfel's magazine number, one of the eight features of the first Rothapfel Unit Program.

By arrangement with Fire Chief Kenlon, of the New York Fire Department, Mr. Rothapfel will show, also, in this magazine, the contrast between the old horse-drawn "steamers" of yesterday and the new fire-fighting apparatus of today. These are two of the many interesting subjects included in the magazine section of the first Rothapfel Unit Program.

Nat Goodwin Play for Earle Williams.

Earle Williams is embarking on another photodrama of big interest—a screen version of the late Nat C. Goodwin's starring vehicle, "The Usurper." Mr. Williams will, for the first time, be seen as a cowboy. It is a role that is especially appealing to him and a welcome relief, he says.

A strong cast has been assembled to give Mr. Williams support in "The Usurper." In accordance with the Vitagraph policy of picking people primarily qualified to portray certain roles, another leading woman will be seen in the production. She is Louise Lovely. James Young is directing the production.

Washington Theatres Buy Power's.

The H. A. Johnson Company, of Seattle, is busy selling Power's Cameragraphs. They write in to say that they sold two 6B cameragraphs to the Weir Theatre, at Aberdeen, Wash., and two 6B cameragraphs to the New Angle Theatre, at Tacoma.

Select Film Is Praised by Dean of Girls' College

PREVIOUSLY skeptical about the advisability of allowing the girls at St. Mary-of-the-Woods College in Indiana to witness a showing of Constance Talmadge in "Mrs. Leffingwell's Boots," Sister A. Clare, Dean of the Academy, has since declared the picture to be entirely free of objectionable features and the finest film ever shown at St. Mary-of-the-Woods.

The showing at St. Mary-of-the-Woods came about in this manner. Sister Clare had previously arranged to have another feature shown at the Academy, but the day before the entertainment she was notified by the exchange which handled the other picture that it would be impossible to supply the print. Reluctant to let the day pass without the usual picture entertainment for the students, Sister Clare got into communication with A. F. Brentlinger, manager of the Liberty Theatre in Terre Haute, Ind., and asked him to help. Manager Brentlinger had already booked "Mrs. Leffingwell's Boots" for his house for the following night, but he said he would lend the print if the Sister would guarantee its return in the morning. Sister Clare said, however, that she had never seen a Constance Talmadge picture, and asked if it would be advisable to show such a picture to the girls of the Academy.

Mr. Brentlinger answered the Sister's question by suggesting that she have the attraction screened privately before allowing the girls to see it. The Dean of St. Mary-of-the-Woods, after viewing the production, was satisfied that it could safely be shown to any body of girls in the world.

Stage Lead Supports Brady in Select Film "Redhead"

A COMBINATION of star and leading man which it is believed will prove one of the most successful ever seen on the screen, is reported by Select Pictures Corporation in the announcement of Alice Brady's forthcoming Select Picture, "Redhead," in which the star will be supported by Conrad Nagel, Miss Brady's leading man in her popular stage production, "Forever After" which is now in its twenty-seventh week on New York's Broadway.

Miss Brady and Mr. Nagel, owing to their close association in Miss Brady's stage production, are thoroughly familiar with each other's style of acting, and it is for this reason that Miss Brady selected Mr. Nagel to support her.

"Redhead" is a story by Albert Payson Dowst, which appeared in a recent number of one of the popular magazines. It was adapted for the screen by Charles Maigne, who also is directing the production, thus making the fifth Alice Brady production for which Mr. Maigne has written the scenario, as well as directed.

There are a number of thrilling moments in the picture, and an unusually new and different conclusion. Charles Stevenson also has an important part in the picture, and the other members of the cast are Robert Schable, Charles Eldridge and May Brettone.

Release "Go Get 'Em Garringer."

"Go Get 'Em Garringer," a stirring five-reel Astra star production, will be released by Pathe on March 23. It is a story of strongly organized border bandits of the West, of a sweet girl enmeshed in their web of infamy; of a two-fisted, quick-shooting he-man, who reveled in the sport of hunting down the criminals—a regular Western drama of the "wild, woolly days," with occasional flashes of good comedy and the tender glow of beautiful sentiment.

Helene Chadwick is the heroine. Franklyn Farnum plays the part of Garringer, who runs down the outlaws.

Paramounts and Artcrafts for April Announced

MARY PICKFORD again appears on the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation schedule in the announcement of the Paramount and Artcraft releases for April. Including this production there are four Artcraft pictures on the list, the others being a Cecil B. DeMille special and productions in which Elsie Ferguson and William S. Hart are the respective stars. Eight Paramount productions, presenting John Barrymore, Shirley Mason, Marguerite Clark, Bryant Washburn, Dorothy Dalton, Charles Ray, Enid Bennett and Wallace Reid as stars, are also included in the schedule for the month.

The Mary Pickford production, "Captain Kidd, Jr.," is one of the first to be released, being scheduled for April 6. This romantic story by Rida Johnson Young was adapted by Frances Marion and the picture was directed by William D. Taylor.

Also released on the sixth are John Barrymore in "The Test of Honor" and Shirley Mason in "The Rescuing Angel," both Paramount Pictures. The former is an adaptation by Eve Unsell of E. Phillips Oppenheim's novel, "The Malefactor," and presents Mr. Barrymore in his first strictly dramatic role in Paramount Pictures. John S. Robertson directed the picture. The Shirley Mason picture, directed by Walter Edwards, is an adaptation by Edith Kennedy of Clare Kummer's play of the same name.

April 13 is the release date of Marguerite Clark's Paramount picture, "Let's Elope," adapted by Katherine Reed from Fred Jackson's stage comedy, "The Naughty Wife," and directed by John S. Robertson. Bryant Washburn in "Something to Do," is also scheduled for that date. This Paramount picture is from a story by Maximilian Foster, with scenario by Will M. Ritchey and direction by Donald Crisp. On the same date also Thomas H. Ince presents Dorothy Dalton in "The Homebreaker," from the story by John Lynch and scenario by R. Cecil Smith. Victor Scherzinger directed.

Elsie Ferguson in the Artcraft production, "Eyes of the Soul," founded on George Weston's magazine story, "The Salt of the Earth," is scheduled for April 20. Emile Chautard directed from Eve Unsell's scenario. Released the same date William S. Hart in the Artcraft picture, "The Money Corral," written and directed by Lambert Hillyer and Mr. Hart, and Charles Ray in "Greased Lightning," a Paramount picture written by Julien Josephson and directed by Jerome Storm.

Cecil B. DeMille's new production for Artcraft, "For Better, For Worse," will be released April 27. Edgar Selwyn wrote the original story. The scenario is credited to Jeanie MacPherson.

"The Law of Men," a story by John Lynch, which Ella Stuart Carson adapted serves as a Paramount vehicle for the Thomas H. Ince star, Enid Bennett. This picture directed by Fred Niblo, is also scheduled for the 27th, as is "The Roaring Road," a Paramount picture starring Wallace Reid.

The comedies for the month are as follows: April 6, Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew in "The Amateur Liar," by Albert Payson Terhune; April 13, Louise Fazenda, Chester Conklin and Phyllis Haver in the Mack Sennett two-reeler, "The Foolish Age"; April 20 James Montgomery Flagg's satire, "The Last Bottle," starring Harry Foshay and Dorothy Fitch, and the Mack Sennett comedy, "The Little Widow."

In addition to these, there will be released in the Success Series, Mary Pickford in "Hulda from Holland," John Barrymore in "The Dictator," Marguerite Clark in "Gretna Green" and Victor Moore in "Chimmie Fadden"; also the usual weekly issues of the Paramount-Burton Holmes Travelogues and the Paramount-Bray Pictograph.

Record Advance Bookings on New Serial.

With advance bookings that give every promise of breaking records throughout the country, Pathe's coming serial production "The Tiger's Trail, in which Ruth Roland is starred, will be released on April 20.

"The Tiger's Trail," in addition to its star, Miss Roland, has a notable cast, headed by George Larkin. The story is by Arthur B. Reeve, author of several successful Pathe serials and creator of the famous Craig Kennedy detective stories, and Charles A. Logue, author of many popular screen successes. It was done in scenario form by Gilson Willets.

Nationwide Exploitation on New Pathe Serial

A BILLBOARD showing and publicity campaign, nationwide in its scope, will exploit "The Tiger's Trail," Pathe's serial of mystery and adventure, starring Ruth Roland and presenting a big cast including George Larkin, Frederick L. Kohler and others.

The story, dealing with a strange tiger-worshipping cult of Hindus, is the work of Arthur B. Reeve, author of the "Craig Kennedy" stories and several previous Pathe serials, and Charles A. Logue, author of many successful photoplays. It was put in scenario form by Gilsen Willet, and is being made at the Astra West Coast Studios.

From the poster and publicity viewpoint alone, "The Tiger's Trail" will be one of Pathe's most notable achievements. As has been the case with previous serials, Pathe's plan contemplates a campaign that will bring the production forcibly to the attention of exhibitors and fans alike, and with this end in view, the masterful twenty-four sheet will be posted in every city of importance in the United States.

The twenty-four sheet is striking and attention compelling. It is the work of Dan Smith, famed as a portrayer of animal life and an illustrator of magazine stories and novels. The dominating figure is a huge tiger in the act of springing on the star who is shown crouched in the reeds, awaiting the impact.

In addition to the twenty-four sheet, the advertising matter to be issued on the new serial includes the following: 1, 3 and 6-sheet posters on each episode; photographic lobby display; a 2-color herald; one-column cut (three styles) of Ruth Roland, one two-cut of Ruth Roland, one half-column cut of Ruth Roland, one-column cut of George Larkin; a two-column scene cut on each of the first three episodes; seven line cuts; black and white photos of Ruth Roland and George Larkin; a 22x28 sepia photograph of Ruth Roland; four slides; and a two-color campaign book containing reproductions of the advertising matter, with publicity covering the entire serial, the cover to be a reproduction of the twenty-four sheet poster.

Charles Ray in a Western Role.

Charles Ray has a role in "The Sheriff's Son," his next picture, released March 30, which is said to afford him a splendid chance to give a constructive interpretation of a strikingly interesting psychological character, according to advance notice from his producers. He plays Royal Beaudry, a lad from the West, who has been educated in the East. He inherits a great fear from his mother, who endured a great shock just before he was born, and the narrative shows how he fights the fear, returns to the Western country of his birth and makes a splendid showing against the cattle thieves who were his father's enemies, regaining his courage and manhood, and winning the girl he loves in the bargain.

Charles K. French, is seen in the role of Hal Rutherford, the chief of the cattle rustlers, and Lamar Johnstone, Otto Hoffman, Clyde Benson and John P. Lockney have important roles.

New Faces Will Be Seen in Griffith's Next Artcraft

IN the Griffith Artcraft picture, "The Girl Who Stayed at Home," released March 23, new faces are to the fore. This drama, based upon a story by S. E. V. Taylor, serves to introduce a number of personalities new to the list of Griffith players.

Carol Dempster, who portrays one of the leading roles, that of Mlle. Blossom, is new to pictures, but not to the fine arts. Under the tutelage of Ruth St. Denis she rose from a first year pupil to the position of solo dancer.

Clarine Seymour, who appears in the role of "Cutie Beautiful," a cafe dancer, is not strictly a new screen player. She has been seen in the "minors" for several years, at intervals, having begun her picture career in the days of Thanhouser.

Richard Barthelmess also makes his first appearance in a Griffith production in one of the two leading male roles, the other being played by Robert Harron.

Syn de Conde and Tully Marshall are others who have important roles.

"Well I'll Be ——" Starts New Comedy Series

SOME time in April, Vitagraph will inaugurate its new Larry Semon comedy service, with this comedian appearing exclusively in the new series, supported by a company of fun-makers chosen from the best talent in the field.

The Larry Semon Comedies will be released once a month and will be directed by the star himself. Blazoning the new laugh-path as the first release will be "Well, I'll Be——."

This first Larry Semon feature comedy has been completed. It is a rip-roaring, rough house comedy with a plot, and carried to a logical conclusion although an excruciatingly funny one. It deals with the much disdained tenderfoot sheriff in a mining town, being a travesty on Western subjects. "Well, I'll Be——" introduces a new comedienne to the screen in the person of Lucille Zintheo.

Already reservations for the Semon series are coming into the branch offices of Vitagraph.

Go to Mississippi for Exterior Scenes.

Director John S. Robertson, Assistant Director Frank Walton, Cameraman Jacques Monteran and the members of the cast of "Come Out of the Kitchen," Marguerite Clark's new Paramount picture, have gone to Pass Christian, Miss., where the work of filming the exteriors for the production has already commenced. When the work at Pass Christian is completed the company will return to New York, where the interiors will be filmed at the Fifty-sixth street studio of Famous Players-Lasky.

The members of the cast who made the journey to the far South include Eugene O'Brien, leading man; Crawford Kent, Frances Kaye, Bradley Barker, Albert M. Hackett, May Kitson, George Stevens, Frederick Esmelton, Mrs. August Anderson, Rita Spear and Frances Grant.

"Come Out of the Kitchen," which was written by Alice Duer Miller and was presented on the legitimate stage for nearly two years with great success, was adapted for the screen by Clara Beranger. It is a romantic comedy.

Hart Working on His Next Picture.

The next William S. Hart picture will be from a magazine serial called "Square Deal Sanderson," it is reported, though little is as yet being announced concerning the picture or the cast.

The Artcraft star began work last week on the production at his Hollywood studio and several important sets are being constructed.

The total unfitness for real life of the youngest child in a large family is taken as the central theme of "Little Comrade," a Paramount picture released March 30 in which Vivian Martin is to appear. A person who has been spoiled by a series of older brothers and sister, as well as too fond parents, is forced to undergo a lot of suffering later in life when problems arise.

Niles Welch has the leading role. Others in the cast are Vivian Martin, Gertrude Claire, Richard Cummings, L. W. Steers, Eleanor Hancock, Nancy Chase, Pearl Lovici.

Two April L.-Ko. Releases Announced.

"A Skate at Sea" and "A Movie Riot" have been selected as the L.-Ko. comedy release for April 2 and 9, through Universal exchanges.

The first named comedy features Charles Dorety and has been directed by Vin Moore. The picture is said to be replete with comical and thrilling situations.

"A Movie Riot" is enacted, for the most part by child actors and the Chinese comedian, "Charlie, from the Orient." The plot develops when a number of children visit the moving picture studio and attempt to turn out a drama of their own.

"Partners Three" Has Big Roles for Players

THAT every character of prominence in "Partners Three," the new Paramount picture from the Thomas Ince studio, starring Enid Bennett, has a powerful role is the report from the west, where the film has recently been completed under the direction of Fred Niblo.

The leading role, that of Agnes Cuyler, gives Miss Bennett an opportunity for unusual work, while a peculiarly sympathetic role is that of Hassayampa Hardy, played by John P. Lockney. Robert McKim has a particularly despicable heavy role and Casson Ferguson gains sympathy by his rendition of the leading support for the star. Lydia Yeamans Titus is also cast for a good part.

J. G. Hawks wrote the story and the scenario. It is a tale of a girl who to escape the distasteful cabaret life marries a westerner whom she hardly knows, and goes to the desert country with him. He proves to be a worthless brute and she is left by him to shift for herself in the desert. Succored by a queer old desert rat, she finds new love in the person of a young chap she redeems.

The desert scenes are said to be particularly effective. George Barnes did the photographic work.

L-Ko Companies Pushing Production.

L-Ko companies are making hay while the sun shines at Hollywood these days. During the past three weeks a number of new comedies have been started and many new players added to the producing force. Craig Hutchinson has just put the finishing touches on the new comedy entitled "A Marriage in Black and White," which features colored players. Jim Davis is working on a new production starring Charlie of the Orient, while Vin Moore is cutting and editing "Lions and Jail Birds" in which Charles Dorety, Merta Sterling, Helen Lynch and Ed Kennedy are prominently cast.

Hughie Mack has returned to the studios after a short vacation and Bud Jamison, formerly with Harold Lloyd, Juan Paco, Dan Russel and Clay Watson former Keystone director have recently been engaged by President Julius Stern.

Drews Are Efficiently Ridiculous.

"The Drews are efficiently ridiculous," states the New York Sun in a review of "Once a Mason," the latest Paramount-Drew release, which was a feature of the New York Rialto Theatre's "Comedy Week" bill. Most aptly has the Sun critic phrased the public consensus, which is demonstrated by the hearty laughter and applause that greets these two-reel Drew comedies.

To have reached the stage where their comedies are declared "efficiently ridiculous" is indeed gratifying to Mr. and Mrs. Drew. Their well deserved success is largely due to the conscientious effort and specialization in a delightful form of humorous depiction. Experience too has been a factor in the evolution of the Drew brand of comedy to its present entertainment standard.

"Veiled Adventure" Is Next Picture.

With first-run theatres throughout the country reporting advance play dates on Constance Talmadge's, "Experimental Marriage," announcement comes that Miss Talmadge's next offering will be "The Veiled Adventure. It is an original story by Julia Crawford Ivers, who has also written the scenario. This is the first original story to be used as picture material for Constance Talmadge this season. The story is being directed by Walter Edwards and Miss Talmadge's leading man will be Harrison Ford.

There is plenty of action and an unusually entertaining plot. In the cast are Stanhope Wheatcroft, Vera Doria, Rosita Marstini, T. D. Crittenden, Eddie Sutherland, Margaret Loomis and Vera Sisson.

Getting the Lion's Share ofIt.
An unusual face massage as developed in Universal's comedy, "Lions and Jail-Birds."

Last Big Lockwood Film To Be Released in April

UNCOMMON interest has been aroused by the announcement of the fact that April will see the release of the last and biggest of the Lockwood super-features made by that popular star for Screen Classics, Inc. The name of the drama is "A Man of Honor."

Screen Classics, Inc., has held in reserve this particular picture for the reason that it has acquired a peculiar significance as the last and biggest thing that Harold Lockwood ever did before a motion picture camera. Metro will distribute it.

The story is a screen adaptation by Fred J. Balshofer from the novel by Henry Kitchell Webster, and to add strength to the production of the story, Mr. Balshofer also directed the star in the filming of it, with the efficient Antonio Gaudio as sponsor for the photography. The Yorke Film Corporation made the production.

In Metro's opinion, Lockwood has reached in "A Man of Honor" greater heights than at any time in his remarkable career as a star of the screen, and the role essayed by him is of a vastly different character from anything which he has ever attempted. The company's enthusiasm is shared by exhibitors and exchangemen who have just seen a private showing of the picture.

The story is a romantic tale of love and finance, and the part assumed by the star is the strong and difficult role of an ex-newspaper reporter who, governed by the appeal of the underdog, thwarts the attempts of some magnates to crush the smallfry in the open market.

The usual strength of Screen Classics Inc. casts surrounds the star, among whom is Bessie Eyton, the leading woman. The other prominent members in the principal roles are Stanton Heck, William Clifford, Bert Starkey, Gordon MacGregor and Pomeroy Cannon.

A semi-tropical island in the Pacific Ocean furnishes the scenes for most of the exteriors used. The New York Stock Market scenes are depicted with great faith and were shot in the greatest money market in the world—Wall street.

First Comedies Shown Are Drews.

To be featured on the programs of a theatre that has heretofore consistently refrained from showing any comedies at all is the distinction won by the Paramount-Drew comedies. The high calibre of this new series of two reelers dispelled the prejudice of the management of the California Theatre, San Francisco, for short subjects in humorous vein.

"Romance and Rings," the first Paramount-Drew release, was played at this house with special musical accompaniment.

The California Theatre, Los Angeles, under the same management as the San Francisco house, is also headlining these comedies. "Once a Mason," the second of the series, was much enjoyed by the patrons of this theatre.

"Paramount-Drew comedies are winning on merit in the best theatres," states President Amedee J. Van Beuren of the V. B. K. Film Corporation, producers of this series, "and there is no doubt of the ability of Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew to 'keep you smiling'."

"From Headquarters" Is Booked for First Runs

WITH weeks of advertising of the most comprehensive sort back of it, "From Headquarters" reaches the screen. This Vitagraph release features Anita Stewart. Supporting the star is a cast of well-known screen players. The play was directed by Ralph Ince.

The story involves the thing called "justice." It poignantly points out the inequality of the law as applied to those problems of womanhood of which Blachstone and Coke do not take cognizance.

"From Headquarters" is already booked in the first-run houses. Special advertisements have been prepared by Vitagraph in the form of mats and electros. One, three and six sheets have aided the huge campaign.

Then there is a special lobby display, comprised of hand-colored prints and a title card, in colors also, for the lobbies of theatres. All this in addition to a variety of stories for Sunday and daily use by the press, with illustrations in newspaper screen to pick from.

A special edition of the Vitagraph News further has served to steer exhibitors along the proper course in extracting the minimum of returns from the showing of "From Headquarters."

Keenan Working on Second Production.

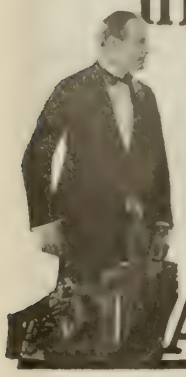
Frank Keenan is in the midst of his second production at the Los Angeles studio and considers that in "The Game" he has a story in itself so vital, so rich in tense emotional value as to more than amply approximate the ideal of narrative and picture which he set up in his announcement that he was going into individual production.

"The Game," in which Mr. Keenan is both the star and the supervising director, is by Jack Cunningham, from the story by Kate Corbaley. It is a drama of parental love, intrigue and adventures. Ernest C. Warde is the director and the leading woman is Lois Wilson.

In the cast, also, are George Fisher, Lillian Langdon, Edwin Tilton, John Linze, Gus Prixley, Thomas Bates and "Bobbie" Mack.



HERE STANDS THE MAN!

TRUE, HE COULD BASK IN THE SUNSHINE OF A SIREN'S SMILE AND SIN AWAY HIS IDLE HOURS. BUT, WHEN RINGED ABOUT BY THE SERPENT-FIRE OF SUSPICION ABOUT HIS LOYAL AND TRUSTING WIFE, REASON FLEES AND HE DISOWNS HIS OWN CHILD

Select Reproduces Newspaper Cartoon as Poster

THE NEW YORK HERALD has given Select Pictures Corporation permission to reproduce as a three sheet poster for "Bolshevism on Trial," the full page cartoon which appeared in its issue of March 10. This cartoon depicts figures representing Labor and Capital, united to repulse a crawling, bearded, unkempt figure representing Bolshevism, and push him off the face of the globe. In the background stands the Statue of Liberty—under its beneficent and truth revealing rays the industrial forces, which have built up America, have joined hands to avert the common peril and preserve our native land as the home of the free.

Select Pictures special attraction, "Bolshevism on Trial," has absolutely no connection of any nature with the campaign being waged against this menace, nor is this picture put out as propaganda, but only as a highly dramatic entertainment, telling a story of America and average Americans. "Bolshevism on Trial" comes, however, at a time when the subject behind the picture is the universal topic of the hour.

The Herald cartoon was recognized by Select officials as a highly appropriate subject for poster display for this great special. Accordingly it has been reproduced in color and will be seen on billboards everywhere, as part of the big lithograph campaign to foster public interest in the Select picture.

Try for Comedy and Pathos in All Barriscale Films

IN selecting and producing a vehicle for Bessie Barriscale her management tries to include in the story the following:

Light and shades, drama accompanied by light touches of comedy pathos, heart interest; a character to be played by her which will have the sympathy of the audience.

Miss Barriscale in "Hearts Asleep," her next release through Exhibitors Mutual, portrays the character of Nancy, a bit of the world's driftwood in a story that contains all the aforementioned attributes. She has been found by Mother Hawkins, a character corresponding to a female "Fagin." Nancy has been brought up amid the surroundings of a gang of thieves, but, as is emphatically pointed out in the story, she refuses to "steal a dime." This point of the story is one by which an appeal is made to the audience for sympathy. As the story was originally submitted, Nancy was a finished pickpocket, but, for the sake of plausibility and to gain sympathy, this was changed. In connection with the scenes in the Hawkins den a dance is given, which develops a fine comedy touch.

Another attempt for sympathy is made in a scene where Nancy, compelled to act as look-out for a band of thieves, yields to her conscience and, though threatened with death if she "squealed," deserts her post and goes to the one man who had shown her any kindness, Uncle John Lewis.

Rebuilds Old Chinatown for Scene in "Checkers"

ONE of the biggest and most interesting sets which Director Richard Stanton has erected at the William Fox studio in Fort Lee for "Checkers," the racing picture which Mr. Stanton is producing as a big special attraction, is that showing the Chinatown of some years ago—the sordid district of abducted girls, opium dens, dark alleys, tong men and mysterious underground passages.

The set was built under the supervision of Captain Hannon, of the Elizabeth street police station, New York, which has Chinatown within its jurisdiction.

Sends Oriental Atmosphere.

The Chinatown scenes show the adventures of a young Southern girl who has fallen into the hands of the denizens of Chinatown, and her rescue by Checkers, the jockey who is the hero of the play. All of the oriental atmosphere, the mystery and the fascination that have lured thousands of sightseers is given in the picture, which, it is said, not only will give an illuminating picture of New York's Chinatown, but will reveal conditions which prevail in the Chinese quarters of other large cities, like Chicago, Boston and San Francisco.

"Lord Jim" Is Bennison's Fourth.

Announcement is made by the Betzwood organization that the fourth Louis Bennison to be released through Goldwyn will be an international broad comedy, "Lord Jim," by Ira M. Lowry, with its plot and scenes laid both in the United States and England. Ira M. Lowry, director of all of the Bennison productions, has adopted the novel policy of giving his star diversity in stories. He has no desire for the public to consider Bennison simply as a likable Westerner, for there is considerably more to his abilities than that. He is a splendid dramatic actor, a daredevil rider and lariat expert, a sensationally accurate marksman and rifle shot, a character actor with a positive genius for make-up and disguise and a comedian

Dual Roles for Players in "Daughter of Mine"

PRACTICALLY every picture star has appeared in a dual role. The good girl and her iniquitous sister have ever been the delight of the ambitious actress. And the cinematographer revels in the opportunity for "double exposure," when he brings both on the screen at the same time. But there are revolutionists at work nowadays, revolutionists among stars and authors. Such are Madge Kennedy and Hugo Ballin, creator of "Daughter of Mine," the star's newest Goldwyn picture.

In the play not alone Miss Kennedy, but every player enacts a dual role. The star's two characters are not the conventional "good" and "bad" sisters, but Rosie Mendelsohn, daughter of the tenements, and Lady Diantha, the heroine little Rosie thinks she should be.

The heroine's father, a venerable, orthodox Jew, is transformed into Lord Noblebrow, master of a stately castle. And Rosie's sweetheart, George Howard, a poet of the slums, becomes a romantic, sonnet scribbling figure who calls himself "Byron Mulvaney." Her employer, whose stenographer she is, is found to be Baron Landsandhome, implacable in his desire to wed Lady Diantha. Even the marriage broker who makes Rosie's life a burden finds a place in the pomp of Lady Diantha's home, and the busy proprietor of the pastry shop which the girl frequents is found to be the gaoler of the dungeon in the castle.

Fritzi Brunette to Lead.

Fritzi Brunette has been engaged to play opposite William Russell in "The Signet of Sheba," which William Russell Productions is making for the American Film Company, Inc. Her role is considered a highly "grateful" one, affording rare opportunity for strong emotional work.

"The Probation Wife" Plays to Big Business Everywhere

NORMA TALMADGE'S lates Select picture, "The Probation Wife," is going over big in every territory. Reports reach Select's home office daily of record-breaking runs.

During the week of March 9 to 15 the production played the Rivoli Theatre in New York, where it was proclaimed by press and public as Miss Talmadge's greatest effort. Record attendances were reported.

In Chicago at Sig Faller's Bijou Dream Theatre "The Probation Wife" closed a run of two weeks on March 22. During this period the attraction was also shown at other Chicago theatres, and reports in each instance showed crowded houses and delighted audiences.

Among the other big city theatres where the picture has already been shown are the Metropolitan in Washington, the Walnut Street Theatre in Cincinnati and the Alhambra Theatre in Indianapolis.

The story is by Angie Ousley Rooser and was directed by Sydney A. Franklin. Thomas Meighan is Miss Talmadge's leading man and the others in the cast are Florence Billings, Alec B. Francis, Walter McEwen, Amelia Summerville, A. Brooke and S. Liston.

Inter-Ocean Buys Louise Glaum Feature.

The foreign rights of the "The Goddess of Lost Lake," a Brunton made production in which Louise Glaum is starred, were last week purchased by the Inter-Ocean Company. The transaction was handled through Federal Photoplays, Inc., which is supervising the marketing of the picture.

"The Goddess of Lost Lake" is being released in the United States through the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation.

Lavish Robes Worn by Nazimova in "Red Lantern"

ROBES of regal splendor are worn by Nazimova in "The Red Lantern," now being assembled at the Nazimova studios in Hollywood, in which the Russian star will be presented by Richard A. Rowland and Maxwell Karger. Among these robes is the heavy silken garb of the Goddess of the Red Lantern and the awe-inspiring habiliments of a Chinese warrior chief.

For Mahlee, the half-Chinese, half-English girl, played by Nazimova, bears a not remote resemblance to France's Joan of Arc. True, she leads a hopeless cause, that of the Boxers against the European in China.

Nazimova wears the warrior's costume during the tumultuous scenes in the streets of Pekin, when the Boxers clash with the troops of the Allied nations sent to quell the uprising. Mounted, Mahlee leads the yellow hordes against their white fores until all hope is gone. Then, with the stoicism of the oriental blood, she seeks death by her own hand in the throne room of the Emperor's palace.

The warrior's costume, a striking robe of embroidered silk, with the head of a lion depending from the waist, is apparel worn only by those of the Chinese who stand ready to give their lives for the race. The lion's head is the highest symbol of valor at arms.

In other scenes Nazimova wears the robes of the Goddess of the Red Lantern.

On her head Nazimova wears the symbolical head-dress of the goddess, studded with peacock feathers and dozens of silk floss pom poms—the whole held in place by a band of gold embroidery that circles the forehead and temples.

"The Red Lantern" is based on the novel of Chinese life by Edith Wherry.

Besides playing Mahlee, Nazimova portrays the character of Blanche Sackville, delicately reared English girl and a half sister to the Eurasian.

"Common Cause" Still Going Strong.

Though some months have elapsed since the release of J. Stuart Blackton's production, "The Common Cause," through Vitagraph, bookings are still coming heavily on the big picture. As a matter of fact, "The Common Cause" gives every indication of being a live attraction throughout the coming summer.

As an indication of the sort of business that is still being written on this picture, Vitagraph reports that the New Center Theatre, Kansas City, began a two weeks' engagement of the feature on March 23. The Rialto, Lincoln, Neb., has just closed a successful four days' run, and the picture has also been booked into the Princess Theatre, Frankfort, Ind. These bookings picked at random are merely cited as an indication of the quality of the business still being done on the Blackton picture many weeks after its original release.

Mabel Normand Completes "The Pest" for Goldwyn

HER return to broad comedy made safe for all time by the success of "Sis Hopkins," Samuel Goldwyn is shortly to present Mabel Normand in a new comedy vehicle. It is "The Pest," a play that provides more action, more ridiculous situations and more opportunities for superior clowning and fun-making than any other of her previous successes.

The picture was produced under the direction of W. Christy Cabanne, who makes his skill known in Goldwyn Pictures for the first time in this important assignment. In the production the comedienne is again seen as a rural mischief maker, with, however, the addition of a logical reason for blossoming forth as a metropolitan belle.

Much of the interest is found in the primitive country ferry which Puckers, the character played by Miss Normand, runs across a shallow river. Out of Puckers' mismanagement of the ferry develops a surprising plot, which involves not only the girl, but every person in the town, with the big secret kept until the last scene of the play.

For portraying the amusing village types, Goldwyn surrounds Miss Normand with an interesting cast. Once more John Bowers is given the opportunity to play a "rube" part. He is Mabel Normand's leading man, and divides the comic honors with the star. Alec B. Francis makes his first appearance with her since "The Venus Model," and Charles Gerard, Jack Curtis, James Bradbury, Leota Lorraine and Pearl Elmore complete the list of principals.

"The Pest" is scheduled for release April 20.

"Getting Mary Married" Is a High Class Comedy

ACCORDING to a report from Select Pictures Corporation, Marion Davies' forthcoming Select attraction "Getting Mary Married," in which she was directed by Allan Dwan, is the genuine article. In fact, Select declares "Getting Mary Married" is the best thing Miss Davies has ever done. It so completely eclipses her previous productions that there is no comparison.

There is a long list of good things to be said about Miss Davies and her forthcoming picture. Her support is good, the titles are good, the continuity is good, the photography is good, the direction is good, and the lead, played by Norman Kerry, is unusually good. Altogether, Select avers, exhibitors may safely anticipate a top-notch production.

"Getting Mary Married" was written expressly for Miss Davies by John Emerson and Anita Loos. It is a high class comedy with a strong dramatic theme, dealing with the life of a young girl who is left to the mercies of arrogant and grasping relatives. The story is rich in romance and human interest, with an abundance of good natured comedy.

The photography includes a large number of particularly excellent interior and exterior shots. Miss Davies' support is also worthy of special mention, including in addition to Norman Kerry, Matt Moore, Frederick Burton, Amelia Summerville, Constance Beaumar and Elmar Grandin.

It is believed that the picture will be ready for distribution as an early April attraction.

Star Demonstrates Her Versatility.

Comes a cry this week from the far West, and the voice is recognized as none other than that of charming Bessie Love. Miss Love says that her last Vitagraph picture, "A Yankee Princess," has carried her through the whole range of feminine characterizations except the vamp, and now the star says when she has vamped through a picture her screen career will be complete.

Director David Smith has kept his star busy in this production, for she begins the picture as the toughest sort of a little street gamin and ends her picture in the ancestral halls of England's nobility.

Morey Does Clever Character Work.

Vitagraph's latest Harry T. Morey release, "Fighting Destiny," in addition to giving Vitagraph's star a typical "he-man" role, gives Morey the opportunity for a bit of the cleverest character work of his career, and incidentally brings to the screen a new phase of underworld life.

The story is founded on a magazine story, "Jungle Heart," by Stanley Shaw, and was directed by Paul Scardon. The story, though dealing with the underworld, is not an underworld drama. In his hunt for his fiancee who has mysteriously disappeared, Morey finds that the trail leads down to the slums of the city, and in order to gain access to the den in which he believes that the girl is held captive he disguises himself as a panhandler. And then the fight begins.

Morey as a panhandler does some remarkable character work.

Hampton Film Praised by Big Atlantic City Theatre

REPORTS from throughout the country bear out the Metropolitan verdict that "What Every Woman Wants," the Jesse D. Hampton production, featuring Grace Darmond, and released by Exhibitors Mutual, is one of the biggest box office attractions issued by this organization. The best evidence in support of this statement is the following telegram from Edward J. O'Keefe, manager of the City Square Theatre, one of Atlantic City's foremost photoplay palaces:

"Congratulations on 'What Every Woman Wants.' It is one great picture. One of the best we ever played, and we play all the big ones. It has everything that goes to make a good picture—good photography, direction, settings and high class acting, not forgetting the great title. We had big business all day, and will no doubt have bigger tomorrow. Will ask you to increase the two days I have it booked for our Cort Theatre on the boardwalk to three days. It should go over even better there. Your company is turning out some great shows. Keep up the good work."

"What Every Woman Wants" is getting first runs in every big picture centre, and from every standpoint is one of the most successful features Exhibitors Mutual has ever handled.

Vidor Writing Another Play for Brentwood.

King W. Vidor, author-director of "The Turn in the Road," a recent release of the Exhibitors Mutual, is at work on another production from his own pen for the Brentwood Film Corporation. This new feature is classed as a comedy-drama and will be entitled "Better Times." It is built on the theme of sunshine being within one and through heart-warming sentiment, pathos and bright comedy points the moral, "Keep a-Smiling."

Holds Preview of "Pettigrew's Girl."

A preview of "Pettigrew's Girl," Ethel Clayton's Paramount release of March 23, in which Monte Blue has the leading role, was given to invited guests at the Iris Theatre, Hollywood, last week. The picture was enthusiastically received.

"Pettigrew's Girl" is an adaptation of Dana Burnet's magazine story. It was scenarized by Will M. Ritchey. Miss Clayton has the role of a Broadway chorus girl, Daisy Heath.

More Than 4,000 Theatres Now Show the Ford Weekly

THE editors of the Ford Educational Weekly mix the lighter phases of life with the more serious picturizations that are presented through the medium of Henry Ford's motion picture newspaper. Evidence of this is found in the four subjects announced for release in April as follows:

April 6.—"Cut It Out," a story of plate glass making.

April 13.—"Northern Sports Under Southern Skies," Polo and hydroplaning at the Florida resorts.

April 20.—"Good Roads," a camera drama of roadmaking.

April 27.—"A Visit to New Orleans."

The picturization of the making of plate glass throws a "close-up on an industry that is among the foremost in America. "Northern Sports Under Southern Skies" shows the outdoor sports of the elite quartered at Palm Beach and other noted resorts. "Good Roads" presents an interesting and instructive study of how old roads are "exchanged" for new. "A Visit to New Orleans," showing a tourist's journey to the historic centres of this quaint city, is said to be one of the best of the Ford Educational releases.

Under Goldwyn distribution the Ford Educational Weekly, which had its first Goldwyn release in January, is now above the four-thousand mark, being shown under contract in that number of theatres. It has a first-run account in every city of ten thousand population and over. It also is booked in smaller towns and villages in every state of the Union.

A separate series of bookings is now being developed in factories, schools, lodges, unions, agricultural organizations and granges.

Lincoln Is Much Pleased with Zane Grey Pictures

E. K. LINCOLN, who recently arrived in Los Angeles to star in "Desert Gold," the first of the Zane Grey stories to be produced by the author's own company, Zane Grey Pictures, Inc., is enthusiastic over his role of "Dick Gale" in that production. It not only seemed to him a very powerful characterization, but one which suited himself particularly well. Mr. Lincoln is also very satisfied at the plan of production to be carried out by the Zane Grey Company.

"It looks as though a novel is really going to be put upon the screen at last," said Mr. Lincoln, "and it does me good to feel that I am going to have a big part in it. Hitherto, as Mr. Grey says, the plots of novels rather than the novels themselves have gone upon the screen, and I believe that what I would call a real picturization of a great author's work will be enthusiastically received."

Mr. Lincoln is also happy to be in Southern California again. "It is the real place to produce pictures, and a fellow realizes the full value of such a climate only after he has tried out both varieties—that of California and that of the rest of the country."

The W. W. Hodkinson Corporation has just announced that the Zane Grey productions will be distributed by them through the Pathe exchanges. This is the second line of new product recently taken on by the Hodkinson organization, the first series announced being the Augustus Thomas stories in which Leah Baird is starred.

Good Photographic Effects in Joyce Film.

When Vitagraph releases its new Alice Joyce feature, "The Cambric Mask," some noteworthy photographic effects will be disclosed. The story is rich in opportunities for startling departure from the conventional, and director Tom Terriss has taken full advantage of his chances.

"The Cambric Mask" is from Robert W. Chambers' novel of the same title, and deals in large measure with the exploits of the mysterious white riders, an organization resembling the Klu Klux Klan, but operating not for political purposes but more or less as a vigilante body for the neighborhood. The night scenes in which the riders go out on their mission of death and the dramatic climax of their ride at the quicksands in the swampy woodland make a thrilling spectacle.

Alice Joyce has a difficult role, but she is said to have added another splendid portrayal to her rapidly growing gallery of screen characterizations.

A New Thriller in "The Iron Test."

It is not an infrequent occurrence for the screen to anticipate the startling happenings in real life. A case in point comes to light in connection with one of the later episodes of "The Iron Test," newest Vitagraph serial.

The newspapers recently featured pictures showing an aviator jumping from one aeroplane to another while both machines were in flight.

A similar stunt was performed by Antonio Moreno in a novel rescue scene. The picture shows him flying in an aeroplane over a Mexican desert. He flies over an old stone mission, and, looking down from his place, sees the heroine in the clutches of one of the villains in a small stone enclosure. Whirling the plane around, he makes his leap from the machine down into the enclosure of the mission and rescues the girl.

Desmond's Work Will Arouse Enthusiasm.

William Desmond's admirers undoubtedly will be enthusiastic over his performance in "Whitewashed Walls," the Jesse D. Hampton production on Exhibitors' Mutual's list of Desmond releases. The photoplay is an adaption by George Elwood Jenks of a magazine story by James and Ethel Dorrance and is really a burlesque on life in a Latin-American country. It has to do with an American globe-trotting sculptor who obtains work in this funny little republic and who, because of an over-zealous Fourth of July celebration, gets in wrong with the "powers that be" and spends most of his time thereafter saving himself from being stood up in front of a whitewashed wall and shot.

Makes Film in Places Described by Author.

The Alma Rubens Company in producing "Diane of the Green Van," which will be her initial release through Exhibitors Mutual, traveled largely through the country which the author, Leona Dalrymple, wrote about in her $10,000 prize winning story. From Los Angeles, the Rubens company journeyed all the way to the Everglades of Florida, and then into the country of the Seminole Indians, who have a small part in the feature.

"Diane of the Green Van" is a story which throughout is rampant with real interesting film material. According to officials of Exhibitors Mutual, there is more action in the picture than in any other starring vehicle ever provided for Miss Rubens.

Early Episodes of Serial Ready.

A number of the earlier episodes of the new Vitagraph serial, "Perils of Thunder Mountain," in which Antonio Moreno and Carol Holloway are featured, have been completed, and will be screened in the projection rooms of Vitagraph's West Coast studios upon the arrival there of Albert E. Smith, the president of the company.

Mr. Smith is co-author of the new serial with Cyrus Townsend Brady, and the completed episodes have been held out West pending the arrival of Mr. Smith.

These early episodes are said to be full of magnificent snow scenes, and the thrills and feats of daring that have been so powerful an attraction in Vitagraph serials heretofore are enhanced both in their beauty and in their sensational aspect by these settings in the snow-covered wilderness.

"Lion and the Mouse" Going Strong.

Vitagraph's Alice Joyce production, "The Lion and the Mouse," seems to be gathering to itself about all the big business that the field offers. It has played the big Metropolitan circuit runs, and, of course, it has its Broadway run at the Rialto.

In Washington, Harry M. Crandall booked it for its first run at his Metropolitan, and followed it at his other houses. Word now comes that following the run at the Tivoli in San Francisco, it has played at the Coliseum. The Central Amusement Company, of Kansas City, has booked the film for its string of theatres, and the Orpheum at Topeka, Kan., and the Hippodrome at Leavenworth, Kan., are among the others who have come through this week with bookings.

Rogers Reports Select Boom.

Charles R. Rogers, New England manager for Select Pictures Corporation, and also manager of the Boston branch, visited the home offices of this corporation last week, after a short trip to Buffalo, where Mr. Rogers formerly lived and was in business. While in Buffalo, Mr. Rogers visited S. S. Webster, Select's branch manager in that city, and they exchanged sales suggestions and plans which had proven successful in one territory and pointed out the possibility of their application in the other territory. Mr. Rogers reported to General Sales Manager Woody on the extremely gratifying boom which Select pictures and Select specials are enjoying not only in Boston proper, but throughout the entire New England territory.

American Defense Society Praises "Made in America"

MADE IN AMERICA," because of its merit, is winning the unqualified indorsement of some of the largest and more influential patriotic and educational societies in the United States. The Boy Scouts of America was the first national organization to officially recognize and indorse the series. Its approval was closely followed by the International Committee of Young Men's Christian Associations. Then came the American Defense Society, which says over the signature of its secretary H. D. Craig:

"The American Defense Society has always stood for universal military training, both for its value in military defense and in the physical and mental development of young men.

"This society is consequently in hearty accord with your visualization of the training camp life, and believes that the film, 'Made in America,' would be of national benefit."

The W. W. Hodkinson Corporation distributed the film, which is being released in series form.

World to Release "Little Orphant Annie."

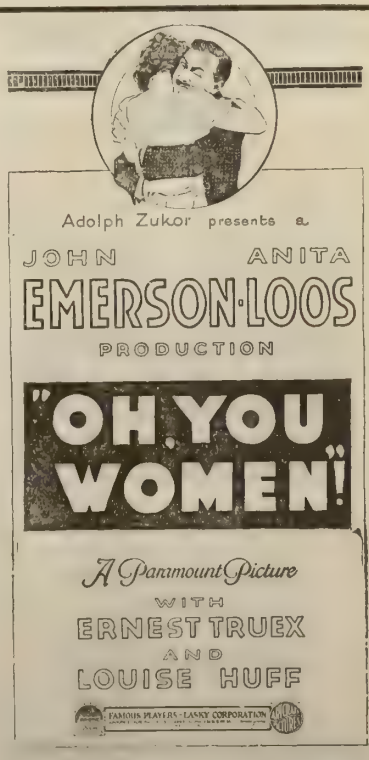
World Pictures announces for early distribution a picturization of James Whitcomb Riley's poem, "Little Orphant Annie," in which Thomas Santchi and Coline Moore are the stars. This photoplay was made by Selig and the negative purchased by the Pioneer Film Corporation. The World, appreciating the merits of the picture and the widespread publicity attached to it through Riley's immortal poem, purchased it from the Pioneer Film Corporation, who intended to put it out as a state rights feature. The price paid for it by the World was such that it influenced the Pioneer Film Corporation to withdraw it from the state rights market, but not until after they had sold the rights to the city and state of New York and northern New Jersey.



A ROARING COMEDY OF TODAY'S FEMINISTS

"Two Women" in Next Anita Stewart Picture

IN the wake of the big success being scored by "From Headquarters" comes the announcement from Vitagraph that its second Anita Stewart production, "Two Women," has been set for release for the latter part of April.

The story is an altogether different tale from the drama offered in "From Headquarters," a contrasting tale of the pure, unselfish love of one type of woman on one hand and of the faithless, fickle, selfish spirit of another type of woman. Most of the story is set in beautiful mountain country, the sort of background that the author, James Oliver Curwood, uses so frequently and with such telling effect.

"Two Women" was directed by Ralph Ince, and was edited by Mr. and Mrs. George Randolph Chester.

It is Vitagraph's contention, therefore, that "Two Women" offers exhibitors a production that throughout has been guided by master hands. There is, in the first place, the popularity of the star; the author, James Oliver Curwood, who has to his credit some of the biggest screen successes, is in himself an attraction; the direction of Ralph Ince assures a picture of the utmost dramatic quality, and the editing of Mr. and Mrs. George Randolph Chester is a further guarantee of the style and finish of the production.

Billie Rhodes Film Based on Play.

Conforming with the Robertson-Cole policy of adapting books and plays for the screen whenever possible, the National Film Corporation, in obtaining "The Lamb and the Lion" for Billie Rhodes as an Exhibitors Mutual release, selected a successful stage play. Mrs. E. Magnus Ingleton, scenario editor of the National, is author of "The Lamb and the Lion," which she adapted from her own stage work, "The Wistful One." This play ran for seven weeks in Toronto before touring the United States.

Mrs. Ingleton is a well known English writer, and is the wife of one of Britain's most noted stage directors. She has had wide experience in both the dramatic and motion picture fields, and during her film career has directed a number of her own stories.

BOOKING NOW ON THE OPEN MARKET PLAN

"Our Teddy" Goes Strong in Small Town Theatres

THE McClure authorized Roosevelt picture, "Our Teddy," is duplicating in the small towns the big successes it made in the larger cities. From Texas and Kentucky came reports that Colonel Roosevelt's exploits on the screen are attracting large audiences and intense enthusiasm. At the Hippodrome, Dallas, Texas, and at the Princess, Bowling Green, Ky., the picture broke all attendance records, drawing audiences from all classes of people, including the non-moviegoers and the anti-Sunday opening crowd. Similar excellent results have been secured at the Garrick, Madisonville; Princess, Hopkinsville, and Union, Central City, Ky.

In many localities exhibitors have been assisted by prominent men who consider it a matter of civic pride to tell the people about the picture and assist the publicity campaigns of local theatre managers. Its healthy Americanizing influence enlists mayors, town councils, Red Cross and Boy Scout organizations, and the school authorities on its behalf, while the intense dramatic character of the story attracts the regular movie fans in as large numbers as do the most thrilling dramas from the scenario writers' brains.

Productions of the Harma Company.

The Harma Company, one of the most progressive film producing companies in Great Britain, has just completed two big national pictures entitled "The Power of Right" and "The Warrior Strain." The film shows how Right has always eventually triumphed over Might—as it did even in the very earliest days of history. Harry Maze Jenks, the proprietor of Harma Photo-Plays, is at present in New York. He has for the above-mentioned films the unstinted support of the British War Office and of the Central Association of Volunteer Regiments of Britain. For "The Warrior Strain" the British authorities lent to Mr. Jenks one of the huge machines—a Handley-Page—which were specially built for bombing Berlin.

Striking Studio Settings in New Artcraft.

Since Elsie Ferguson returned from Miami, Fla., to resume work at the Fifty-sixth street studio, New York, on her new Artcraft picture, "The Witness for the Defense," a number of unusual and artistic sets have been erected on the studio floor.

One of these sets, a large tent, of the kind used in India surrounded by tropical vegetation and embellished with numerous implements of native warfare, offered a picturesque background for an episode that will long be remembered.

Another set, representing an old English garden, was declared by several artists who went to the studio especially to look at it to be one of the most beautiful ever conceived by studio architects.

Lytell's Next "Blackie's Redemption."

Bert Lytell has nearly completed "Blackie's Redemption," produced at the Metro studios in Hollywood. The star's new picture is a scenarioization by Finis Fox of two of Jack Boyle's "Boston Blackie" stories that appeared in a monthly magazine, "Boston Blackie's Mary" and "Fred the Count." John Ince is directing. Alice Lake is Lytell's leading woman. The cast also includes Henry Kolker, Joseph Kilgour and Frank Currier.

Leaps Chasm on Horseback in No. 4 of "The Red Glove"

SOME of the most spirited action ever seen in a Universal serial is seen in the fourth episode of "The Red Glove," the late Big U serial release starring Marie Walcamp. The fourth episode, entitled, "The Passing of Gentleman Geoff," relates a story of the attack on the Blue Chip by the vulture band and of the death of Gentleman Geoff, supposed father of Billie. Finding that Tia Juana, the Mexican woman who possesses the map showing the location of the rich oil pools, has gone to the Blue Chip, Wiley and the vulture band attack the mountain post office and store, surrounding the place and attacking from all sides at once. The limited supply of ammunition possessed by the defenders is soon exhausted and Billie dashes through the ranks of the attacking party to seek aid from the sheriff and his posse. As Billie rides toward the hills the vultures give chase. Reaching a chasm Billie's horse leaps for the opposite bank, but slips, and with his rider falls forty feet to a sloping sand hill below, throwing his rider and rolling down a steep embankment into a water reservoir.

The fall of Billie and her horse from the rocky ledge to the water reservoir, many feet below, is one of the most thrilling incidents ever recorded by the camera, Universalites maintain. Director McGowan insisted that both Miss Walcamp and horse participate in the action, and to follow the fall closely the director used four cameras to record it.

Effective Night Scenes in Hayakawa Film.

The photographic mastery of Dal Clawson lends stirring effectiveness to the night scenes in "A Heart in Pawn," Sessue Hayakawa's current Haworth starring vehicle on the Exhibitors' Mutual schedule.

The charm and pathos of the stage play, "Shadows," from which "A Heart in Pawn" was adapted, was preserved to a large extent by the remarkable camera work of Clawson.

The night scenes in Japan are beautiful. Throughout the picture this fidelity to atmosphere is preserved—old Japan lives through the entire production. Some of the shots which Clawson obtained in Golden Gate Park, San Francisco, with its ideal Japanese setting, are real masterpieces of the photographic art.

"Common Clay" Meeting with Big Success.

The success of "Common Clay" as a drama on the spoken stage is being surpassed by its record as a Pathe special feature starring Fannie Ward despite the fact that the stage production ran for more than a year in New York and six companies played it in every city in the United States.

The established popularity for the A. H. Woods production of the Harvard prize play by Cleves Kinkead is what has aided greatly in putting over effectively the film version, backed by an abundance of advertising and publicity aids. All of the first-run houses where the big feature has been shown have advertised extensively and gone in for striking lobby displays.

Holds Pre-release Showing of Julian Film.

"The Fire Flingers," a Universal Special Attraction, was given a pre-release showing at the Broadway Theatre, New York, the week beginning March 23.

The film play relates a story of the love that weaves together the lives of a heartbroken girl whose cruel husband has killed himself and the man who poses as the man who died, and who, when he discloses his true identity, is saved from the hands of the law by the switching of Bertillon records of the dead man.

New York critics have recorded their praise of the production.

The Corbett Serial May Be Released in May or June

SIMULTANEOUSLY with the release of "The Red Glove," starring Marie Walcamp, comes the announcement from Universal City that work on the Universal serial, "The Midnight Man," which will introduce James J. Corbett to the screen, has progressed so rapidly that it is expected that "Gentleman Jim's" cinema debut will be made in May or June. Director James Horne is now working on the eighth episode.

The Corbett serial is being adapted from an original story by James W. Horne and Kenneth B. Clark. Harvey Gates has put it into scenario form. Corbett is seen as Bob Gilmore, the adopted son of John Gilmore, a seemingly wealthy man, who has obtained his fortune through forgery, and Martha, his wife, a gentlewoman, whose fortune her husband tries to secure when he finds his own wealth diminishing.

The cast for the Corbett serial includes Kathleen O'Connor, Joseph W. Girard, Frank Jonasson, Joseph Singleton, Orral Humphrey, Georgia Woodthorpe, William Sauter and Noble Johnson.

The Corbett serial will be in eighteen episodes. Universal's advertising and publicity forces are now at work on the big campaign book, posters and numerous stories for newspapers and magazines.

Special Opening Hours for Select Film.

Owing to the heavy demand for admission to all Loew theatres where Norma Talmadge is playing in her current Select picture, "The Probation Wife," special opening hours have been established. In Loew theatres where there is mixed vaudeville and pictures the doors are opened at 10:30 in the morning. The picture is put on at this hour, and is rerun starting at noon. After the second run the vaudeville bill goes on. In the other Loew houses devoted to pictures only the first showing of "The Probation Wife" is at 10:30 in the morning, and it is shown successively throughout the day, the final run starting at 11 p. m. This plan has been carried into effect in all Loew houses where "The Probation Wife" has already been shown, and will obtain in Loew houses where the attraction is yet to be seen.

Walter Perry Now in the Limelight.

One of the sudden rises to heights of screen fame is the success that has come to Walter Perry, whose character work in Jesse D. Hampton productions during the past year has firmly established him as a screen actor of unusual value.

Prior to coming to the films Perry was a popular vaudeville comedian. He also had many successes on the legitimate stage.

In Desmond's newest production, "The Prodigal Liar," which has just been completed and which will be released by the Exhibitors' Mutual, Perry has a role of more than ordinary importance and he brings to the portrayal an artistry that lifts his contribution to the picture out of the realm of commonplace and makes it as once a very effective and telling bit of film characterization.

Red Cross Nurses See "The Cavell Case."

Five hundred active members of the San Francisco Chapter of the American Red Cross were guests of H. L. Knappen, branch manager of Select's San Francisco exchange, recently at a private showing of Select's special, "The Cavell Case," in which Julia Arthur portrays the character of Edith Cavell, the martyred British Red Cross Nurse. The showing was given in the ball room of the St. Francis Hotel, and there was an additional program of music and singing. Members of the Spanish, Belgian and British consulates were also present.

The showing was arranged by Branch Manager Knappen on behalf of the San Francisco Red Cross Nurses who have been under fire in France, many of whom have returned to San Francisco with local troops.

Hall's Sixth Release Is a Typical Western Melodrama

FOR the sixth release on the 10-20-30 series of special productions, Frank Hall, president of Independent Sales Corporation, announces a typical Western melodrama, the only Western drama to be released so far on the 10-20-30 schedule. "When a Woman Strikes" is the title. The cast may be justly characterized as all-star, as four of the principal roles are interpreted by long-time favorites on the screen—Ben Wilson, Rosemary Theby, Neva Gerber and Robert Brower. All four are stars in their own right.

The story is of the West in the days when the sheriff was more powerful than the mayor or governor. It tells of the sacrifices made by a sister for a brother and the virile, big-hearted nature of a stage-driver who is made sheriff and solves a mystery that hangs over the lives of two innocent people.

Prints of the picture are now on their way to the Independent Sales exchanges. It is set for immediate release.

"Home" Is Mildred Harris' Next.

"Home" is the permanent title given Mildred Harris' latest Jewel production directed by Lois Weber and to be released shortly. The story deals with the efforts of a young girl to enter society, of her experiences at the country home of a girl schoolmate and the contrasts of the artificial society life and that of the girl's poor parents, who enjoy far more happiness in their humble surroundings than do the wealthy people who carry out a daily schedule of teas, dansants and entertainments. According to those who have viewed the film "Home" is the most appealing film drama in which Miss Harris has yet appeared. Al Ray, John Cossar and Clarissa Selwyn are seen in Miss Harris' supporting cast.

"Police" Is Third Essanay-Chaplin Release.

"Police" is the third of the Essanay-Chaplin quartet of revivified comedies to be released, bookings on which are reported by the George Kleine System to be larger than when first issued. The release date is March 29, although there are a number of pre-runs in downtown theatres of the larger cities for March 22.

In "Police," Charlie, on being released from prison, is exhorted by a fake minister to walk the straight and narrow. Being hungry, Chaplin fills himself up at a fruit stand. When he reaches for his one and only five dollar bill he finds that the spurious parson has "frisked" him. This results in a battle with the fruit vender. And then the fun begins.

"His Father's Wife," May Allison Next.

"His Father's Wife," an original comedy drama by E. V. Durling has been purchased by Maxwell Karger, Metro director general, to serve as May Allison's next starring vehicle. The production is to be made at the Metro studios in Hollywood.

Charles Swickard will direct Miss Allison. Work on the picture is to start at an early date. Walter I. Percival is to play opposite her in the forthcoming production. The task of making the story a scenario was given to Luther A. Reed.

Another Problem of Married Life.

The screening of "Charge It to Me," in which the American Film Company is starring Margarita Fisher, has now been completed. The picture will be published April 27.

This film bids fair to make a strong hit with wives, for it deals with the humiliating make shifts to which a young bride resorts in order to acquire a little ready cash to meet everyday trivial expenses.

"A Regular Fellow" Is Next Taylor Holmes Triangle

HAVING successfully launched the first of its new series of Taylor Holmes comedies with the release of "It's a Bear" on March 16, Triangle, with the publication of their April schedule, announces the second release featuring this well known comedian, "A Regular Fellow," for April 16.

Director Christy Cabanne has surrounded this star with an entirely different environment from the Western atmosphere which prevailed in Mr. Holmes' first Triangle. In fact, most of the action takes place aboard ship. Fascinating scenes of life aboard a big ocean liner are shown, while the hero is presented as a violent woman-hater who, when he meets the girl of his dreams, changes his mind more quickly than any woman ever could, and gets aboard the liner "somehow" to pursue her.

Dr. Daniel Carson Goodman, who wrote "A Regular Fellow," is said to have furnished a story admirably adapted to Mr. Holmes' individual and unusual mannerisms, resulting in a comedy of the snap-and-go style, with thrills, romance and humor cleverly intermingled.

Mr. Holmes is ably supported by a cast of real merit, including Mrs. Holmes and Millicent Fisher, and such well known Triangle players as Lillian Langdon and Bull Durham. Sam Landers was the cameraman.

Minter Picture Breaks Denver Record.

"The Amazing Imposter," featuring Mary Miles Minter, had a three-day run at the Strand Theatre, Denver. All box office records were broken. The manager, A. F. Megahan, writes: "Our patrons were delighted. The story was good; photography and lighting effects superb; cast exceedingly well chosen; settings, acting and direction above criticism."

Branch Reports Show Big Business with "Humanity"

A REPORT compiled by the exchange department of the Universal showing the business recorded on "The Heart of Humanity" brings out the fact that the production has eclipsed the sensational booking record established by "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin," during the first three months of its presentation throughout the country.

"The Heart of Humanity" was given its premiere at the Broadway Theatre, New York, on December 22, and within ninety days has been booked into more theatres than the "Berlin" film during a period of similar length. Not only has it been booked into more theatres than the "Berlin" film, but to date it has recorded even greater box office success.

The "Humanity" production has been shown in nearly every large city of the United States thus far, and letters and telegrams from exhibitors in all parts of the country tell of broken records and highest praise of the production by press and public.

The week ending March 22 marked the close of the sixth week of the film's exceptional showing at the Shubert Theatre, Minneapolis, and of several other extended runs in various cities of the Middle West. March 23 and 24 marked the start of indefinite runs of the big feature in 17 of the principal cities of the Mississippi Valley and of several score of runs throughout the Southern states and along the Pacific and Atlantic coasts. In Chicago and New York the production is playing to exceptional business in neighborhood houses, and in the Northwest territory where the film is being booked as a road show bookings that will keep the various companies en tour until July have been recorded.

Goldwyn Announces Five Strong Spring Subjects

GOLDWYN announces five big productions for early spring release—pictures certain to add greatly to the popularity of Mabel Normand, Geraldine Farrar, Tom Moore and Madge Kennedy—and concluding with another of the Rex Beach productions.

Leading off is Mabel Normand's "The Pest," which Samuel Goldwyn confidently predicts will surpass in popularity her recent success, "Sis Hopkins." "The Pest," which is set for release April 20, gives the comedienne more opportunties for her inimitable art of clowning and fun-making than any previous vehicle ever offered her.

A week following this picture comes what is Geraldine Farrar's most powerful screen offering, "The Stronger Vow." Again the diva is supported by Milton Sills, Tom Santschi and Hassard Short.

Third in the list is Tom Moore's newest comedy-drama, "One of the Finest." Aside from the comedy element in the subject it is replete with tense situations that bring out the star's dramatic talents. Again Moore has Seena Owen as his vis-a-vis, and once more the Goldwyn star has Harry Beaumont as his director.

"Leave It to Susan," Madge Kennedy's newest Goldwyn production, will be released May 11. Though the light comedy element is the main theme of the new Madge Kennedy release, the star is once more given opportunity to display her versatility—to evoke heart throbs, as well as laughter, from her audiences. Wallace MacDonald is Miss Kennedy's leading man. Clarence G. Badger is directing the picture.

Rex Beach's "The Crimson Gardenia," a strong picturization of one of the author's best sellers, is his newest contribution to the screen. New Orleans at the height of the carnival season is the locale of this Beach production released May 18. The Mardi Gras has been faithfully reproduced and every detail of the gorgeous pageant is shown in a human story of romance, adventure and intrigue. Reginald Barker is supervising the production, which is rapidly nearing completion. The new Beach drama brings popular Owen Moore back to the screen.

Power's Installed in Hospitals.

Motion pictures are a great boom to the sick and unfortunate and it is the exception now where the well equipped hospital does not possess a moving picture outfit with which to entertain its patients.

The Nicholas Power Company, Inc., manufacturers of the Cameragraph, has placed its machines in these institutions: Nebraska State Normal School, Peru, Neb.; South Dakota State Sanatorium, Custer, S. D.; State Homeopathic Hospital, Middletown, N. Y.; Norwich State Hospital, Norwich, Conn.; Danville Hospital for the Insane; Pontiac State Hospital, Pontiac, Mich.; Peoria State Hospital, Peoria, Ill.; Western Washington State Hospital, Fort Steilacoom, Wash.; Riverside Hospital, New York; Essex County Hospital, Cedar Grove, N. J.; Dayton State Hospital, Dayton, Ohio; Toledo State Hospital, Toledo, Ohio; Willard State Hospital, Willard, N. Y.; Hospital for the Insane, Battleford, Canada; Utica State Hospital, Utica, N. Y.; Western States Hospital, Hopkinsville, Ky.; The Insane Hospital Retreat, Pa.; American Red Cross U. S. General Hospital No. 16, New Haven, Conn.

Next "Big V" Special Comedy Ready.

Earl Montgomery and Joe Rock, whose "Big V" Special Comedies are not only mirth provokers, but likewise thrill inducers, will next be seen in "Girlies and Grubbers."

One of their stunts that called forth the applause of a big company of experienced players while the picture was in the making shows the two comedians jumping from opposite sides of a restaurant balcony to the middle of a grand staircase set in the centre of a room. The distance from the balcony to the staircase was twenty-five feet, and the drop from the balcony to the steps on which the Vitagraph comedy stars landed was a little over seventeen feet. Exhibitions of this sort of athletic prowess give the players in the West Coast studios as big a thrill as the audiences get later when the stunts are flashed on the screen.

"Girlies and Grubbers," as the title indicates, has pretty girls galore, while the grubbing end of it is well taken care of by the comedians in the restaurant scenes.

Stars Work on "The Open Road."

Monroe Salisbury, having completed "The Great White Darkness," is now at work on "The Open Road," written by Bernard McConville and being directed by Rupert Julian. "The Open Road" has an Italian setting and deals with the efforts of an Italian to get accustomed to Western ways and shows how he applies his knowledge of conditions when a band of rowdies interfere with his interests. Rhea Mitchell, well known to screen followers because of her work in various Mutual and independent productions, has been cast as Mr. Salisbury's leading woman. In his supporting cast are also Little Pat Moore, Alice Elliott and Frank Leigh.

American Retitles Minter Film.

The American Film Company send word that its new picture, featuring Mary Miles Minter, originally announced as "The Reign of Colleen O'Malley," has been rechristened "Mary O'Rourke."

Jans Company Gets Forty Tom Mix Single Reelers

IN line with its policy of following closely the public demand for short features, the Jans Distributing Company, with headquarters at 729 Seventh avenue, New York, has concluded a deal whereby it secures world rights for forty of the Tom Mix Western pictures.

The deal, by which the negatives for these pictures were secured from the Selig Polyscope Company, the maker of the productions, was consummated on the twenty-fourth instant, and the Jans Company announce that telegrams and mail requests are being received at their office in large numbers, and on the date the deal was closed several contracts for territory were signed.

These single reel pictures will be reissued on state rights basis, and the Jans Distributing Company announce that they furnish an unusual opportunity on account of the big demand for single reelers, as well as for the reason that the forty subjects referred to constitute all of the available Tom Mix one reel pictures.

Author Aids in Filming First Four Star Feature

HARRY RAVER, producer under Four Star auspices of "As A Man Thinks," film version of Augustus Thomas' stage success of that name, now practically completed, considers the new picture to be a striking illustration of the value of direct co-operation between author, producer, director and star.

"Everybody familiar with Augustus Thomas' work knows that his plays have been action plays—plays in which people do things every minute. All of the thirty-two Thomas' plays are so full of action, and the plots so cohesive, that it would be possible to film the speaking stage situations and achieve fairly satisfactory pictorial drama.

"The Thomas' plays are being picturized under the author's eye. Also, he is not one of those who regard the screen as an inferior medium for dramatic representation. In the picturizing of "As a Man Thinks" we have had the benefit of the author's genius for pictorial situation. There is no halting. From the opening scene to the final climax, there is not a single lapse in dramatic continuity.

"There are, too, lots of situations in the pictorial version that were not in the stage production, but they add conviction to the story.

"All things considered, I think it is safe to say that "As a Man Thinks" was produced under conditions as nearly as ideal as possible, and I am satisfied it will rank with the best of pictorial drama."

S. & S. Gets Territory on "Once to Every Man"

THE S & S Film & Supply Company in Pittsburgh, operating in western Pennsylvania and West Virginia, has secured rights to the Frohman Amusement Corporation's six part special attraction, "Once to Every Man." This transaction, together with the sales heretofore announced in this publication, closes out seventy per cent. of the United States, and the Frohman Amusement Corporation shortly expect to announce additional sales which will dispose of this attraction for the entire United States, which, together with the contracts already made for the foreign territory, will mean a one hundred per cent. distribution.

The Frohman Amusement Corporation also announce that they have disposed of the productions, "The Accomplice," "What Happened in 22," "The Rainbow" and "The Song of Sixpence," for Great Britain, to the M. P. Sales Agency, Limited, of London. These four latter are five part releases, and were made by the Frohman Amusement Corporation two years ago.

Mr. Nichols, of the M. P. Sales Agency, stated that the name of the Frohman Amusement Corporation has now become a recognized trade mark in Great Britain, and that productions of that company are sought after by exhibitors throughout the British Isles.

Immediately upon the closing of contracts on "Once to Every Man," the Frohman Amusement Corporation will commence its intensive campaign on the exploitation of the Texas Guinan two reel Westerns, and the Mack Swain Comedies, now being produced at their West Coast studios.

"Virtuous Men" Premiere at Fulton Theatre, April 6

THE premiere of "Virtuous Men," the inaugural Ralph Ince Film Attraction, will take place at the Fulton Theatre, New York, Sunday evening, April 6. This production, starring E. K. Lincoln, was produced under the personal direction of Mr. Ince, and is said to be one of the biggest melodramas ever screened.

It is announced that this showing will be surrounded by many distinctive features. A special musical score, introducing many innovations, has been prepared. It is said to be unusually well synchronized with the action, due to the composer having spent much time with Mr. Ince during the making of various scenes.

An elaborate lobby display will be a feature of this showing. Original paintings by Clarence Underwood, R. G. Morgan, Gustav Michelson and other well known illustrators will have a prominent place. Arthur H. Sawyer and Herbert Lubin, sponsors for this production, have also taken advantage of the extensive lobby of the Fulton to display other original pictorial effects prepared to accompany the picture.

The Fulton showing will mark the first public view of this film, the producers announcing that they have refused to permit special exhibitions, wishing to give all interested parties an equal opportunity of sizing up the production. It is expected that many notables and prominent persons, including buyers and exhibitors from all parts of the country, as far west as Seattle, will be present.

"When a Woman Strikes," with an All-Star Cast Behind Her, There Is Sure to Be Action.

Frank Hall features Rosemary Theby, with Ben Wilson, Robert Brower, and Nova Gerber, in this Independent 10-20-30 special.

Striking Posters Prepared for "The Carter Case"

HARRY GROSSMAN, of Oliver Films, Inc., announces that following this company's slogan of a step beyond the usual, a strikingly attractive collection of posters has been prepared for distribution among exhibitors which are said to equal anything thus far attempted in display advertising.

The foremost demand of Mr. Grossman in arranging for these posters was that a photographic likeness of the star players, Herbert Rawlinson and Margaret Marsh, must be retained in order that the public might become familiar with these two portrayers of the roles of Craig Kennedy and Anita Carter, around whom the film story revolves.

The twenty-four sheet shows the two stars puzzling over the terrifying mysteries surrounding them. The figure of Avion, Craig Kennedy's ghostly antagonist, is dimly pictured, and the terrors that lurk in the skies are symbolized by the hovering aeroplane. In the foreground are the appliances of science which, guided by Kennedy's keen intellect, prove more masterful than the enemy and finally conquer the secret terrors surrounding the heroine.

The one sheet, three sheets and six sheets of each episode have been designed to stir the imagination and to reveal just enough of the salient points to keep the public wondering how the detective will manage to overcome Anita's enemies and to cause them to go to the theatre and find out.

It is claimed that the unique and original character of the posters for "The Carter Case" will make the campaign as conspicuous and successful as the production itself.

S-L Pictures Establishes a Special Service Bureau

ARTHUR H. SAWYER and Herbert Lubin, sponsors for "Virtuous Men," the first Ralph Ince Film Attraction, starring E. K. Lincoln, acting on the belief that no picture, no matter how good it is, sells itself, have established a special service bureau at the S-L offices to aid exhibitors in presenting this production

Publicity material tied up with the important points in the production, the director, the star, etc., has been prepared, a new idea in lobby displays worked out, and a new series of color combinations used for the lobby photographs. A diversified number of cuts suitable for newspapers, programs, etc., have been prepared, and a comprehensive press sheet designed, said to contain only matter essential to the exhibitor in selling his entertainment. The executives of S-L Pictures in preparing this exploitation matter have been guided by their several years experience in the production and exhibition of films in determining the requirements of exhibitors.

A series of paintings and drawings by such well-known artists as Clarence Underwood, Gustav Michelson, R. G. Morgan, Harold Gregson and F. Luders has been reproduced for the lobby display, which should be of especial value account of the reputation of the artists. These have also been used as the basis for a unique series of posters, which, aside from being artistic, are designed to attract the eye by the strength of the dramatic scenes reproduced.

The service of this bureau will be used to supplement that of the distributor, and exhibitors not securing effective co-operation from the exchanges, can secure the necessary helps from the producers. The sponsors of "Virtuous Men" desire to emphasize the point that exhibitors will receive help and efficient exploitation material from them during the entire life of all S-L productions.

Edward H. Bizar with New State Rights Firm

AFTER an association with Metro, covering exchange management in several territories, Edward H. Bizar has resigned to promote the distribution of "The Spreading Evil," a feature secured by Screen Successes, Inc., for the state of New York. Exchanges will be opened in New York City and Buffalo for the proper circulation of the seven-part subject, with Mr. Bizar in charge of distribution.

Screen Successes, Inc., was incorporated by Mr. Bizar, S. Strausberg, who is identified with a circuit of motion picture theatres, and S. Blendes, a metal furniture manufacturer, with Mr. Bizar chosen as vice-president and general manager. Mr. Bizar was formerly an exhibitor in Paterson, New Haven and Passaic before he joined Metro to represent them as manager of their Canadian offices, later in Buffalo and more recently here in New York with Screen Classics.

Screen Successes, Inc., announce that they will buy special features of merit, not only for New York but for all Eastern territory, and are also in the market for negatives for entire United States rights.

Forty Tom Mix One Reelers Sold.

The Film Market, Inc., has just closed with the Jans Distributing Corp., 729 Seventh avenue, for the negative rights to forty single reel Tom Mix Westerns, which will be released on the state rights market.

Ralph Ince
Director of "Virtuous Men."

"Virtuous Men" Considered by Ralph Ince as His Best

RALPH INCE, who directed "Virtuous Men," which promises to be one of the biggest screen melodramas of the season, has to his credit some of the most successful pictures of recent years. He is a pioneer of the industry, having begun his career with Vitagraph more than ten years ago. Prior to that, he was an actor on the speaking stage.

He will be remembered by many photoplay patrons for his excellent characterizations during the early days, particularly that of Abraham Lincoln. He rapidly developed into a figure of prominence, producing several features, including "The Wreck," "The Combat," "The Juggernaut," "From Headquarters" and "The Eleventh Commandment." He introduced many of Anita Stewart's successes, and is responsible for her introduction in films.

Seeking an opportunity to enlarge the scope of his activities and to put into effect advanced ideas, a special company was formed to produce a series of Ralph Ince Film Attractions, the first of which is "Virtuous Men," starring E. K. Lincoln, assisted by a cast of well-known stage and screen players. Regarding this production, Mr. Ince says, "I consider 'Virtuous Men' the supreme achievement of my career. It is a melodrama of the fast moving type with society atmosphere, wonderful settings and a series of spectacular effects, which out-do anything of the kind I have ever attempted. I gave seven months of undivided attention to the direction of this production, and wish to stamp it with my personal assurance as the biggest melodrama ever offered to the motion picture public.

"I believe I have incorporated every element necessary to melodrama of the most realistic type. The swiftness of action, tensity of dramatic situations and spectacular scenes form what is to my mind perfect screen entertainment."

Big Demand Reported on "Reclaimed."

Alpha Pictures, Inc., reports that a large number of letters and telegrams have been received from exchangemen and exhibitors throughout the country regarding the Harry McRae Webster production "Reclaimed," which they are offering on state rights basis, and that announcement of sales of territory will be made in a short time. Mabel Julienne Scott and Niles Welch are the featured players in this picture, and they are assisted by a competent cast, including Anders Randolph, Mabel Wright and Bobby Connelly, Sidney Bracey and William Lambert.

Grossman Visits Chicago.

Harry Grossman, Vice-President and General Manager of Oliver Films, Inc., is visiting Chicago, where he is conferring with prominent exchangemen of the West and giving private showings of the initial episodes of "The Carter Case," the Craig Kennedy serial. Mr. Grossman made this arrangement of meeting the exchangemen half way to avoid their coming across the continent to view the picture.

The West is said to be the only territory in which the serial is not yet booked and it is expected that the showings will arouse among the Western exchangemen the same enthusiasm as in other territories when the initial showings were made.

"The Carter Case" Serial Has Auspicious Premiere

AFTER months of preparation the Oliver Films serial, "The Carter Case," starring Herbert Rawlinson and Margaret Marsh, based on the Arthur B. Reeve and John W. Grey "Craig Kennedy" story, is now being shown to theatre patrons.

An auspicious opening was held recently at the Symphony Theatre, Broadway and Ninety-fifth street, New York, which was of additional interest in view of the fact that this theatre never before presented a serial. According to Manager Kashin, the showing was a tremendous success, the house being filled at every performance during the two days and many being turned away.

Following this showing the Pioneer Film Corporation, controlling New York and northern New Jersey rights, announced it had completed bookings for a large number of New York theatres and anticipate "The Carter Case" will be shown in a greater number of houses than any other serial.

Harry Grossman, of Oliver Films, reports that bookings are being received at a rapid rate from all parts of the country. Much interest has been aroused among exchangemen and exhibitors who have viewed the opening episodes, and openings are being arranged in all the principal cities.

The fame of the Craig Kennedy stories, the popularity of the stars, Herbert Rawlinson and Margaret Marsh, as well as the extensive exploitation and high class and distinctive advertising for this serial, should all be of great value to exhibitors in filling their houses.

"Virtuous Men" Will Have an Unusual Lobby Display

THE S-L Pictures Organization announce that when "Virtuous Men," starring E. K. Lincoln, is released in the near future, many new ideas in lobby displays will be offered to exhibitors. A series of especially posed stills, together with illustrations in regulation sizes, have been prepared; also several odd sizes for window display and to fill unused corners of the lobby have been designed.

Unique color schemes are said to have been employed, while an atmosphere of distinction and beauty has been added by the reproduction of special drawings by the well known artists, Clarence F. Underwood, Gustav Michelson and R. G. Morgan.

What is said to be a highly artistic and striking effect, and contrasting with the rest of the material furnished, has been secured by the utilization of a new process recently perfected by the Rotograph Company in the 22x28 lobby photos, which are a variation of the general color scheme.

The producers, Messrs. Sawyer and Lubin, announce that in addition to being artistic, all of the display has been prepared with the object in view of attracting and holding the attention of the public.

Arrow Increases Its Staff, Secures Larger Offices

ANNOUNCEMENT is made by Doctor W. E. Shallenberger, president of the Arrow Film Corporation, that due to the unusual activity in the state rights market, the staff of the company has been enlarged, and the offices will be moved to the Candler Building, 220 West Forty-second street, on May 1.

F. B. Dana has been appointed director of advertising and publicity, and will have charge of publicity, advertising and sales. F. W. Gaffney has been engaged as auditor of finances, and W. Ray Johnson, who has been with Doctor Shallenberger for a number of years, has been appointed assistant treasurer.

Mr. Dana had many years' experience in the advertising agency business, later in the sales department of Universal, and within the past year or more was with Famous Players-Lasky company handling publicity for the Middle West and later employed in the advertising department in the home office. Mr. Gaffney was formedly an adjustment auditor for the Travellers Insurance Company.

The new offices of Arrow will be much larger than the old ones, and will have many new features, including a complete projection room for showing to state rights buyers, the films distributed by this company.

Doctor Shallenberger is optimistic as to the future of the state rights business, and says: "Our business has grown so rapidly during the past year, that we have been forced to expand the office and staff materially. We are striving to render the state rights buyer real service, not only in furnishing big features, but complete exploitation ideas and a line of advertising and publicity that will insure successful presentation of our pictures by the exhibitors.

"We believe our business is not only to sell the buyer, but to furnish proper ammunition so that he may be able to book his features successfully and profitably. I look for increased activity in the open market, and believe there never was a time like the present for independent exchanges to build up their business."

Rights on Shorty Hamiltons Sold.

New York and northern New Jersey rights to the Shorty Hamilton Western comedy dramas, "The Pen Vulture," "The Snail," "Denny from Ireland" and "The Ranger" have been secured by Elk Photoplays Company, 130 West Forty-eighth street. By arrangement with Victor Kremer, the Exhibitors Film Exchange, of Washington, D. C., has secured rights to the same productions for District of Columbia, Delaware, Maryland and Virginia. These pictures were produced by W. H. Clifford, who has to his credit many screen successes for popular players.

Three Episodes Ready of Western Photoplays Serial

THE three episodes of the new serial which is being made by the Western Photoplays, Inc., for release on the Pathe program, has been assembled and titled, and are now ready for release, announces A. Alperstein, general manager and treasurer of the organization.

The present title of the serial is "The Great Gamble," and Anne Luther and Charles Hutchison are the co-stars. It is being produced under the personal direction of Joseph A. Golden.

"The Great Gamble" is said to be entirely different from the regular type of serial. The story is an original one by Mr. Golden, and contains many surprises and unusual twists, and the theme, which has not yet been disclosed, is one that has never been used as the subject for a serial before. It is described as a society drama with a punch and shows how closely in some instances the social and the underworld is allied. It presents many opportunities for types, and is admirably counterbalanced with both the society and the "tough" elements.

R. W. Priest Handling Blackton Film.

J. Stuart Blackton, president and director general of Blackton Productions, has appointed Robert W. Priest, president of the Film Market Corp., exclusive sales agent for his latest production, "A House Divided," from the book by Ruth Boucicault.

The method of American distribution has not yet been decided upon, however, several prominent buyers have been bidding for the negative rights. Bech Van Siclen & Co., new to the exporting branch of the film industry, closed for the world rights, exclusive of the United States and Canada.

Territorial Ships Jester Prints to Eighteen Cities

PRINTS of each of the first three Jester Comedies which will be sold by the Territorial Sales Corporation on the state rights plan will be shipped to eighteen different film centres during the coming week. This unusual step has been taken in accordance with the announced plans of the Territorial Sales Corporation to screen every offering before allotting a franchise.

The Jesters which will be forwarded to the distribution centres are "In the Wild West," "Peace and Riot" and "The Tenderfoot." All the preliminary plans of the Territorial Sales have been perfected and with the shipping of the Jester prints the new state rights organization is prepared to get into the fullest action.

Within the past week a deal for the purchase of what is announced as one of the most successful photodramas produced during the latter part of last year was completed by the Territorial Sales. Announcement of the title and the plans for disposing of the picture will be made shortly.

The purchase of this picture is said to be only the forerunner of a number to be made by Territorial Sales, which has been scouring the market for photoplays which will meet the approval and the pocketbook of the average state rights buyer and exhibitor.

In other words, Territorial Sales is attempting to hit the middle class of pictures.

"Carter Case" Settings Historic and Valuable

A GREAT triumph in settings is said to have been achieved in Harry Grossman's production of the Craig Kennedy detective exploits in serial film form in "The Carter Case." In this spectacle of thrills and punches foremost attention necessarily must be given to the intricate and elaborate scientific devices which the famous detective-savant uses in the solving of mysterious crimes, and the interior settings conform to the same high standard.

E. Douglas Bingham, studio manager for Oliver Films, Inc., vouches for the historic interest attaching to the decorations of the living room in Carter Hall. A large painting over the mantelpiece is an original portrait of Cromwell, by Harry Gaynor; in an oval frame on its left is an original portrait of Jenny Lind's, the American Nightingale's Mother, painted by Dorothy MacDonald.

Three candelabra on the mantle are genuine antique sperm oil lamps which graced the stately Schuyler mansion when General Schuyler was the first governor of New York State. They are nearly three centuries old. A banjo clock on the rear wall comes from the old Peltz homestead on Staten Island, while the center table originally adorned the Van Renselaer manorhouse, at Renselaerville on the Hudson.

Mr. Bingham believes that a thing of beauty is a joy forever. And to give this joy to the millions of the Craig Kennedy serial fans fully justifies, he feels, the exhaustive research and tireless efforts spent in collecting the beautiful art objects and furnishings which will delight the Kennedy audiences.

World Film Gets Territory on Three Pioneer Subjects

THE Pioneer Film Corporation has just completed two big deals whereby the World Film Corporation secures rights to "Wives of Men," starring Florence Reed, and "The Still Alarm," for Wisconsin, Minnesota and North and South Dakota, and rights to "Little Orphant Annie," the filmization of James Whitcomb Riley's famous poem, for the United States, with the exception of New York.

Judging from the way in which "Little Orphant Annie" is booking in the New York territory, Mr. H. Hoffman says that he is assured it is worthy of greater exploitation, and has arranged for an elaborate bill board showing and to exploit it on big lines, as it is the policy of the Pioneer company to give all the help possible in the way of advertising and exploitation.

In carrying out this policy, although over one hundred and twenty exhibitors have already booked the Craig Kennedy serial, the Pioneer company will continue their advertising campaign, giving it posting on the bill boards beginning April 1.

The Pioneer Film Porporation also announces the sale of "Wives of Men" for the states of Colorado, Wyoming, Utah and New Mexico to Supreme Photoplays, Inc., of Denver, Col. To Greater Features, Inc., of Seattle, the rights for the states of Washington, Oregon, Idaho and Montana, on "Wives of Men" was sold.

"Mickey" Breaks Milwaukee Record.

The Wisconsin Film Corporation, controlling the rights to "Mickey" for that state, announced that this production holds the record for Milwaukee for the total number of houses and days played. "One hundred and one days have been played with sixteen more to play. There are fifty suburban houses in Milwaukee, and we have played all except three, for which we expect contracts also."

According to the W. H. Productions Company, similar records are being established in other territories. In Keene, N. H., with a population of a little over ten thousand, in three days, there were 4,339 paid admissions, announces the Boston Photoplay Company, controlling the New England rights.

Aywon Will Distribute Fifteen Feature Films

NATHAN HIRSH, president of the Aywon Film Corporation, announces that he will release fifteen five reel productions, which will include some of the finest dramas available. The first three will be "The Eternal Penalty," with Christine Mayo and Henry Kolker, "Roses and Thorns," with the Belasco star, Lenore Ulrich, in the stellar role, and "In the Days of Daring," starring Tom Mix, the cowboy actor. All of which are said to be absorbing, full of punch, thrills and tense scenes, well produced and enacted by capable casts.

On each of the fifteen releases there will be available a full line of attractive paper and advertising accessories, designed with the one idea of increasing business, and which should prove a great help to exhibitors.

In the New York territory, Mr. Hirsh will handle his own bookings. At the present time he is booking "Beyond the Law" in New York state, and the feature is not only booking well, but is said to be proving a dependable box office attraction. Further announcement as to names of other pictures in the Security Series, dates of release, etc., will be made within a short time.

First S-L Picture Appeals to All Classes, Says Lubin

VIRTUOUS MEN," the premiere of which will be held at the Fulton Theatre, New York, Sunday evening, April 6, marks the debut of Arthur H. Sawyer and Herbert Lubin in the field of producers. Prominent for their activities in state rights fields, the exploitation and selling campaign with which they distributed "The Warrior" last season is well remembered. In the production of "Virtuous Men," starring E. K. Lincoln, they announce that many advanced ideas have been carried out.

"It is the first of a series of special features bearing the brand name of 'Ralph Ince Film Attractions'," says Herbert Lubin, "and sets a high water mark in the matter of screen melodrama. In the making of 'Virtuous Men' the requirements of exhibitors for entertainment appealing to every class have been fulfilled. Mr. Sawyer and I intend to secure and hold the confidence of exhibitors by insuring for them the greatest possible profit, guaranteed always by the first consideration, that of pictures made for box office success through the proper choice of star, story, director, cast, and attention to detail."

Trade Showing Announced for "Your Wife and Mine"

STATE RIGHTS BUYERS, exhibitors, and the film trade in general are informally invited by Tyrad Pictures, Inc., to attend a showing of "Your Wife and Mine," a feature made in England and France, to be held Wednesday, April 2, at 3 P. M., at the Wurlitzer Hall, 120 West Forty-first street, New York City.

"In extending this invitation to the film trade, I wish to emphasize this point," said Jacques Tyrol, director general of the corporation, "that we expressly invite criticism. Our personal opinion is tha tin 'Your Wife and Mine," we have a rare box office attraction, a production that will make money for the exhibitor because it has all the virtues of a tried and true money maker. And we want those who will attend our showing to tell us with all candor just what they thing of it. We confidently believe that they will agree with us."

Mr. Tyrol also says that arrangements are being made to begin work soon on a big timely feature. A studio in the vicinity of New York has been acquired and all other production details perfected.

Sidelights and Reflections

Back in the days when the name of Lubin was a power in the film world a young actress of the Philadelphia Company so impressed the writer by her intelligent sincerity and general fitness for emotional expression he hailed her as a candidate for stellar honors. The actress was Helen Jerome Eddy, and her impersonation of the heroine in "The Turn of the Road," lately released through Exhibitors Mutual, sustains the World man's prediction.

An industrious compiler of Special Service Sections swears he dreamed, the other night, he found himself up in front of St. Peter in company with a number of other goodly souls. In place of the customary questions St. Peter put but one query:

"What unusual thing have you ever done?"

The first goodly soul to reply was a sad-eyed, weary-looking individual, who spoke after this fashion:

"I was a moving picture theatre manager and I read every line of advice to exhibitors in the Special Service Sections."

"Step aside!" exclaimed St. Peter, with frowning brow. "No man has lived long enough, or ever will live long enough, to read one half of it!"

Hardly a week passes without a picture being shown that is another example of the unpleasant fact that plots, like pigs, are hard to drive in the way they are wanted to go. Last week three of the leading moving picture theatres of New York ran features in which the stars were of the gentler sex, and in every case the leading man of the cast walked away with the honors. This week another picture is supposed to have its chief interest around the heroine, but the young gentleman she marries takes the center of the screen and keeps it with hardly an effort. All these plots have been fashioned by experts and directed by men who know all the tricks of their trade, but they have been utterly unable to alter the condition of affairs.

To change the comparison from pigs to ponies, the plots have taken the bits in their teeth and bolted the playwright's track. It is this element of chance in every stage drama and photoplay that occasionally permits some unknown actor or actress to make an unexpected hit in what was intended for a minor part. It also involves a serious showmanship angle: When a star is advertised to appear in a play the public expect him or her, as the case may be, to have the dominating part. The picture may be entertaining, but the spectator resents seeing the star pushed into the background. WEITZEL.

"The Girl Who Stayed at Home"

An Artcraft Picture of Two Love Stories Produced by D. W. Griffith.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

THE standard Griffith has set for himself is so high that a product of his must be criticized by that standard. No man knows better the high value of suspense—it might justly be said that he was first to make screen use of arousing anxiety as to the outcome, but he seems to be developing a disregard for it and for other values in favor of the spectacular. While he is a master at handling battle scenes, giving them individual interest as well as impressionist effect, one battle scene is very much like another. Their best use is to augment interest in the story. "The Girl Who Stayed at Home" draws attention to some bits of philosophy in the subtitles, to a plucky young American who loves a girl of French environment and to his dilatory brother who loves an American show girl, a threering circus, the merits of each distracting from the others, all this over many and long lapses of time, intermingled with a number of outside interests, such as the parting of a German soldier from his mother, having no important relation to the plot. There are some fine portrayals of character, especially by Clarine Seymour and Robert Harron, besides the impressive spectacles, all enjoyed by a crowded house at the Strand.

The Story

Two American brothers display different spirits, one volunteering, the other evading service. They are reunited on the field through the slacker's enforced regeneration. The volunteer loves a young lady whose grandfather was an irreconcilable secessionist, who at last salutes the American flag when American soldiers save his life. The slacker brother has a girl who stays at home, a show girl exposed to much temptation, but true to her soldier lover. The volunteer wins his bride and the two brothers return home, the pride of their friends. The slacker, no longer one, weds the plucky little girl who waited for him loyally and joyfully.

"The Woman on the Index"

Goldwyn Presents Pauline Frederick in Fine Play by Lillian Tremble and George Broadhurst.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

AT last Pauline Frederick is seen in a drama affording her opportunity to display her undoubted talent as a screen actress. Her role in "The Woman on the Index" is that of a woman with a past of ignominy, though not of dishonor, strong in her intuitive sense of honor, but a victim of circumstance and weak in her womanly concealment of her past from a husband in whom she could have fully confided. The character is entirely logical although placed in more than one strong dramatic situation. "The Woman on the Index" has some minor faults, one of which, the symbol of the pointing hands, could be cut out entirely to the advantage of the illusion of watching a segment of real life. The Goldwyn production gives her flawless support. Willard Mack is a most accomplished and convincing villain. With such a combination, including Miss Frederick at her best under highly capable direction, a packed house at the Rialto sat enthralled. The play is forceful and a desirable addition to any program.

Mrs. Martin.....Florida Kingsley

From the play by Lillian Trimble Bradley and George Broadhurst.

Directed by Hobart Henley.

The Story.

Sylvia Martin's past is that of despair. Turned out of an unhappy home in a state of exhaustion she becomes the wife of a handsome and manly type of crook, but before the marriage is consummated, he kills himself to avoid arrest, and she is tried for murder. The unfortunate woman is acquitted, but the trial is recorded in a police index and falls into the possession of an astute agent of the Bolsheviki. He utilizes it in his pursuit of the wife, while she is compelled to lend herself to the schemes of a secret service officer familiar with her early career. She goes to the villain's rooms by appointment, really to secure an incriminating document, and is at first thwarted by his cleverness, only to succeed through his own excess of shrewdness, when she is restored to the arms of a forgiving and adoring husband.

Advertising Angles: Play strongly upon Miss Frederick's popularity, but always add that she is seen in one of the dramatic successes of last season; an up-to-the-minute play. Make plentiful use of the 24-sheets, which are particularly good in gaining interest. Carry out the same idea of the accusing hands in your lobby display. Either cut them out from extra twenty-fours or have them painted up, but scatter them all over your lobby. In your newspaper ads use plenty of "fists" with "Who was the Woman on the Index?" It will even pay you to make a giant hand large enough for a small boy to get inside, and send it around the streets, properly lettered. Make a framework of lath, with profile or compo board to get the correct outline and cover with paper or cloth. Make the hands do all the work.

"When My Ship Comes In"

Picture Made for Independent Sales Corporation Suffers from Poor Direction.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

THE five-part production, "When My Ship Comes In," for the Independent Sales Corporation in which Frank G. Hall presents Jane Grey, holds the interest of the spectator in spite of the fact that it suffers from poor direction plus careless construction. The picture is adapted from a novel by Gouverneur Morris, the plot of which suggests fine box office values, and the story of the stage which it presents carries an illusion loved by the masses. The production as it stands would have been much improved by the use of subtitles less obvious in character, and also by the injection of detail of a convincing nature. The plot contains plenty of opportunity for thrilling action which finds little response until the arrival of the climax of the play where man fights man in a struggle for the supremacy of right.

Paul Grayson, a young mining engineer, suddenly develops into a playwright, creating a play of such fine quality that a dramatic critic of his acquaintance makes it his business to bring it to the attention of Hedden, a big theatrical producer in New York City. The producer, after spending the night in poring over the possibilities of the play, decides that it is worth stealing, and forthwith has a copy of it struck off, sending back the original with a note stating that it is worthless. Hedden, in search of a type for the feminine lead of the play, finds what he is looking for in Silver Sands, the daughter of an old sea captain with whom he boarded when he was a young actor. Paul Grayson also finds his way to the same harbor and falls in love with the captain's daughter. In the meantime the producer is teaching his protege the role in which he is to star her in New York. By mere chance the newspaper man happens in at a rehearsal of the play at the theatre in New York and discovers the game that has been put over on his friend. Grayson is notified by wire and hurries to New York to establish his claim. He arrives at Hedden's apartment with his friend at the moment when he is trying to compromise Silver. After breaking open the door of the apartment Grayson engages Hedden in a fight, the result of which is the signing of an agreement to feature Grayson as the author of the play and Silver as the star.

LOUISE HUFF is at her best in this enjoyable five-reel World-Picture, "The Little Intruder," which is to say that she is equipped with a good role and plays it with an engaging combination of humor and personal charm. She has unusually expressive features and often carries difficult situations without the aid of subtitles.

The story in this instance is a pleasing little comedy-drama, in which there is a well-protected mystery as to the girl's identity. This is a type of plot that is often attempted with only a fair degree of success. In this instance, the observer is kept in an agreeable state of wondermcnt until the very close as to whether the girl is really a clever crook, named "Philadelphia Mary," or the niece of one of the principal characters.

The supporting cast does good work.

The Story.

George Conklin and his wife, Virginia, are at a seaside resort, and the young husband becomes jealous of the attentions showered upon his wife by other men. He goes to New York for the purpose of hiring a private detective to aid him in getting evidence for a divorce. At his home George discovers a pretty girl who has entered the place without announcement. While he is debating what to do with the intruder, a policeman enters and declares that she is a girl crook known as "Philadelphia Mary."

George has just read two letters, stating that his niece, Beatrice Conklin, has come in from the West and then decided to return home because she did not like New York. He makes a hurried decision to protect the intruder, who gives her name as Betty McCarthy, and he tells the policeman she is his niece. The policeman goes away and George induces Betty to come to the resort hotel and pose as his niece, at the same time acting as detective for the purpose of getting information as to his wife's conduct.

Betty goes and enters into the fashionable life of the place. She soon wins the love of Billy Kent, Mrs. Conklin's brother. The rest of the story deals interestingly with the manner in which Betty saves Mrs. Conklin's honor and also the family jewels. She, of course, turns out to be George's real niece, and her mysterious pal, "Bob" McCarthy, is the man who has for years acted as her guardian.

"Experimental Marriage"

Ripples of Laughter Break Out All Through Delightful Constance Talmadge Comedy.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

SELECT PICTURES has a thoroughly enjoyable, polite comedy in "Experimental Marriage," five reels, with Constance Talmadge in the leading role. It has markedly, in acting, direction, sets and photography, that suggestion of perfection that we call finish. It is quite up to date and tickles the spectator's most modern rib. A ripple of laughter was almost continuous during its projection before the press people who came to the Select office to review it.

It also has markedly that suggestion of personality that we call atmosphere. The refinement, grace and appearance of Constance Talmadge as the heroine have a large part in this, but not all. There are no discords. The part of the mother, as played by Edythe Chapman, is, for instance, a perfect counterpart to the heroine's character. The sets too have a part in it and the soft, clear, well-lighted picture that the film puts on the screen must also be counted. The plot, as is expected in comedies of this kind, serves as the thread on which the amusement-giving situations are strung. It is distinctly a high class attraction. The name seems hardly descriptive.

The Story.

The heroine is a thoroughly modern young lady of lovable disposition who suffers from touches of over-developed enthusiasm around which the story plays its comedy situations. When the hero, to whom she is engaged and with whom she soon makes a contract marriage with an agreement that they shall live together only from Saturday till Monday, is present she forgets her mission as the chosen leader of the Votes for Women movement. When he is absent, that enthusiasm is apt to fire her again. The "experimental marriage" is her idea, but he is a lawyer, has confidence in himself and sees how, by giving in to her, he can get his own way.

No women are allowed in his apartment house, but he gets permission for the week-end bride's presence. The janitor helps the comedy especially when her husband's friend dares a woman friend to come in and cook a meal in his apartment. The heroine finds that it will be necessary to make her husband jealous. She doesn't succeed, but thinks she has to such an extent that her happiness is in jeopardy. At the close it looks as though they had decided to add from Tuesday till Friday to their week ends together.

Advertising Angles: Play up Miss Talmadge and make full capital of the fact that this play is based upon the stage success, "Saturday to Monday." Take all of your advertising space to establish the facts on which the story is based: the demand of the little wife that she be free from Monday to Saturday of each week. Don't fill in, just state the case and let curiosity do the rest. Amplify with such lines as "A part-time marriage," but center the story of the play and let that work for you.

Five-Reel Diando-Pathe Presents Baby Marie Osborne in Pleasing Story.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THIS five-reel subject, "The Sawdust Doll," will entertain the wide public which follows the stories featuring Baby Marie Osborne. It is perhaps not so strong as certain numbers in which she has appeared, but there is a well-defined plot, and occasional human and dramatic touches do much to help out the interest. There is a real heart appeal in the scenes where the child sets fire to her rag doll for the purpose of flagging a train loaded with soldiers, one of whom is her father.

Certain features of the plot are not entirely convincing and some of them are rather absurd, among them being the young blacksmith's hurry-up wedding with the "powder puff" lady, merely to please his small daughter. But there is, at any rate, a strong element of novelty in the story, which is not at fault in its ideas so much as in the uneven construction and the tendency to rush several of the incidents at the expense of conviction.

The story contains plenty of action and considerable good humor, in which the colored boy, Sambo, takes part frequently.

A traveling beauty doctor comes to the town, accompanied by his demonstrator, Rose Budd, a pretty ex-cabaret performer. The beauty doctor meets with financial reverses, leaving Rose to look out for herself. The girl goes to the local drug store and makes an agreement with Raynor, the young proprietor, to demonstrate certain articles in his window. Raynor agrees to this and Rose comes in for considerable adverse criticism from Jim for her appearance in the window.

The young blacksmith nevertheless asks Rose to marry him, at the request of Sally Lou, and brings her to his humble home as his wife. Rose is happy for a time, but does not like housekeeping. She soon strikes up a flirtation with Raynor and also treats Sally Lou badly.

The crisis comes when Jim goes to a training camp and Rose determines to elope with Raynor. The latter is in a conspiracy to wreck the troop train and Sally Lou plays an important part in upsetting this plan and also bringing Rose back to her senses. Sally even sacrifices her beloved rag doll for the purpose of making a torch to stop the threatened train.

But you can get more out of this than the average Baby Osborne story by playing up the sacrifice of the beloved doll. You can make a very effective lobby advertisement by leading gas hose into a huge doll and showing it apparently in flames, using a card to play up the kiddie's deed. WITH hair cropped in ugly prison style and in drab convict garb William S. Hart comes as "Hairpin Harry" Dutton in his newest Artcraft picture, "The Poppy Girl's Husband." The production demonstrates that Hart can do execution with a burglar's kit as effectively as with his six-shooters, which is to say that the Western role is not the only part he can fill. The picture has a tendency to drift slowly at times, but the various stages of the convict's attitude toward his faithless wife are well presented, and this could not have been done in a hurry else the big psychological merits of the picture would have been squandered. Hart's antics with the boy are an interesting chapter in the production. The boy, Georgie Stone, does an exceptionally good child's part. The brand, as a mode of revenge, is old for a photoplay of the Hart type, and a newer idea would have added to the picture.

Dutton discovers, on the way back to San Francisco, that his wife had secured a divorce a year after he had been sent up, and was now married to Big Mike McCafferty, the detective who had forged his case. The ex-convict enlists in the gang of Montana Kid, but keeps straight for the sake of his boy with whom he plays "Indian" in the park unknown to his mother or his step-father, the detective. Dutton learns that his former wife is afraid of him and is planning to have her husband "frame" him. He makes a brand, picturing a woman pushing a convict into his grave, and is almost at the point of taking his revenge, when his boy's sobs deter him. The end of the picture shows father and son enjoying outdoor life far up by the mountain lakes.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Bill Hart is Hairpin Harry Dutton, the Convict Burglar in Latest Feature.
Perfidity of Polly the Poppy Girl Produces Astounding Change in Mind of the Convict Who Loved Her.
Love of Boy Turns Hairpin Harry from Cruel Revenge on Wife in Big Psycological Picture.
Bill Hart Wields Hairpin and Jimmy Instead of Six-Shooters in Story of the Paroled Convict.
Cell Picture of Happy Home Swept Away by Conduct of Faithless Wife for Whose Sake He Endured Solitary.

Advertising Angles: Play Hart's name to the limit in the papers and on the billboards. Also play up the fact that he is seen in a new type of character for him and announce that the play is based upon the Red Book story of the same title. Play up on the title along the lines of "She was as bright and beautiful as the poppy she was named for, but her heart distilled a more terrible poison than the deadly plant." Also work on the lines of "See Bill Hart in the underworld—a paroled convict seeking revenge upon a faithless wife." You have something out of the usual to sell, so offer it strongly.

"Extravagance"

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

THE new Paramount attraction, "Extravagance," comes from the Ince studio and has Dorothy Dalton in the role of a money-hungry wife. It gets over convincingly and powerfully enough and is easily a high-class picture in five reels. The background is New York, Fifth avenue, a $25,000 a year apartment, a jeweler's, Wall street and a broker's office. Charles Clary has the role of the young husband who is pushed over the brink of failure by his wife's extravagant demands. The picture shows that her heart is all right, but that she has wrong ideas and it is skillful in suggesting how she got them. It also puts in a few contrasting colors of a simpler life free from care. In the outcome the wife awakens to her better self. Miss Dalton and Mr. Clary give the action the right atmosphere and picture the emotions with a sure touch for the effect desired on the spectator. The subtitles are above the average. It is the kind of picture that will warrant an advertising splurge.

Cast.

Helen Douglas.....Dorothy Dalton
Alan Douglas.....Charles Clary
Hartley Crance.....J. Barney Sherry
William Windom.....Donald McDonald
Billy Braden.....Philo McCullough

Directed by Victor L. Schertzinger.

The Story.

Mrs. Douglas and her husband live in one of the expensive apartments in New York City. He is a broker and their friends are the very rich. The wife lives in the atmosphere where the expenditure of a fortune for a bit of pretty jewelry is considered as nothing to speak of. She wants to keep step with rich friends and the tired broker is being incited to take more and more risky leaps into speculative finance.

The wife demands that her husband give her a $30,000 necklace and he refuses. She goes to her room in a fret and then —we are at first not let into the secret that what now happens is only a dream— the police come for her husband who has embezzled to pay for her finery. He kills a man, goes to jail and becomes mad. She wakes next morning and finds things much as she left them. There is a scene in the broker's office where he finds himself facing ruin and she refuses to put her money into the deal, because she wants to get him out of that futile life. He misunderstands her at first; but in the end they realize they have won, not lost.

Feature Dorothy Dalton as the pleasure-loving wife, Charles Clary as the money-mad husband, J. Barney Sherry as the sane friend.

Advertising Angles: Feature Miss Dalton and work on the title. Ask your reader, "Are you living beyond your means?" "Would you rather have an auto and pork and beans or chicken dinners and the street cars?" Advise them to see "Extravagance" for the answer. Try "Don't be extravagant, see 'Extravagance'" for a throwaway, and work on the same lines in the newspapers. Seek to sell the theme of the story rather than this particular story.

Advertising Aids: Two each one, three and six sheets. One 24-sheet. Lobby displays, 8x10, 11x14 and 22x28. Cuts from one to three columns on star and production. Advertising lay-out mats. Slides.

"Thou Shalt Not"

Emotional Six-Reel Fox Picture With a Deep Religious Interest.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

THE new Fox picture, "Thou Shalt Not," six reels, effectively shows that while the world, particularly in a small community, harps on the Thou Shalt Nots, there is more humanity in the later Christian teachings of love and forgiveness. At one point of the plot the director has found it advisable to introduce into this modern story a glimpse of the outer court of the Temple and Christ saving the unfortunate woman from being stoned. This makes clear the kind of story the picture tells. It deals with the biggest things that life knows and, so far at least as the substantial body of the picture goes, does it in such a sincere and effective way that no one can watch it without emotions that go to the roots of his being.

The opening and the closing of the story will seem weak to some. The first, because the heroine who fills the requirement perfectly when once the situation has been stated is not so sure in registering the happiness many will associate with the girl in the opening of the story. The ending, in which the minister, after a scene in a church that for the truth of its significance is far above the expected, leads the forsaken woman away to a "happier life" apart from carping critics. Thus the picture, after electing to move us by a dramatic religious situation, lets us down by retreating from a spiritual plane to a lower one.

Evelyn Nesbit

Has emotional part in "Thou Shalt Not."

The backgrounds are excellent and the general handling of the plot effective. Not a little of the picture's interest comes from the lesser characters as they are conceived and played by the cast. Evelyn Nesbit in the leading role gives us one of the best things she has done.

Cast.

Ruth .....Evelyn Nesbit
Her Father.....Ned Burton
Her Mother .....Florida Kingsley
Alec Peters.....Gladden James
The Minister.....Crawford Kent
A Rural Swain.....Eddie Lawrence

Story by Charles J. Brabin.

Directed by Charles J. Brabin.

The Story

Opens by showing us a sweet-natured country girl in a setting of a farmhouse home with her father and mother. She falls in love with a character of the village who is not worthy of her love and, perhaps half because of untactful parental opposition, runs away with him to the neighboring city to get married. No ceremony is ever performed.

The young minister of the village is a sincere preacher and lives up to his religion. He had liked the girl and when the old mother is sick because of the girl, he goes to the city, finds her and brings her back. He has her come back into the church choir and then the trouble with his parishoners begins. The first Sunday some leave the church. The second Sunday there is a hot discussion in which the church people say just what is in their hearts and the minister, disgusted, leaves the pulpit and takes the girl with him.

Program and Advertising Phrases:

Evelyn Nesbit, Famous Screen Personage, Starred In Story of a Girl Who Came Back.

How An Innocent Girl Tasted the Apple of Knowledge.

Vital Story of Sociological Questions Relating the Come-Back of A Repentant Sinner.

How a New England Magdalen "Hit the Trail" to the Mourners' Bench.

Powerful Morality Drama Depicting the Misfortunes of a Tempted Country Girl.

Advertising Angles: Play up the star. She is your chief item of appeal. Make the most of it. For the story angle take that of the minister who preferred to rescue one soul in need than to minister to a congregation of hypocrites. Play this angle heavily, but be careful to avoid offending church members. The line from the press book, "Watch out for Cupid," "Cupid's Cloven Hoof," is also a good angle. Play it up without telling just what it means.

Advertising Aids: One, three and six sheets, two styles of each. Lobby displays, 8x10, 11x14 and 22x28. Announcement slide. Cuts, mats and press sheets (cuts are made on special order at rate of 20 cents per column; mats and press sheets are mailed gratis).
Released March 23.

"The Cambric Mask"

Alice Joyce Starred in Vitagraph Production with Maurice Costello Supporting.

Reviewed by William J. Reilly.

VITAGRAPH'S PICTURE, "The Cambric Mask," has elements making for popular appeal, but it suffers at the same time from too much attention to the details of a well-worn story. There is little love interest as the girl is won by the hero at the outset. The main story deals with an attempt of a band of "White Riders" to force the sale of valuable property, and the characters are whirled from one scene to another without being given a chance. Alice Joyce is featured and is likable in the comparatively few opportunities she has of displaying real personality.

Maurice Costello again seen in a Vitagraph picture, fills to good advantage the role of the strong-armed hero. The masked riders will give the production popular appeal.

Cast.

Rose Ember.....Alice Joyce
Robert Ember.....Herbert Pattee
John Sark.....Maurice Costello
Henry Murden.....Roy Applegate
David Creed.....Bernard Siegel
Daniel Guernsey.....Jules Cowles
Story by Robert W. Chambers.
Directed by Tom Terriss.

The Story.

John Sark is the owner of a piece of land coveted by Henry Murden, leader of the band of "White Riders," who has purloined the information that a railroad wishes to buy the property. Sark is a naturalist and has for an assistant Rose Ember. He discovers one of the rider's masks which is made of one of Rose's handkerchiefs, and this introduces a mysterious element into the love affair. The mask belonged to her father. The Riders try to force Sark's hand, but are obliged to capture him. Rose, seeing Sark lead away, dons a mask, and riding close to his horse, cuts his bonds. Sark kills Murden, and, finding that his savior was Rose, is once more happy in his love.

Mask of White Rider Made of Girl's Handkerchief Only Serves to Lead Hero to Action.
Alice Joyce Featured in Role of Heroine Who Saves Lover from Death in Murky Swamp.
Maurice Costello Returns to Vitagraph in Story of Night Riders Led by Cruel Desperado.
Heroine Dons Masks of Dreaded Riders to Save Lover and Win Father to Better Life.

Advertising Angles: Play up Miss Joyce, but do not neglect to let your public know that this is from a story by Robert W. Chambers bearing the same title. Use such descriptive lines as "A romance of the white riders," "Girl's filmy handkerchief a mask of death," "Girl rides with midnight murderers to save her sweetheart's life." Stress the fact that this is a strongly romantic story with vivid action and a well-marked heart interest. Make a mask out of a fine handkerchief and display in the lobby with a card reading "Did any lady patron drop this?" Display in advance of the full billing to lead into interest in the title.

"That's Good"

Hale Hamilton Has Likable Role in Metro Comedy from Story by Richard Washburn Child.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

CLEAN fun and honest romance are to be found in the Metro picture, "That's Good." The leading character gives Hale Hamilton a likable young chap to play and he invests him with his own breezy personality. The story, written by Richard Washburn Child and adapted to the screen by A. G. Kenyon, is a simple one, but it has the right ring and will entertain throughout its five reels. Most of the scenes are laid in a small town and center around the principal "Gent's Furnishing Store." An attempt by a gang of crooks to swindle the proprietor of the store out of twenty thousand dollars is handled cleverly and the finish shows them beaten at their own game. The action seldom becomes melodramatic, the comedy bringing frequent laughs.

Supporting Hale Hamilton is an actress programed as Stella Gray. It is an open secret that she is a well known headliner from the vaudeville stage. Her work shows decided promise. The rest of the support is capable. Harry L. Franklin's direction is excellent.

The Story.

Marcellus Star, proprietor of a gent's furnishing store in Bodbank, is picked out by a gang of crooks as an easy mark. The first move is to send two of the members to call on Marcellus at his store. Josephine Pollock, whose good looks are used as a bait, is one of the pair. Barrett Prentice, her companion, finds Marcellus a ready victim. He falls into the trap without any urging and is quickly smitten with Josephine. The scheme is to pretend that a syndicate wants to help him enlarge his business. In reality they want to trick him into backing a fake horse race. Marcellus goes to Chicago and is shown how he can clean up a fortune.

Delighted at the chance of being in Josephine's company he falls deeper in love with her every moment, and readily consents to return home for the money. Josephine follows him and is introduced to his little niece, whose money is to help make up the twenty thousand. By this time the woman has realized what a fine chap she is helping to swindle and that she is in love with him. She is made doubly happy when she learns that Marcellus knew all the time what the gang was trying to do and that he was determined to reform her and make her his wife. Happy ending for "That's Good."

Sell You CINE-MUNDIAL Advertising!

La Vita Cinematografica, one of the foremost Italian tradepapers, devotes seven pages of its latest issue to a discussion of Latin-American film conditions started by Adolfo Croce, the delegate sent to Argentina by a combination of Rome and Turin producers in an attempt to recover those southern markets.

Lack of space prevents us from reproducing the article in full, although it would make very interesting reading. To American manufacturers and exporters, who are becoming peevish at the "foreign trade experts" with their constant nagging, the article is bound to give a refreshing sensation, as the Italian moving picture man appears to have a very high opinion of their ability and methods of going after business.

As a proof of the enterprise of American film traders, the writer mentions our Spanish edition in the following words:

" . . . and there is CINE-MUNDIAL, a magazine published in New York in the Spanish language, well gotten up, newsy, giving a monthly resume of the trade activities in all the Spanish and Portuguese speaking countries of the world. This trade paper, the circulation of which reaches thousands and thousands of copies, is found on the desk of every exhibitor and renter from Patagonia to the smallest Central American republic.

"I have sent copies of this publication from Buenos Aires to the Italian trade papers and all the film manufacturers."

Because American manufacturers have been quicker than their European brothers to recognize the tremendous selling force of CINE-MUNDIAL in Spanish and Portuguese-speaking countries, to their great advantage, this statement is an "admission" of strength which its author takes little joy in making. It ought, therefore, to be doubly convincing.

"Well, I'll Be ——"

Vitagraph Initiates New Series of Larry Semon Comedies with a Few Cursory Remarks.

Reviewed by William J. Reilly.

VITAGRAPH announces with "Well, I'll Be——" a new series of Larry Semon comedies to appear once a month, independent of the Big V comedies. In this production, starring himself, and directed by himself, Larry Semon brings forth a wealth of laughter as the booby sheriff of a Western town whose lawlessness matched his witlessness. A demure little thing from the East arrives on the same stage with a consignment of $100,000 to the sheriff, and the town proceeds to celebrate. After reforming the champion "elbow-bender" of the community, the demure one inspires the sheriff to action against the lawless element. The $100,000 changes hands in rapid and humorous fashion, and finally comes into the possession of the demure thing who had followed the cash all the way from New York. Larry proceeds to make a few cursory remarks on women. The comedy is an excellent one.

COMMENTS

Fox Film Corporation.

MONEY TALKS, a Sunshine Comedy in two reels which will go faster than the imagination of any among the spectators who isn't an escape from an asylum, and give him more surprises to the minute than one would thing it possible. The subtitles are witty, the action is astonishing and the whole, though indescribable, is certainly amusing.

WILD WAVES AND ANGRY WOMEN, a Mutt and Jeff Comedy. We find the cartoon funmakers as proprietors of a swimming pool. They have an Adonis (Mutt) to teach swimming to the fair sex, and when a lot of policemen's wives come, and the place, a little later, is raided, some lively things are started.

FIREMAN SAVE MY CHILD, a Mutt and Jeff Comedy, gives a chance to use the stream of water from a nozzle in new and laugh-giving ways. A very enjoyable cartoon comic.

Famous Players-Lasky.

REILLY'S WASHDAY (Sennett Comedy). —Those who love action will get it and almost a surfeit in this latest Sennett farce, "Reilly's Washday." Chief contributors are Charles Murray, Eva Thatcher and Marie Prevost, though the trained dog and a cat of marvelous psychology take important parts. There is no attempt at a connected story, just a bewildering succession of incidents, many of them ingenious, nearly all of them outrageously amusing with here and there a swift glimpse of human nature, just enough to afford the needed spice of reality to farcial horseplay. It will go anywhere.

Universal Film Company.

HEARTS IN HOCK (L-KO).—March 19. —A two-reel comic of the strictly knockabout, semi-burlesque type. The chief figure is a judge whose court is connected with a pawnbroker's establishment. A bomb is thrown into the court room from the latter establishment during a trial. This is a number of average quality, with some humorous moments of fair strength.

INTERNATIONAL NEWS No. 10 (Universal)—March 5.—Uncle Sam's treatment of war prisoners, firemen fighting flames in Chicago fire, opening of Atlantic City for season, scenes from a New York hospital, a great battle fleet in winter manoeuvers, and various other topics of current interest appear in this issue.

HEARST NEWS No. 10, (Universal), —Mar. 3.—Demonstration of U. S. heavy artillery in Maryland, Harvard resumes sports after the war, awarding Distinguished Service Cross to a nurse, men in the public eye, and numerous other features of interest are included.

Pathe Exchange, Inc.

NEXT AISLE OVER (Rolin-Pathe), March 30—Harold Lloyd appears in this as a young sample salesman who invades an apartment store. He has a lot of funny knockabout adventures. The scenes in this are deftly handled and it scores numerous laughs. Harry Pollard and Bebe Daniels are in the assisting cast.

CLEARED OF GUILT (Pathe), April 6. —Episode No. 14 of "The Lightning Raider." The events in this number foreshadow the close. Lightning recovers the germs from Wu Fang, whom she shoots in the hand. She then flees to avoid arrest by the police. The Wasp is stabbed from behind by one of Wu's men and perhaps mortally wounded. The number closes with Lightning trying to wring a confession from Wu, who jumps from a window to a dangling rope. The number, as will be seen, is full of startling incidents.

JUST DROPPED IN (Rolin-Pathe).—A comic number, in one reel, with Harold Lloyd, Harry Pollard and Bebe Daniels in the cast. The two former take a trip on a runaway airplane and drop off on a native island. Here they have some amusing adventures with the fierce men and beautiful women of the place.

Read What Josiah Pearce & Sons Says About Our Goods

Gentlemen:

Now that you have completed equipment in our new theatres here in New Orleans, and Houston, Texas, we want to take this means of expressing to you our appreciation of the manner in which we have done business with you, also as to the character of your goods. You have, without exception, filled our orders just as promptly as we could ever expect and probably quicker than we had anticipated, and the fact of your having supplied us with brass frames and various other equipment in our fifteen theatres is evidence that we are pleased with your goods, for they are the most attractive, durable and practical that we have as yet found.

We wish you good luck in the prosecution of your work.

Yours very truly,
JOSIAH PEARCE & SONS,
J. E. PEARCE. New Orleans, La.

We manufacture the frames in various finishes which do not require polishing.

IT REPRESENTS THE DETERMINED EFFORTS OF THE KEENEST BRAINS OF THE INDUSTRY TO GIVE TO THOSE WHO SHOW MOTION PICTURES ALL THAT CAN BE DESIRED IN SIMPLICITY—ALL THAT IS BEST IN WORKMANSHIP—ALL THAT CAN BE DEVISED IN SAFEGUARDING THE PUBLIC—AND ALL THAT IS NEEDED IN PROJECTING THE MASTERPIECES OF THE FILM MAKERS' ART IN THE MANNER IN WHICH THEY WERE INTENDED.

In the Rialto, which was built for the showing of pictures exclusively —seating two thousand persons— embracing all that is finest and best in theatre decoration and equipment—the Simplex was selected to maintain the high standard of projection which is called for at the Rialto in order to carry out the purpose of the owners of this theatre in making it the show-place of the capitol city.

Gentlemen:-

We opened up Sunday, March 2nd, with "Stolen Orders" at the Mall and Alhambra theaters and broke all records for all time.

We turned away thousands of people who were unable to get in. This is particularly remarkable in view of the fact that our past records have been made on features of not to exceed four and one-half reels in length, whereas this picture is seven and one-half reels.

Since Sunday we have been doing phenomenal business and expect the picture to hold up during the entire week.

Respectfully yours,

Marshall NEILAN

ALLEN HOLUBAR'S SUPER-PRODUCTION

March 6th, 1919.

Dear Mr. Laemmle:—

My time has been so occupied that it was only this week that I was able to see Mr. Holubar's production, "The Heart of Humanity."

I am sorry that I have not the space or time to say all the good things your picture represents, and therefore, will briefly say that I think it is the best production released last year, barring none.

The battle scenes were impressive and magnificent, the story well told, and the photography beautiful. Accustomed and hard-boiled as I am in reviewing pictures, I must say that the heart-interest got me several times.

I want to congratulate you for surrounding yourself with an organization capable of making a production of this caliber. It is most gratifying, as it proves that the highest grade and quality of pictures today does not come from the hands of one or two directors.

Yours sincerely,
MARSHALL A. NEILAN.

WHEN great directors pick "The Heart of Humanity" as the best, you can be pretty sure that "The Heart of Humanity" is the best of them all. And now comes Marshall Neilan and frankly says it is the best production released last year, barring none. Read his letter.

Marshall Neilan says of # "The HEART of HUMANITY"

THE PICTURE THAT WILL LIVE FOREVER

THE Kansas City Journal says: "The Heart of Humanity," which is being shown at the Shubert this week, stands head and shoulders above the other offerings of the year. The audience will gasp at the magnitude, be thrilled at the patriotism, stifle a sob at the pathos and actually weep at a mother's devotion and a son's sacrifice—a photoplay that will stand out in film history as one of the real masterpieces of the times.

TELEGRAM

Racine, Wis., March 12.

"Heart of Humanity" going over like wildfire. Showed to 4500 people opening day. Have been standing off matinee and evening the greatest and biggest capacity business I have ever done. It's the talk of the whole town and remember—I am playing against big cards in my opposition. Still we are getting all the bacon. My patrons say it is the best picture they have ever seen. Thanks for your co-operation.

Your Best Bet for a Sure Cleanup! Here's Why:

1. It's a rip-roaring comedy, with gobs of fun and a kick like a mule's. The war's over. People want to laugh. So "Oh, You Women!"

2. It's up-to-the-second and a jump ahead. The boys coming home; women in soldiers' jobs. and the deuce to pay when the girls don't watch their steps.

3. It's a John Emerson-Anita Loos Production. That means careful writing, masterly directing, brains, action, class, a powerful appeal to the crowds.

4. It's a woman's picture and a man's picture. The women will like it because it laughs at the "he-women" who get on real wives' and mothers' nerves. The men will like it because they don't want any third sex stealing their pants.

See "Oh, You Women!" and book it quick. If YOU don't the other fellow will!

HAROLD LOCKWOOD, our friend and the friend of the millions in America will live for future generations through the magic of the screen.

As a tribute to him we have saved what we believe to be his greatest picture for the final presentation in the great Lockwood series of productions.

The character of David Smith which he portrays is typical of his own splendid battle toward success. It is clean as he was clean, manly as he was manly, romantic and lovable as he was, and living on, is lovable.

We suggest to the thousands of Exhibitors who will present this picture to their audiences that they present it as a tribute to a fine and manly character, the man of honor, who helped to make the screen a finer, better thing.

THE W. W. Hodkinson Corporation now takes s long prepared-for position of leadership in the notion picture industry, with four big new lines of roduct that will stand out, taken together, as the est pictures now being produced. The opposite age tells you what they are.

THE first two have already been announced. The Kerrigan pictures are a living example of our selective machinery, for Kerrigan is the only line we have kept out of our entire past year's product.

The fourth new line is so big that we are holding its announcement for a later date. When we do announce it, present idols will totter.

We have taken the lead. No other concern is going to put out a better line of pictures, because no other concern is free to do it; no other concern is free from producer or exhibitor domination. We are.

If we can't get pictures that come up to our standards we will cut our releases down to one a month—or one a year. But this we stand on: We are going to lead and continue to lead from this day forward.

ORDERED TO FIRE THE FIRST GUN!

Office of the Surgeon General
In Replying
Address the Surgeon General
U. S. Public Health Service

TREASURY DEPARTMENT
Bureau of the Public Health Service
WASHINGTON

Division of Venereal Diseases
228 First Street, N. W.

March 21st, 1919.

To:

State Boards of Health,
Municipal Boards of Health,
State and Municipal Executives,
Y. W. C. A., and Kindred Organizations.

Subject:

Presentation of the motion picture, "Fit to Win."

This picture was produced by the War Department as part of the campaign launched during mobilization by the Surgeon General of the Army for the purpose of combating venereal diseases. It was shown at camps and other places to over 1,500,000 fighting men of the army and navy. The good accomplished through it is incalculable.

The bearer is a representative of Public Health Films of which Mr. Isaac Silverman is managing director. Public Health Films has been designated and authorized by the United States Public Health Service as the sole distributor through regular commercial motion picture channels of "Fit to Win" as part of the United States Government campaign against the venereal menace. The Government maintains that the repressive measures put in operation to meet a war emergency are equally essential for the protection of the health of civilians during time of peace. This picture is one of the most effective of these repressive measures.

In carrying forward this campaign throughout civilian life, the United States Public Health Service asks the co-operation of State and Municipal governments and requests the abrogation or suspension of such censorships as might impede this very essential missionary work. "Fit to Win" will be shown to both men and women, but always at separate screenings except where audiences may be absolutely segregated according to sex. Children under the age of sixteen will be rigorously excluded.

Originally "Fit to Win" was not made for commercial purposes, all of its screenings being free. When it was decided to carry the campaign against venereal disease into civilian life commercialization was found absolutely necessary in order to bring the film's message to the greatest number within the shortest possible space of time.

By direction of the Surgeon General.

Respectfully,
(Signed) C. C. PIERCE,
Assistant Surgeon General.

Some wise love doctor who knows that in America, in the new world, a difference in race or religion cannot keep a girl out of the arms of the boy she loves.

There's a lovely, sweet, laughable story in "Daughter of Mine." It is a clean taste picture. Long after you have seen it yourself you will be saying to friends: "I'll tell you a fine picture you ought to book in your theatre. My audiences thought it was great."

The tragi-comedy romance, the win-out-over-obstacles love story of Rosie Mendelsohn and George Howard will make everyone who sees it enjoy life more.

Settlement houses make use of it regularly as the great Americanizer. It is rated as the first and best attraction of its kind.

In selecting an educational weekly it is impossible to think of any other one in the motion picture industry ahead of the Ford Educational Weekly—because there is no other one with its completeness, its quality, its fineness and value.

Goldwyn, as the distributor, is serving 4,000 theatre accounts regularly each week with the Ford Educational Weekly.

In addition to being prepared to serve quickly 1,000 additional small town theatres without delays we now announce that we can serve with equal promptness 1,000 more schools, lodges, granges, union lyceums, churches and factories or industrial organizations. The cost of this fine service is surprisingly and amazingly low. Ask the nearest Goldwyn office manager about it.

The Exhibitors of America

IMMEDIATELY following the first announcement that the Independent Sales Corporation would release the Rothapfel Unit Programme, leading theatres throughout the country literally deluged me with inquiries concerning the proposition, asking particularly to explain the meaning of "Unit Programme."

Later announcements stated that the "Unit Programme" consisted of a "complete show from overture to final curtain" including music arranged especially for the whole performance, lighting and scenic effects, magazine and novelty films, a high class comedy and a dramatic feature, all produced under the personal supervision of S. L. Rothapfel, formerly managing director of the Rialto, Rivoli and Strand theatres, New York City.

Since these announcements appeared, many exhibitors followed up their previous inquiries with contracts and applications for contracts for the entire series of six "Units," which to my mind is the most gratifying manifestation of confidence in the propositon they could possibly offer.

Being an exhibitor myself as well as a distributor naturally I have been interested in the proposition from the exhibitor's angle and I cannot refrain from telling you this much in advance—judging from the finished subjects I have seen, it may be truly said that the Rothapfel Unit Programme will prove beyond all question the Highest Class Entertainment in the World.

Your application for contract, if placed with the branch of the Independent Sales Corporation nearest your theatre, will receive immediate consideration.

A SURE MONEY GETTING PRODUCTION FOR STATE RIGHT BUYERS

"THE LAW OF NATURE"

Produced by

David G. Fischer Productions

Featuring

Vincent Coleman, Frances NeMoyer and Dixie Lee

"A Massive and Impressive Feature"

STEPHEN BUSH, in BILLBOARD, stated that "THE LAW OF NATURE" is "A massive and impressive feature" and should be advertised as such.

State right buyers consider this feature a sure money getting production as evidenced by their activity in securing territory.

A special advertising campaign has been prepared to assist buyers in booking the picture and special help will be given buyers in their territory by the ARROW'S new Sales and Promotion department.

There is still some open territory, but buyers are urged to write or wire for terms at once.

WHAT THE CRITICS SAY:

Stephen Bush in "Billboard"

THIS IS A MASSIVE AND IMPRESSIVE FEATURE. The director succeeded in assembling a remarkably good cast. All the characterization work is above the average. Miss NeMoyer was a revelation to those who saw the performance. Vincent Coleman gave a most convincing representation of a young man full of good intentions, but lacking in will and character. This picture, being a special feature, FULLY CONSTITUTES AN EVENING'S ENTERTAINMENT.

George T. Pardy in "Exhibitors Trade Review"

THIS PICTURE SHOULD BE HEAVILY BILLED AS A VERY SPECIAL FEATURE. In every way it should be played up as a particularly strong attraction. Director Fischer presents a production with decidedly vigorous punch. The work of Frances NeMoyer as Gene Moore, the siren of the play, calls for unstinted praise. She moves through the hazy atmosphere of unbridled lust and feverish pleasures and evil incarnation of panther-like grace and dainty abandon—indolent, pitiless and withal alluring. She is the vampire par excellence, an artistic creation calculated to arouse feelings of envy in the breasts of many a star exponent of feminine screen wickedness.

Laurence Reed in "N. Y. Review"

"LAW OF NATURE"—POWERFUL DRAMA. David G. Fischer Productions, Inc., who are presenting it, will have no trouble in finding a market for it. For it contains a generous element of dramatic action and suspense. The picture derives its title from the right of every man to lead a clean, healthy life. The drama contains a large amount of action, for it does not build from a single plot, but many. "The Law of Nature" is a forceful lesson. It is adequately staged.

"Dramatic Mirror"

Well presented and well acted. As a timely subject this picture should prove a big box-office attraction.

"N. Y. Sunday Telegraph"

The production is well set and the photography good. Virginia Thorne deserves a word of praise for her work as Lili Vanderbeck.

Community Motion Picture Bureau

Its lesson is tremendously important and could not have been driven home with greater force. Personally I regard the direction and acting as near perfect as it is possible to be. I think this is a film that can and should be used before practically every kind of audience.

Films for Victory Loan Drive Now Being Shown

ARRANGEMENTS for the motion picture Victory Loan drive have been completed by the committee appointed by the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry to co-operate with the Treasury Department.

"Some thirty-seven subjects are now being finished," said Mr. Zukor, chairman of the committee, "and there will be a total of three thousand five hundred and four prints available to theatres, gratis."

The committee, of which Mr. Zukor is chairman, consists of Walter W. Irwin, George K. Spoor, J. Brulatour, with Al Lichtman, manager of distribution, and John C. Flinn, director of publicity.

The showing of these pictures started April 6th. Prints are being shipped to the various chairmen throughout the country, who have established central booking offices where all bookings can be made. Films may be routed on circuits or direct to and from exchanges. Every print will be kept working daily until the end of the drive. No charge will be made to any exhibitor for the exhibition of the films and no exhibitor will be permitted to book two subjects for the same day.

Selznick Reported to Have Purchased Select Control

IT is stated on what seems to be reliable authority that Lewis J. Selznick, president of Select Pictures Corporation, again is in full control of the stock of that company.

Select is the successor of the Selznick Pictures Corporation. It began business in August, 1917, taking over some of the Selznick Exchanges and establishing a number of new ones. It has been the understanding in the trade that the president of the company held 49 per cent. of the stock. It is the belief that with the change in the majority control no alteration of the company name is contemplated.

Jones, Linick & Schaefer to Build Loop Playhouse

THE largest building lease ever closed in Chicago has just been consummated whereby Jones, Linick & Schaefer have leased from the Ledyard Trustees the Frederick Ayer Building, southwest corner State and Monroe streets, for fifteen years from May 1, 1922, at a rental which with taxes and insurance will aggregate over $3,000,000 for the term. The building, which is five stories, has a frontage of 120 feet on State street and 120 feet on Monroe to an alley. Part of the building is occupied by the Orpheum Theatre.

This property is considered one of the choicest concerns in the loop and one of the best retail corners in the world. Numerous offers have been made by local merchants and non-residents for a lease of the property, but Mr. Ayers, the owner, took into consideration the standing of the firm of Jones, Linick & Schaefer and the fact that they already hold a lease on a portion of the premises until May 1, 1922.

Restrains Use of Title "Happiness."

Judge Mayer, of the United States Court, has issued an injunction restraining the use of the title "Happiness" as the title of any photoplay. This was done upon the application of J. Hartley Manners, the author of the play "Happiness," in which Laurette Taylor is now starring.

The Triangle Film Corporation made a photoplay under the title of "Happiness," telling a story entirely unlike that of the play. It was then that Mr. Manners started suit to protect the title, which resulted in the injunction.

Griffith to Aid Methodists' Fete.

D. W. Griffith, in memory of his mother, will give his services to film the celebration of the Methodists at Columbus, Ohio. This celebration in June will mark the end of the drive to raise $120,000,000 for the extension of Methodist work throughout the world.

Enlisting the aid of the director is on a par with the tendency of the Methodists to bring modern methods into religion. They will use, also, motion pictures as a part of their work in Europe.

Mrs. Kihchel Says

The widest possible law would not make attendance on Sunday obligatory.

Attendance at Sunday movies rest wholly with the individual.

In communities that always have been closed no evidence can be submitted until the experiment has been tried out.

Exhibitors would readily consent to a referendum on the Sunday question.

The prohibition law has to be taken into consideration as contributing to the state of unrest. The motion picture would create a much needed balance for men who need the help of the outfit.

Our wisest course seems to be to leave such questions to the civil rather than to the canon law.

We exhibitors are not so black as we are painted.

The time has come when the logic of facts is self-evident. We remain law-abiding citizens.

Read the story on page 205.

Tippett of London Here for Conference with Laemmle

JOHN D. TIPPETT, managing director of the Trans-Atlantic Film Co., Ltd., Universal's European distributing organization, has arrived in America, from London, for a conference with President Laemmle. Mr. Tippett arrived in New York last week and finding President Laemmle at Universal City, left at once for the big producing center to confer with the Big U executive regarding new policies for foreign exploitation and expansion in 1919.

Mr. Tippett had little to say regarding the foreign market, during his brief stay in New York, but stated that upon his return from California, he would be prepared to make several announcements regarding new Universal foreign policies, which he believed would prove interesting to the trade. According to Mr. Tippett, motion pictures played a prominent part in the winning of the war in Europe, and that European picture patronage was not so greatly affected as one might imagine.

Mr. Tippett says that American made film plays are still in the majority in Europe and that several new British producing companies have sprung up since the armistice was signed and a number of leading English dramatists who heretofore have ignored the screen are turning their attention to preparing screen plays.

New York Senate Passes Sunday Local Option Bill

AN eleventh hour special dispatch from the Moving Picture World's Albany correspondent conveys the news of a signal victory for Sunday motion pictures in New York State. The Sunday local option bill passed the Senate on the afternoon of April 3 by a vote of 27 to 21.

The telegram dated April 3 reads: "Sunday local option bill passed Senate this afternoon 27 to 21; Senator Fowler not voting. Senator Sage voted against Sunday pictures, but in favor of Sunday baseball. Bill now goes to Assembly and will probably come up Monday, April 7. If it passes, it will go at once to the Governor for signature."

Bach Joins Famous Players.

W. A. Bach, formerly sales manager for the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, has been appointed manager of the booking department of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

Mr. Bach comes to his new position well equipped in experience. Previous to joining Hodkinson he was special representative for Universal. In January, 1918, he went to Hodkinson as assistant sales manager and succeeded to the position of sales manager early this year.

Jersey City's 3,500-Seat Theatre to Cost $750,000

JERSEY CITY'S New Rialto Theatre, to be erected by a syndicate headed by Joseph LeBlang and George Brennan at a cost of $750,000 will give that city one of the largest and finest motion picture houses in the country. Mr. Brennan, manager of the Orpheum, recently announced his plans for the building which will adorn the corner of Newark and Summitt avenues. The house will have a seating capacity of 3,500, 1,950 seats being on the orchestra floor and the rest in the balcony.

In addition to the theatre there will be eighteen stores and forty-two offices in the structure, work upon which will commence at once. In the syndicate with Mr. Brennan are J. M. Brennan, his brother; Joseph LeBlang; and Morris S. Schlessinger, conducting the Broad Street Theatre of Newark, N. J.

The facade of the New Rialto will be laid up in glazed terra cotta. The marquee over the entrance will be of a special type of construction and perhaps the largest in the state, since it will be 35 feet wide and 22 feet long.

The lobby will be finished in caenstone, with enrichments of gold leaf panels. Over the entresol a picture depicting "The Drama" by a noted artist will be hung. In the theatre proper the Adams style will prevail, and the soft shades of buff and light brown will be high lighted here and there with blue medallions. The stage will be flanked with columns, shafts of Sienna marble, with gold capitals and burnished bases.

The ventilating system will change the atmosphere of the theatre every twenty-two minutes. A $24,000 Moeller is to be installed. The plans of the New Rialto are by William E. Lehman, theatrical architect.

Keeney's 1,650-Seat House in Williamsport Now Open

FRANK A. KEENEY'S new theatre in Williamport, Pa., opened Friday night, March 28, with a policy of high class photoplays. The house is on the site of the former Lycoming Opera House and is a handsome and imposing structure with a seating capacity of 1,650 and is absolutely modern. The facade is of ornamental cream terra-cotta brick. The interior is finished in the beautiful Adam period. The plans for this theatre were drawn up by William E. Lehman, of Newark, N. J., who laid out the plans for Keene's other houses in Newark, Brooklyn, and in Kingston.

One of the features in the Keeney policy is a symphony orchestra, as well as an organist of repute, who operates a pipe organ said to cost $10,000.

Herman Becker is the resident manager.

To Force Ohio Showmen to Pay Music License

AT last the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers has made good its threat to come into northern Ohio and force the exhibitors to pay a license to play the music of its members or play other music. And the exhibitors say they will not use the organization's music and get along with that composed by others.

The society has established headquarters at 1019-1020 Guardian Building, Cleveland, and engaged attorneys to put on the "clean-up." These lawyers have sent out letters to all theatres notifying them of their society's purposes and stating that they must have permission of the authors to play their copyright music. To get this, the attorneys inform the exhibitors that they must call at their office "and arrange for the issuance of a license to perform such musical compositions."

Ottawa Operators Working on New Wage Increases

THE Ottawa (Ontario) operators have already started the ball rolling in a move to obtain a new wage scale to start next September. The Ottawa local has appointed a special committee to take up the question, the committee consisting of William Hartnett, J. Thibault and Felix Montreuil. The men have not yet announced what increases they desire.

The Ottawa local has also appointed a committee to co-operate with the officials in charge of preparations for the coming convention of the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employes which is to be held in Ottawa during the week of May 26. The operators' committee includes President M. Ventura, Secretary W. H. Lane and W. Maynard.

Another important step taken by the Ottawa local is the doubling of the initiation fee for the local. New operators must now pay a primary fee of $50 in place of $25. The operators of Ottawa think highly of their organization and boast that it is one of the strongest on the continent.

A recent visitor in the Canadian Capital was James E. Matthews, of New York, general organizer of the union. He made the trip to arrange several details for the convention in May.

One Hundred Seconds and All's Well with Waco Jury

DOES THE WELL-KNOWN and oft-mentioned native of Waco, Texas, want moving pictures on Sunday? Well, on the Sunday of March 2 the exhibitors of Waco were arrested for violating the Sabbath law by keeping open house, among them N. Santikos, manager of the Royal; Sonneman, of the Rex; Levy, of the Washington, and Lempke, of the Crystal.

So strong was public opinion in favor of the showmen that when they were taken before Judge Padgitt, the jury acquitted them after being out for one minute and 40 seconds.

In an interview with Mr. Lempke, Nat Bregstein, traveling solon of the Moving Picture World, discovered that there are more churches in Waco than any other town of its size in Texas. Mr. Lempke was one of the first exhibitors in Waco, and ever since his first venture he has been leading the fight against some faction or other.

He generally wins, and the reason for that is because he takes an interest in civic affairs, and has made for himself a host of friends. When the last fight came, he secured over 4,000 petitions from the public of Waco.

Select Signs Contract with Sergeant Empey

LEWIS J. SELZNICK, president of Select Pictures Corporation, announces that contracts have been signed between that company and Sergeant Arthur Guy Empey, author and star of "Over the Top," for the production of a timely big special feature, entitled "Hell on Earth."

Production work will soon start under the direction of Wilfred North, who also directed Sergeant Empey in his picture "Over the Top," produced from his book of the same name.

"Hell on Earth," however, unlike "Over the Top," will not be a war story, but a story laid in America and dealing with the most modern conditions and the timeliest of subjects.

"Hell on Earth" will be exploited by a big campaign of advertising and publicity, which will begin immediately and be kept up continuously until after the picture is released. A contract has already been given for an electric sign, which before the week is out will call attention to all Broadway that "Select Pictures announces Arthur Guy Empey in "Hell on Earth."

Northwest Business Men Use Films to Boost Sales

THE sales manager of one of the big department stores in Seattle called up the manager of one of the film exchanges and asked for a film presenting the spring fashions. His idea was to educate his salespeople in this way, so that they might be able the better to present their merchandise. The exchange manager was unable to furnish the film desired, or to advise where it could be obtained. The National Association of Retail Merchants is answering this need, however, by having such a film produced and distributed among its members.

Another way in which films are being used commercially in the Pacific Northwest is in the sale of the F. W. D. truck. Salesmen show prospective purchasers a film of the truck doing extra hard work, and they declare that men who are actually in the market for a truck of the F. W. D. type are unable to resist the film argument.

Local Elects Delegates to I. A. T. S. E. Ottawa Meet

THAT long titled and far reaching body, the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employes and Motion Picture Machine Operators of United States and Canada, will hold its annual convention in Ottawa during the week of May 26.

Announcement of the convention came from Local 306 of New York through its corresponding secretary, M. J. Rotker, who also announced the election of his local's delegates to the conclave. Sam Kaplan, president of 306, Sam Goldfarb, business representative, and Alex Polin, of the executive board of the same local, will represent it at Ottawa.

The elections were held at Mansion Hall, Brooklyn, on April 2. Lively interest was demonstrated in the balloting, showing that 306 is alive to the occasion. At the same time, Edward J. Wilson was elected a member of the executive board.

FIGHT RAGES ON BEST ADVERTISING

Country-wide Scope in Discussion by Exhibitors on First National Policy Restricting Advertising to the Trade—Attitude of Producer and Showman Paralleled in Able Statements from Both Sides

MORE big guns arrive at the front this week to add to the roar started in the Moving Picture World's issue of March 22 when William Sievers of St. Louis fired the opening shot of First National's campaign on the restriction of its advertising to five trade journals. So far as the realm of motion pictures is concerned, the shot heard round the world from Concord in Revolutionary days now has its commercial parallel. Not only are exhibitors from all parts of the country contributing their share to the joy of the nation, but in this issue Paramount comes forth with a defense of its policy of using journals outside the immediate realm of the trade publication.

The attitude of the big exhibitor may be parallel with that of the big producer by comparing the statements of I. H. Ruben, of Ruben & Finkelstein, owners of a chain of fifteen theatres in the Middle West, and of Walter E. Greene, vice-president and managing director in charge of distribution, who champions the Famous Players-Lasky campaign for expending a million dollars a year in national advertising. Unquestionably both of these men and the forces they represent have the advancement of the moving picture at heart; but it is plain from their separate statements that there is a vast difference of opinion.

It is a curious coincidence that Mr. Ruben quotes in his statement a conversation between himself and Adolph Zukor, dating back two years, and centering about Mr. Ruben's opinion on Mr. Zukor's two-million-dollar advertising appropriation, while printed herewith is a "comeback" on Paramount's campaign of yesterday and today.

If in carrying forward this idea begun by First National the Moving Picture World can help coordinate the producing and exhibiting ends of the industry so as to advance the deserved power and glory of the screen it will have been richly rewarded.

By Eddie Foy

Proprietor and Manager of the Columbia, Colonial and Ideal Theatres, Dallas.

SAVING and conserving the exhibitor's time, enabling moving picture producers to devote more money to the actual production of the picture and thus turn out better pictures for the public, the moral uplift of moving picture advertising, the cessation of the expenditure of huge sums in worthless advertising, these are some of the things I believe are due to the First National Exhibitors' Circuit trade journal advertising policy as it was written about by Mr. Sievers of the New Grand Central Theatre, St. Louis, Mo., in the last week's issue of Moving Picture World.

Moreover, it is my opinion that moving picture companies should adopt the First National's trade journal advertising policy and thus make the benefits derived from such a system more noticeable in the better pictures, which are sure to come if the present harum-skarum waste of money is stopped.

Men who run neighborhood shows know that the matter of time is one of the most needed essentials in the moving picture business. There is not an angle of theatre management that requires the careful thought for every little detail that is so characteristic of the neighborhood show house.

It is safe to say that when it comes to the time for booking pictures, the manager is at wit's end. He doesn't know where to start. He sees a score of so-called moving picture trade journals scattered about him. This source, of course, is recognized as the correct way of determining what pictures would please your office and swell the box office receipts. But does he read that mass of literature known as the trade journals? Not on your life. I'll guarantee that sixty per cent. of it, more than that sometimes, is thrown in the fire. I know it to be a fact that many magazines are thrown away unopened.

I think that the favorite magazines moving picture exhibitors like to throw away are those that contain a little bit about every imaginable kind of theatrical advertising. Those that tell of three ringed circuses, carnivals, country fairs, balloon races. It really must be disgusting to the moving picture exhibitor who has his heart in his business and who wants to see the moving picture game lifted steadily upward instead of cheapened by the lack of judgment of some of the advertising departments of various concerns who insist on dragging the moving picture game down to the cheapest levels all for the sake of the publicity—which, when it is accrued would never sell a picture if the advertisement was inserted in that dinky publication for a year steadily.

I think the Moving Picture World is advocating a laudable movement when it backs up the First National's trade journal advertising policy. I think the World is absolutely right in its stand and I further think that the time will come, although it may be some time before some of our more backward advertising managers realize that half of the advertising is useless. To me five of the leading trade journals are sufficient for the insertion of motion picture advertising. I can't for the life of me see why the advertising department's quota for the exploitation of pictures should be grossly squandered by us in publications to which our business is only an incident or a side line with nice, fat advertising appropriations to pick on and which, consequently, as every live exhibitor can see, do not sell pictures for the advertisers who indifferently insert their ads in every magazine that has an advertising solicitor.

Would Support Strictly Trade Papers.

By my stand I don't want to indicate that I have a personal dislike for carnivals, fairs and other sorts of entertainments. I think all of the foregoing are nice forms of amusements. I do, however, object to having a motion picture ad inserted in a book where the editorial comment of that book is entirely directed by the size of the ad placed in the back of the book. This sort of advertising so far as the exhibitor is concerned is absolutely no good. The only way to magnify and keep alive the periodicals that are valuable to the life of the moving picture business is to advertise in only those magazines which can be relied upon to print comment and advertising matter that is wholly to the interest of the moving picture game. The magazine that depends upon the moving picture business solely for its existence is, in my opinion, and I believe I voice the sentiment of thousands of exhibitors in the United States, the journal that should be supported by the money spent under the guise of advertising in the picture play game today.

Trade Papers Help Him Decide.

In my business I run mostly second run pictures. To be very frank I determine what pictures I shall run by what appears in the trade journals and how the pictures I am interested in fare at the hands of the first run theatres. I noticed in the trade journals that "The Romance of Tarzan" had a great run all over Texas. Naturally I booked it for my theatres.

I was well aware of the fact that Anita Stewart in "Virtuous Wives" enjoyed one of the greatest runs ever known to a picture in Dallas. I broke all attendance records at the Queen Theatre. Hence, struck as I was by the splendid line of advertising about "Virtuous Wives" that I read in the five trade journals I immediately went to work and booked the picture. It will not come to me, however, until the third run. I understand that Leon Gohlman, manager of the Rex Theatre in Dallas, has booked it for March 19. Undoubtedly it will score a triumph and perhaps break the Rex's attendance record.

I believe I express the sentiment of all exhibitors when I say I'm heartily in favor of the First National's trade journal advertising policy.

By Edward J. Hiehle

Hipp Garden Theatre, Parkersburg, West Va.

I WANT to say that the First National Exhibitors' Circuit's policy of advertising in the five trade papers devoted exclusively to the industry covers the field completely. There is not a successful man in the business that has either the time or inclination to wade through half a dozen trade papers to get the information he desires and depends upon. If he can do this his business is not what it should be.

Advertising in various mediums that devote only a part of their space to the picture industry is unprofitable and unwise, in my estimation, because it does not reach the persons for whom it is intended and in many instances it cannot be depended upon owing to the fact that favoritism is often shown.

I have read with a great deal of interest the article by William Sievers in Moving Picture World of March 22 and wish to emphasize one point that he makes and that is that advertising today must be absolutely truthful.

Medium Must be Dependable.

There is no sense in advertising in a medium which cannot be depended on, no matter how honest and fair the advertiser himself may be. Your advertising medium must have the confidence of those whom you wish to reach and the five trade papers devoted exclusively to the "craft" can be trusted while any possible doubt in regard to the other mediums tends to spoil the entire effect of honest, truthful advertising in these mediums.

I take but two trade papers to obtain the information that is so necessary to me. I take but two because I have time to read no more and because I find that I can get all the essentials from two papers devoted exclusively to the industry and on which I can rely.

Dissecting Two Trade Papers.

Had I the time I would not be inclined to bother with others as the two paper cover the field and meet all my needs.

I take one trade paper because I believe its material is snappier and more to the point. I get what I want in concise form and I get something of practical value to me. I take the second trade paper because I believe its reviews are more dependable. I not only wish to know that a picture is good when the review says it is good, but I want to know that it is bad when the review says it is bad.

The policy of devoting all advertising to five mediums which depend wholly upon the trade is a practical and sane policy. Endless waste, much time and much more money is to be saved by eliminating the duplication that has been a bugbear and a nuisance to exhibitors in the past few years.

The Wolverine Special.

By J. H. Silliman

Manager the Downer, Liberty and Miramas Theatres, Milwaukee.

IN my opinion the First National Exhibitors' Circuit has adopted an excellent policy of advertising. Five magazines are all that any exhibitor can read—if he has time to read more he isn't much of an exhibitor! The producers are advertising to the exhibitor, not to the public, and it is useless for them to try to advertise in magazines that are interested in the film industry only to the extent of what they can get in advertising reviews as the gauge for what they render in so-called news service or for general public reading. If they have additional money they care to spend, it could be expended much more wisely by giving it to the exhibitor in the different localities and letting him use it for local advertising.

Demands Honest Criticism.

What we need more than anything else is honest criticisms in the trade papers. I am up in arms against the unfair reviews at this particular time. I canceled a certain program more than a year ago because it was getting so "punk." Then a few weeks ago I began reading wonderful reviews of certain features on that program in a certain trade paper. I thought perhaps the company had been bolstered up with some good players, and perhaps had some really good features, so I contracted for it for a year. I ran three of the plays at the Liberty. The first one was awful, but I thought the next might be better. It was worse! Then I ran a third one to make sure that they were no accidents on an otherwise good program, and that one was worst of all. I canceled the program immediately, but there are four more to come, owing to the four week cancellation clause in the contract.

Here's Where Fred Aiken Blushes.

The exchange managers could help matters considerably by being a little more truthful with the exhibitors. For instance, one exchangeman that I know will say, "Boys, this is a very poor picture. Book it on a week day, and don't advertise it much!" Then he will come along and say, "Here is a crackerjack. Book it two days!" And it gets the two day booking. That man is Fred Aiken, of Chicago, and he is the squarest guy I know in the film business, and he is known all over the country with that reputation. Other managers, who advertise every subject they have as an A No. 1 picture, would find his policy much more paying in the end. Of course, this could be remedied by having fair criticisms from the trade journals, but that is an ideal state that will never exist, I fear.

Even the sole magazine that attempted to give fair unbiased criticisms has taken on advertising, and the Lord only knows what will become of exhibitors now!

By Leon S. Gohlman

Manager Rex Theatre, Dallas.

I BELIEVE the Moving Picture World is taking a forward step by starting this discussion of the extravagances of advertisers who spill their advertising all over the map in their unmeditated efforts to tell exhibitors all the wonderful things they can think of about their respective productions. It is a constructive step. Why in the world should the various film companies spread their advertising over all creation, into yellow-back novels, oil magazines, church weeklies, prayer books—in fact anything that will take them, when in truth there are only a few ways to sell the pictures and that is to place the ads and the right kinds of ads in the leading motion picture trade journals.

The First National Exhibitors' Circuit believes that by exploiting its stars and films in the five leading moving picture trade journals in the United States it can co-operate best with the exhibitor.

Sees No Need for Five.

That's exactly right, only I don't see the need for five. I can take you all around this block and I'll bet you won't find one man out of ten who uses more than three of the trade journals. But when you say five, then I know you've got enough journals to get your films from. Personally I don't use but about three journals myself.

But when it comes to getting them—oh, boy—I'll bet I get about twenty-five a week. I get so many that sometimes I send them to the furnace and have them used for fuel. And the only reason I don't is because I think that some, unthinking moving picture company's manager paid out good money to advertise in the various books and then I relent sufficiently enough to order the porter to take most of them to his home and show them to his wife and children.

As an exhibitor I want to say that it's my idea that scattering the advertising is the most unforgivable form of extravagance. It's not fair to the public and it's not fair to the exhibitor.

Same Old Stuff: Exhibitor Pays Freight.

It's just the same old proposition of "Smith pays the freight." The film company hires a star, builds a wonderful studio, employs high salaried scenario writers, buys everything known to mankind to produce wonderful pictures. After the picture is produced, then the advertising department takes a hand in the business. Is it fair for the ad department to plunge head over heels into a whirlpool of publicity, never noticing whether any of it is going to be of value or not. I don't think it is right. It's not right by the public and it's not right by the exhibitor. The exhibitor has to pay for every cent of that advertising and the public has to pay the exhibitor.

No Earthly Reason for It.

There is not an earthly reason for it, in my opinion, and I can say without egotism that when The Moving Picture World pulled the curtains aside on this evil it was not a matter of surprise to me, for I had been thnking about it for some time. There is no reason why a magazine depending upon its advertising from various sources should be selected as a magazine in which to place advertising matter which is desired to attract the attention of moving picture exhibitors.

I can say without fear of successful contradiction that there are many magazines which will boost a picture to the skies for the price of a fair-sized ad. What I want to know is, of what earthly good is a magazine of this sort to the exhibitor who must rely entirely on the merit of his pictures or suffer the consequences—and this means failure.

When Advertising is Folly.

There are magazines which cater to the drama, the variety stage, the carnival and the circus. They cater to anything they can get a dollar from for advertising. And yet many moving picture companies insert their ads in journals of this sort. It is folly, I think, for a sensible advertising manager to allow his ad to be placed in a magazine where every thinking theatre manager knows the little editorial boost that follows in the section allowed for picture plays is paid for by the ad.

Let us illustrate the advertising policy just this way. For instance, in the city of Dallas there are four of what we call the largest papers here. These papers reach practically every person who reads a paper in this city. Their combined circulation misses no one. Also in this city there are a dozen school weekly papers, church papers, the Y. M. C. A. and the Y. W. C. A. paper. All of the high schools, and there are three of them have papers. Four universities and a number of dental colleges publish their official organs. And all of these little journals want me to give them advertising.

Goes After Circulation Locally.

If I wanted to do just as many of the film corporations are doing I could give each of these little papers one of my ads. But do I? I should say not. I pick out the three papers here that have the largest local circulation and I hit after those papers. I make the ads as attractive as possible and as appealing as possible and concentrate on those papers. And I get good results from doing that. Why should I waste money on many publications that can absolutely not do me the slightest bit of good.

It's the same proposition with regard to the moving picture companies. Why should they waste money on advertising in a bunch of books that nobody who owns a show ever reads. I can't get their ideas. The first thing you know the ad man for some picture company will go looney and advertise his pictures on the cover of some patent medicine booklet.

Some people say there are bad features to limiting the exploitation of moving picture advertising to five of the moving picture trade journals.

Will Welcome Removal of Parasites.

Some people think that every little dinky magazine in the country has some sort of a clientelé, and the followers of this bunch will naturally follow its advice about seeing or refusing to see the various pictures presented. But, personally, I think that there are lots of people who would really welcome the removing of the parasites annoying the moving picture exhibitors of this country. They are just li e barnacles growing to the sides of a ship. They do absolutely no good. They just cling on for what little or what great annoyance they may cause.

I know of very few moving picture exhibitors who won't welcome the day when they may peacefully book their pictures from advertising they are assured is truthful and from editorial comment they feel sure can't be purchased by the price of an ad.

Keep up the good work, Moving Picture World. If you can't help us as exhibitors to impress the advertisers with an exhibitor opinion that will help them save money, at least you are proving to us that as a trade journal your interest in the welfare of the exhibitors and the industry cannot be questioned. You have started something. Now, dammit, don't let everyone stop you. Stick with us and we will stick with you.

By Frank Cook

Manager of Princess Theatre, Milwaukee.

WHEN I was in the circus business I read through a certain magazine from which I could gain "circus" information; when I was in the vaudeville business I read another magazine which gave me news of vaudeville performers. Now both of those magazines, as well as dozens of others, have edged in on the motion picture business. When I say "edged" I use it advisedly, for they really are only on the outskirts of the business.

Am I going to go over all the old lines of news that used to interest me to find the news of the motion picture business, which now takes all my time? I should say not! I take three magazines, devoted exclusively to the motion picture business, and I try to read them from cover to cover, and frame my business according to the points I find in their columns, both editorial and in the reviews.

Would Make Three the Limit

Nothing could be more sane in this day of wild advertising, each producer attempting to outdo his competitors in the amount of space he consumes, than the First National Exhibitors' Circuit's trade journal advertising policy. To limit their field of advertising to five magazines is entirely sufficient to cover the field. In my estimation, it could safely be limited to three, and the two published in this section of the country could be eliminated, according to the amount of special stuff they carry.

I can get through each of them and find the same stuff that I find in the others. Certainly no magazine should be given an advantage; but a motion picture that carries all other lines. One doesn't have to search to a puzzlement to be reminded as why should he look to a jack-of-all-trades magazine to learn how to conduct his business in the most profitable way.

Importance of Unbiased Magazine.

I can't overestimate the importance of having an unbiased magazine not afraid to state its honest opinion of a feature, regardless of the size of the ad carried. Even in towns the size of Milwaukee we do not always have a chance to see a picture before we book it. Milwaukee exchanges are merely branches, in most cases, and do not carry all the new stuff on the floor as they do in Chicago and other places. They favor us all they can with bringing their newest releases up here for a showing, but it isn't possible in all cases, for the films are booked elsewhere. Some companies do not even have a branch here.

How are we to know of the film, the true value of it, if we are deceived and misled by certain printed matter? We advertise in that accordingly and misload our patrons —until they come to the show. We depend on the trade journals to a great extent, and as for the small town exhibitor I can readily see what a difference the unbiased, straightforward editorial columns will make to him. Let the advertiser say what he likes in his ad, but the journal must make a true review.

Back Up Ads with Unbiased Reviews.

Long life to the First National's trade journal advertising policy, and may it spread like wildfire. It means money in the pockets of everyone, producer and exhibitor alike, for such a rash expenditure of funds in magazine after magazine is simply a waste of money that eventually comes from the exhibitor. It is practical to the highest degree, provided the magazines back up the ads with honest reviews, and it means a conservation of funds that heartily will be indorsed throughout the country by every exhibitor.

By I. H. Ruben

of Ruben & Finkelstein, Owners of a Chain of Fifteen Theatres.

The following statement is made by I. H. Ruben of Ruben & Finkelstein, owners of a chain of fifteen theatres in Minneapolis and St. Paul and holders of the First National Exhibitors Circuit franchise for the Minneapolis territory, after his return from a six weeks' trip to the Pacific Coast where he has been visiting the studios and studying moving picture conditions generally. Mr. Ruben, during the week, made the rounds of key cities, from Los Angeles to Seattle and from Tacoma to Vancouver. He returned to Minneapolis bubbling with enthusiasm and optimism over the prospects for the future of the industry.

THE trouble with most exhibitors, distributors and producers is that they become too much engrossed in their own immediate field, get stuck in a rut and lose sight of what's going on elsewhere. What they need is to get out and study conditions generally. This is my belief at any rate and I try to practice what I preach.

Fortunes are being indiscriminately flung to the four winds by certain of the producers and distributors in wasteful and unproductive advertising. Nothing has been a greater detriment to the moving picture industry as a whole, and in order to place that industry on the substantial footing it deserves advertising methods must be placed upon a common sense basis.

First National's policy against duplication in advertising and limiting its field to the five recognized leading moving picture trade journals is, in my opinion, very wise.

Trade Papers Solve Problems.

The so-called trade journals and other publications covering the field in a slipshod manner are non-essential to the industry. There is no question about that. If a man gets into a rut as a rule he goes to the Moving Picture World, the Trade Review or one of the other three papers. Here he frequently finds a solution to his problem. The World, for instance, goes into detail on the subjects which are paramount to him. Like the leader of an orchestra who has his program carefully arranged, it gives him in condensed form just what he wants to know.

The other publications—parasites they might be called—are rehashing this stuff over and over; it goes from one end of the country to the other and by the time it reaches the exhibitor in its finally rehashed form, the garbled matter is unrecognizable from the original.

Leaders Should Be Encouraged.

Producers and distributors are throwing away their money in exploiting their productions through these unnecessary mediums. We must encourage the big trade publications, the leaders, and the advertisers must spend more money on them instead of the others in order to get the right kind of results for the whole industry.

If an exhibitor has five papers in his town and he advertises in all of them without regard to the kind of medium he is using, he is just simply wasting money, losing time and taking up a lot of space. He should select the one or two that he knows he can count on, and which he knows command the respect and confidence of their readers.

You've got to put all your punch into the medium you know is delivering the goods. I told this to Adolph Zukor two years ago when he asked me what I thought of his $2,000,000 appropriation for advertising purposes after he had expended the same.

When Advertising Is Not Advertising.

"Why in hell didn't you ask us in the first place?" I asked Mr. Zukor. "The exhibitors of the country could have told you that you were throwing a lot of money away. You could have saved at least $1,000,000 and got even better results.

Mr. Zukor had spent half a million dollars on billboard advertising. The arrangements for all this billboard advertising were made with a national billboard organization in New York City, and of course Mr. Zukor did not know just how all this advertising had been placed. Some of the billboards were under viaducts and in hidden places where no one would be likely to see them. I knew personally that this was a fact because I took an automobile trip around Minneapolis and checked up a lot of the posters which had been placed in ridiculous places. I told Mr. Zukor just what I had found. It was a revelation to him.

At the same time the producer and exhibitor should bear in mind the fact that the exhibitor is advertising the same picture on his own account. I said to Mr. Zukor:

Should Co-operate with Exhibitor.

"When I need any billboards I go around and pick my own, and after that what the billboard people have left you may get. You should co-operate closely with the exhibitor and you would get the benefit of some of his advertising expenses. You could have cut that $2,000,000 appropriation down to $500,000 by more judicious magazine and billboard advertising and you would have done at least as well and likely better because your publicity would have been driven home through only the proper channels.

"How can you inspire confidence in us exhibitors by spending a lot of money on foolish advertising? You fellows make big appropriations to put over

MRS. EXHIBITOR BUCKLES ON SWORD

Wife Who Helped Pennsylvania Showman to Success in Small Town Scores Those Small Minds Which Hide in Dead Morality the Living Open Sunday Question

OUT in the wilds of Jeannette, Pa., Oliver A. Kihchel and his wife have fought the good fight of the exhibitor ever since the day, ten years ago, when they completed their honeymoon by purchasing the Eagle Theatre of Jeannette for the wondrous sum of $400. The material fact that their investment is now worth thousands is, in the main, aside from the glory of their fight. Mrs. Kihchel, the advertising and publicity genius of the "concern," has helped her husband lift the Eagle out of the ruck and rut of smug, complacent showings and place it in the two and three day run class in a town of barely 10,000. The story of their successful struggle was printed in our issue of March 1.

Herewith is an article contributed by Mrs. Kihchel on the question of Sunday motion pictures in Pennsylvania. If the intelligence and broad-mindedness displayed by this discussion were seated in the mind and heart of every exhibitor in the country, then indeed their screens would hold a power not lightly to be reckoned with by the narrow spirited outsiders who try to force their own dead morality down the throat of America's public. It is an article of which moving picture showmen throughout the country should be proud.

IN regard to the Sunday opening movement for moving pictures in Pennsylvania, let us bear in mind that the widest possible law would not make attendance obligatory for anyone; while a restricted law would, on the contrary, cause to seek objectionable diversions on Sunday many who have not the means to afford such recreations as golf, excursions, autoing or attendance at the country club, where all manner of diversion is to be had by the moneyed class.

We are still in the experimental stage on the "Sunday or not" question. We are not qualified to judge of the taste of a pudding until we have sampled it. Just so with the Sunday movies. No evidence can be submitted until the experiment in regard to an open Sunday is tried out.

The Church Is Not the State.

We see no evidence in what has been submitted by the protestors. Not one of them has thought sufficiently to prepare a well digested and comprehensive code. Great minds have threshed the question so thoroughly that they are convinced an amendment of the "blue laws" is an absolute good to society at large, when one takes into consideration the fluctuation of society and the general unrest attendant on the past war and post war conditions.

Some think that the movement should be regulated by the church. The main point is that attendance at Sunday movies rests wholly with the individual, should the State permit Sunday recreation of such educational value as motion pictures and musical entertainments.

The Church is not the State and the State is not the Church. Divergence of opinion is the stepping stone to something better, something fuller. The motion picture exhibitors do not wish to appear sacrilegious; they do not wish to break God's law; they do not wish to break man's law. Therefore they are open to conviction.

By Mrs. A. Kihchel

Exhibitors Amenable to Local Opinion.

Should an amendment of the blue law come, and should the motion picture exhibitors be found to contribute to the degradation of our people instead of providing an innocent means of resting mind and body of our working classes and others, the exhibitors would readily consent to a local referendum on the matter. There are black sheep in every fold. It is not only the churchman who is found infallible as to religious propensities; neither are all exhibitors saints.

The question is, shall the men who cannot afford autoing, golfing, or attendance at the country club be restrained from seeking recreation on Sunday, the day on which they are in a receptive mood for enjoying real recreation? Or are they to be kept in a state of unrest?

Pictures Will Maintain the Balance.

The prohibition law has to be taken into consideration as contributing to this state of unrest. The motion picture

Mrs. A. Kihchel.
The wife-partner with an interest in higher things.

would fill the gap, prevent the seeking of a degrading type of "pastures new," and create a much needed balance for men who need the help of this uplift. This side of the question is to be considered and considered gravely.

Are you willing to help keep the balance, we ask the opposition? Are you willing to help in a crisis? A crisis is imminent if justice is not meted out to the workingmen. Witness the horrors of Bolshevism in the world at present.

Unrest Is Bolshevist's Right Hand.

A dissatisfied man is as dough in the hands of the unprincipled Bolshevist agent. An unsatisfied man is one sought by the Bolshevist to spread the foul insidious propaganda of his kind. The best way to down Bolshevism is to let the working people know we have their interest and consideration at heart.

The church delegates have said: "The exhibitors are in it for the money." Admitting so, the moving picture promotes the happiness, comfort and physical well-being of workingmen. We hold the ministers of all denominations in real reverence. They deserve all credit and the highest salaries they can command. We aim not to conflict with them. Local self-government readily permits of experimentation on this mooted question. And the question is the outcome of the needs and convictions of the community.

Exhibitors Want Society to Benefit.

Our wisest course seems to be to leave such questions to the civil rather than to the canon law. As many of our leading ecclesiastics and statesmen are discussing this matter it would be to the interest of the people to keep from "getting hot under the collar."

We exhibitors are not so black as we are painted. We are ready to be swayed to the side of the good no matter what the outcome. The film people showed us "our boys" and showed the boys over there "our people" when the boys needed us and we needed them. The film people did this gratis.

Think the matter over. We cannot expect an equal understanding or knowledge of the question for all as to the situation. But we can expect an equal voice in the agreement to serve the public. The time has come when the logic of facts is self evident. We remain law-abiding citizens.

Mt. Vernon Plaza Will Be Remodeled by Corporation

MANAGER H. H. HICKS, of the Plaza Theatre, Mount Vernon, Ill., recently announced the incorporation of the Plaza Amusement Company for the reconstruction and enlargement of his present theatre, the capitalization being $18,000, the estimated cost of the improvement.

The company will take over the quarters now occupied by Merrill's millinery establishment, and will thus add to the present Plaza playhouse. The entire theatre will be reconstructed and made fireproof, and finished in a substantial and thorough manner.

The new house will have a seating capacity of 1,000, and, being a downtown hall, will be an asset to the entire community and an important acquisition to the business section. The building will have 7,000 feet of floor space.

The Plaza will be designed as a combination house, with dressing and property rooms, and all the wiring and stage facilities needed to bring traveling companies to Mount Vernon. The interior decoration will not be elaborate, but neat and attractive. The stock of the new company is being disposed of locally.

ALBANY AND TRENTON ADVANCE SUNDAY

Sabbath Law Reaches Third Reading in New York Senate and Assembly—Jersey House Passes Bill

Albany, April 2.

OPPOSED by several of the upstate Senators, the Sunday Motion Picture bill permitting shows after 2 o'clock in the afternoon was today advanced to third reading in the Senate, and its fate will be known the forepart of next week. The bill was given a similar advancement in the Assembly yesterday, where but little opposition was manifested. There is a feeling prevailing that the bill has an excellent chance of passage. Representatives of the Exhibitors' League are here and doing all within their power to secure favorable action on the measure when it comes to a vote next week.

Legislative Opposition Small.

According to representatives of the exhibitors, the bill has an excellent chance in the Senate. The twenty-two Democrats, naturally enough, will be found lined up in its favor. Senator Charles Lockwood, Senator Thompson and Senator Graves are also said to be in favor of the bill, while the fact that Senator Abeles and Senator Whitley, as members of the committee before which the bill had consideration, voted to report it out of committee, can be taken as an indication of their favorable attitude to the measure when the vote is taken. With the Democrats, these five Republicans will be sufficient to put the measure across so far as the Senate is concerned.

Royal K. Fuller, representing the American Recreation Society, and a former New York Herald man, has been industriously working for the Sunday Motion Picture bill for the last few weeks, visiting chambers of commerce and like organizations in various parts of the state. Mr. Fuller was in Binghamton, Elmira and Ithaca last week, and it is said that his work there will assume the support from the Assemblymen in the southern tier.

The Watertown Chamber of Commerce has also indorsed the bill, and as Assemblyman H. Edmund Machold, chairman of the ways and means, and one of the most important men in the Assembly, comes from near Watertown, it is believed that he will work for the bill. Buffalo and Rochester Assemblymen are solidly behind the bill and support also will come from Assemblymen Welch, Malone and Fearon.

Assemblymen Work Hard for Bill.

Representatives working in the interests of the bill are leaving no stone unturned in their efforts to get the measure through the Legislature and in the hands of the Governor for signature. Assemblyman Raymond Kenyon, brother of Doris Kenyon, is keeping close track of the bill in the lower house and expressed himself this afternoon as believing that all three of the liberal bills, the Boxing bill, the Sunday Baseball bill and the Sunday Motion Picture bill will all pass and go directly to the Governor.

It is generally admitted that the Censorship bill, in which little or no interest is being taken, has no chance of passage this session. Everything is now in rules committee and the session is due to adjourn on April 24.

GRANT.

Alperstein Leaves for South.

A. Alperstein, treasurer and general manager of the Western Photoplays, Inc., left town April 1 to join Joseph A. Golden and the members of "The Great Gamble" company who have been in the South for nearly two months doing exterior work. He will remain about a week.

New Jersey House Passes Sunday Pictures Measure

THE Hyland bill providing for motion picture exhibitions, athletic games and other recreations on Sunday passed the New Jersey House April 8. A large number of local and out-of-town exhibitors were in attendance when the measure was acted upon in the Trenton capital.

The bill, sponsored by Assemblyman Hyland, of Essex county, was immediately sent to the Social Welfare Committee of the Senate. A hearing will be held by the committee Monday afternoon, April 7, having been scheduled to allow the opponents of the bill a chance to bring in their reasons against it. Their claim is that they were not given a chance at the hearing in which William A. Brady and other prominent representatives of the industry presented a strong case for Sunday pictures, as given in the April 5 issue of the World. It is indicated that the measure will pass the Senate.

Hugh C. Barrett, Democratic House leader from Newark, was enthusiastic in his support of the bill, and was successful in having it brought on the floor under suspension of rules.

The measure calls for a local referendum by which any municipality can accept or reject the law, and also for city licenses for Sunday moving pictures or any recreations when conducted for profit.

Palisade Laboratories Seeking Additional Help

ACCORDING to H. J. Streyckmans, Managing Director of the Palisade Film Laboratories, Inc., things are booming in the big plant at Palisade, N. J., just across the river from 129th street, as evidenced by an advertisement in this week's World seeking additional help.

"The present crew is probably the greatest ensemble of expert laboratory workers ever got together," said Mr. Streyckmans. "In adding to our forces the same discrimination will be exercised as was shown in getting the original crew together. We have positions open for high-class employes in all departments, as it is not our policy to drive our men beyond their capabilities, which is a current evil, and always has been, in film laboratories.

"We are taking on additional contracts for pronting and developing, on which we shall commence work within a few weeks, and we wish to insure the same high quality of service which has made the Palisade one of the foremost laboratories. We number among our clients America's foremost producers and distributors.

"Great strides have been made in the technical end of the film business in the past year or so, and only a modern plant, completely equipped with the most up-to-date machinery, can turn turn out from fifty to a hundred prints of a subject and have them all perfect. We are prepared to get the utmost out of a negative, and to furnish any variety of single and double tones and tints. The advice and assistance of our technical staff is at the service of our clients without extra charge.

Bech, Van Siclen & Co. Organize Export Branch

THE large exporting and importing firm of Bech, Van Siclen & Co., Inc., with headquarters at 45 East Seventeenth street and branch houses in nineteen of the largest cities in the world, has arranged with L. C. Wheeler to form a film exporting department to to be operated along the same broad lines as the other departments.

Having heretofore only engaged in the film export business in a minor way, according to the demand of their numerous customers throughout the world the firm has decided to enter the field definitely and decidedly. Well established already with branch houses in foreign countries, they will be able to distribute their products and reach every foreign market.

Mr. Wheeler was at one time an official of the Selig Polyscope Company, of Los Angeles and Chicago, and but recently returned from Europe, where he was in charge of distribution of Government pictures for the Committee on Public Information.

Immediately upon signing contracts Mr. Wheeler purchased the world rights for J. Stuart Blackton's "A House Divided." Also he purchased "Wild Honey," starring Doris Kenyon.

A third picture was added to the list, "Caliber 38," Edgar Lewis' production starring Mitchell Lewis.

Schaefer Is in New York to Attend Board Session

PETER J. SCHAEFER, president of National Exhibitors' League, is in New York, coming here to preside at the meeting of the board of directors to be held at the Hotel Astor Thursday, April 3. Mr. Schaefer contemplated remaining in town until the following Monday. He had intended to remain until after the Motion Picture Club's ball to be held at the Hotel Commodore on April 11, but urgent business obliges him to return to Chicago.

Mr. Schaefer reports a hundred per cent. exhibitors' association in Chicago that is working hard with most hopeful prospects, to defeat the establishment of a state censorship committee in Illinois. The subject comes up before the State Senate at Springfield next week. Mr. Schaefer will incidentally take up at the directors' meeting the question of a New York local exhibitors' league and other matters of national importance to the exhibitors, possibly the question of the national convention of 1919.

J. M. Mosher, Buffalo exhibitor, will be in New York until Monday, April 10.

STEADY MOVE TOWARD SUNDAY OPENING

Committee of Association in Charge of Campaign for Progressive Laws Reports Advance in Eight States

THE committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry in charge of the campaign for Sunday opening before the legislatures of a number of states consisting of Arthur S. Friend, Lewis Innerarity and R. H. Cochrane, has reached a point in its work where favorable action is likely to be taken within the next few days by the legislatures of several states. The committee has the voluntary and active cooperation of the American Recreation League, of Washington, D. C.

Producers are behind the committee in its work, and through their representatives in the states affected are putting on an aggressive campaign. All of the news weeklies are carrying the message of Sunday opening to the public, and in addition to this the various producers are putting trailers on their features.

Slides, too, are being distributed among exhibitors.

Situation in New York.

The situation in the various states where legislation has reached an advanced stage is as follows:

The Thompson-Donohue bill, providing for Sunday motion pictures under local option, was advanced to the order of final passage in the Assembly Tuesday.

The Assembly Codes Committee which had had under consideration the bill introduced by Assemblyman Donohue, providing for Sunday motion pictures, reported it out on March 26, but later decided to amend the bill so as to make it conform with Senator George F. Thompson's bill, which was reported out of the Senate Codes Committee the same day by a vote of 6 to 4. It appeared that the provisions of the Thompson bill were considered more favorable than the similar bills prepared by Senator Foley and Assemblyman Donohue, and for that reason, the Thompson bill was substituted.

The Thompson bill is now in a position to be acted upon by both branches of the Legislature.

How It Stands in New Jersey.

The Hyland bill No. 291, has been reported favorably out of committee in the Assembly and was expected to be passed by the Assembly Monday night. Instead, however, the bill was re-committed in order to permit of further hearings. This bill, which permits motion pictures, recreations and concerts on Sunday, has been amended to meet the objections against the original measuse in the Senate.

This bill should not be confused with the bill of Assemblyman Siegler, which has already passed the House. The Siegler bill has to do only with the permission of motion pictures, games, recreations, concerts, etc., on Sunday in the public parks regulated by the state.

The Connecticut Prospect.

The Senate has passed, by a vote of 26 to 3, a home rule Sunday Motion Picture bill similar to the one pending in the New York Legislature. Favorable action in the House is expected at an early date. Connecticut presented a peculiar situation. Sunday pictures have, of course, always fallen under the jurisdiction of the old blue laws. But the Bolsheviki have been gaining a foothold in the state, and in Waterbury three weeks ago 190 propagandists were arrested. The situation was becoming alarming, and the Sunday motion picture bill was widely advocated by Americanization and other patriotic organizations as a check to the tide of discontent. It is believed, with confidence, that Sunday pictures will prove a most effective remedy.

Temporary Set-Back in Colorado.

The Kelly bill, repealing the Sunday closing law, has passed the House by a vote of 49 to 14, but met defeat in the Senate, 18 to 11. H. T. Nolan, President of the Rocky Mountain Screen Club, and State Chairman of the National Association of Colorado, sends word that many opposing Senators stated that if the motion picture people had confined their measure strictly to a repeal of the prohibition of Sunday pictures, instead of trying to open all amusements on Sunday, they would have voted for it. The campaign managers have accordingly decided to renew the battle in the manner suggested.

Kunsky Optimistic for Michigan.

The last report from State Chairman John H. Kunsky, of Detroit, was most optimistic. The bill legalizes Sunday amusements and was reported out of the Senate committee five days after it was introduced, and although it has been before the body awaiting action for some time, it is expected that it will pass the Senate without much trouble when it comes to a vote. Prospects are similarly favorable in the House.

Hale Hamilton Well Met.
At the Metro studios on his new comedy, "After His Own Heart."

As Seen in South Dakota.

The Sunday closing bill was introduced in both branches of the Legislature, but was promptly killed. The South Dakota exhibitors had the active co-operation of the Minneapolis Film Board of Trade, through the chairman of its legislative committee, F. S. Meyer.

Facing a Fight in Iowa.

The Sunday opening bill has passed the Senate by a large majority, but is facing a hard fight in the House. State Chairman A. H. Blank, however, is hopeful of the ultimate success of the measure.

Favorable Report from Ohio.

The Ohio bill, fostered by the Ohio State Screen League, takes the form of amendment to one of the sections of the general code now in effect. This section is a general prohibitory Sunday law. The amendment provides that "municipalities shall have the power to regulate or forbid the exhibition of the projection of motion pictures on Sunday subject to the sections of the statutes provided for the initiative and referendum." In other words, while it is still in the power of any community, acting through its counsel or other governing body, to prohibit motion pictures on Sunday, the amendment permits absolute local option in the matter.

This amendment has been favorably reported in the House, and final favorable action in both houses, is hoped for in the near future.

Universal Exchanges Aid in Sunday Opening Fight

THAT Universal is lending valuable assistance to exhibitors battling anti-Sunday picture legislation, pending and now in force in various states, is evidenced by the reports of various organizations received by Universal executives during the past few days. At the request of President Carl Laemmle, various Universal exchanges have assigned special representatives to work with exhibitors' organizations in carrying on their campaigns against Sunday closing and Mr. Laemmle personally has written numerous letters and appeared before various legislative committees presenting the exhibitors' case and urging that proposed legislation be voted down.

The International news reels released tri-weekly through Universal exchanges contain trailers asking the public to sign petitions against Sunday closing and to aid in the fight against anti-Sunday bills. Universal has had special trailers of similar nature made for attaching to features comedies and short reel subjects in various states where "blue sky" legislation is at issue.

Screen League's Sunday Bill Scores.

The bill introduced in the Ohio House of Representatives by the Ohio State Screen League, to make the showing of moving pictures on Sundays possible in all communities, through local option elections, scored considerable success the week ending March 29, when it was reported upon favorably by the Cities committee which was considering it, and went back to the house for an early vote.

The vote on the bill is expected before April 10. If the house acts favorably, it has excellent chances of passing the Senate.

A big delegation of exhibitors from Cleveland, Toledo, Akron, Columbus, Dayton and Cincinnati, will be in Columbus when the bill comes to a vote in the house of representatives.

League Takes Up Sunday Question.

The increasing agitation, both at Columbus and in Cincinnati, on the part of professional reformers and "blue-stockings," in favor of stringent legislation enforcing the Sunday closing of picture theatres, led to a special meeting of the Moving Picture Exhibitors' League of the Chamber of Commerce in Cincinnati recently to discuss ways and means of meeting the situation. No action was taken regarding which details can be published, but the matter was discussed from every angle, and one of the means which will undoubtedly be taken to fight the move for Sunday closing will be the liberal use of publicity. The exhibitors are firmly convinced that the public does not favor Sunday closing, and that if the threatened shutdown of this innocent form of amusement is spread before people in its true light, public sentiment will be aroused to the point of balking the "blue-stockings."

SUNDAY OPENING HAS STRONG BACKING

American Recreation League Getting Behind Nation-Wide Movement for Liberal Observance

SUNDAY opening was the topic of discussion at the banquet of the Film Exchange Managers' Association of Washington, D. C., when Richard W. Austin, president of the American Recreation League, and Ulysses G. Glick, of the same organization, told of what was being done to further the motion picture plan of entertainment in combating red flag socialism and bolshevism. This event was one of the most noteworthy in the history of the managers' association.

It was staged at Harvey's, where a colored orchestra kept things lively between speeches. President Smeltzer, manager of the World Film Exchange, introduced Mr. Austin. For some time past a great deal of interest has been centered in the proposals of the American Recreation League, and Mr. Austin held his audience for a half hour or more.

Mr. Austin referred to the banishment of the saloons and the need for a substitute. That substitute is the motion picture theatre with its price within the reach of even the poorest of our people.

Believes Strongly in Pictures.

"I believe in motion pictures every day in the year," he continued while his audience applauded, "and I have said so over my signature, have said so before some of the legislative committees of the country, and will continue to say so everywhere. I do not know of any good, sound reason in opposition to it.

"We have had a practical demonstration, as I told the New Jersey legislators, the other day, right here in the motion picture theatres of the National Capital, where pictures have been the greatest thing in the world for the thousands of Government workers who came from all over the United States to make temporary homes here during the period of the war, and who would have been deprived of almost all amusement and recreation had it not been for them.

"I think that the people who patronize the motion picture theatres get more for their money than from like amounts spent for anything else in the way of amusement—they receive amusement, education, the pictures depict travel, history, art, and all of the every day events in the world's history. I do not know of any agency during the war period, that really furnished the same amount of interest and information that the war pictures furnished to the American people.

"The ministers of the country are making a mistake in fighting clean, healthy, wholesome motion pictures on the Sabbath Day. If I were a preacher, I would preach a half hour on Sunday and have motion pictures for an hour. It would carry the scriptural story with it. I read an article in a newspaper the other day stating that a minister in New Jersey was going to do that."

Elaborate Menu Served.

Immediately following the conclusion of Mr. Austin's address, a string of waiters served a very elaborate menu, and when the cigars were lighted, Mr. Glick led an informal discussion on censorship, participated in by Oscar A. Morgan, manager of the Famous Players-Lasky Company's exchange; Harry M. Crandall, owner of a string of first-class motion picture theatres; Manager Champion, of Pathe, Inc.; Ben P. Rogers, manager for the Fox Film Corporation, and Sidney B. Lust, president of the Super Films Attractions, Inc.

It was pointed out that Congressman Randall, of California, would seek to have his national censorship measure acted upon early during the coming session of Congress, and means of combating such action were discussed. The faults of censorship were talked of, and some of the strange activities of members of the various boards were recounted.

The motion picture men declared against the need for censorship, and Mr. Glick assured them that the workingmen of the country were with the picture people in every fight that is right. Motion pictures are the poor man's amusement, and he would not tolerate too much tampering with his privilege.

Mr. Crandall stated that the reformers were getting themselves into a very perilous position, because of their activities. He declared that the prohibition movement is a most unpopular one and may stir up strife, and that industry must prepare itself for a censorship movement because these people must have something to occupy their time.

Mr. Lust, chairman of the association's committee in charge of the distribution of the Victory Loan films, stated that at a meeting of the board of directors of the Washington Chamber of Commerce held earlier in the day, the activities of the motion picture exchange managers and exhibitors in doing their part to float the loan were commended.

She's In Again!

Is Mabel Normand, this time in her Goldwyn, "The Pest."

Cadets Parade for "Humanity" Film.

Twelve hundred uniformed cadets from the three big high schools of Dallas paraded the business section of the city with bands playing and colors flying to see "The Heart of Humanity" at the Hippodrome Theatre, March 28.

The cadet regiment carried signs "We Are on Our Way to the Hippodrome to See Heart of Humanity." The young student soldiers cheered themselves hoarse during the feature film's presentation.

The advertising stunt, which was one of the most successful ever arranged here, was the idea of Manager Ned Depinet of the Consolidated Film and Supply Company. He worked out the big high school parade with the cooperation of the Dallas Times Herald.

Reginald Warde in Los Angeles.

Reginald Warde, New York exporter of American films, who handles the output of Christie productions for the entire world outside of the United States and Canada, is in Los Angeles in the interests of the producers whom he represents.

Mr. Warde declares that he has booked the product everywhere except in Germany and Russia. It is his belief that conditions in those countries will soon warrant his making a trip there for the purpose of making arrangements to show his pictures in the numerous theatres which were doing good business before the war.

Fans for Norma Talmadge Fans.

A big fan manufacturer has just arranged with Joseph M. Schenck to use attractive autographed photographs of Norma Talmadge. Fans will be distributed during the summer months free to the audience at all the leading Marcus Loew's theatres from New York to the Coast. There will be local advertisements on the backs, but no writing matter on the photograph of Miss Talmadge, which will be reproduced in colors, save only her written name.

NO STAR IN "THE TURN IN THE ROAD"

Wholesome and Human Story, Written and Directed by King W. Vidor in Exhibitors Mutual Production, Has Well Balanced Cast of Thoroughly Capable Players

By Edward Weitzel

AND so "The Turn in the Road" led straight to home and happiness. Had King V. Vidor's story been told in printed words in place of being pictured on the screen the opening sentence of this article would make an appropriate finish for the book. Simplicity of theme and a youthful faith in human nature are two strong reasons for the picture's entertaining qualities. The author only hints at weighty matters. A big question, one that man has been asking himself for ages, is merely touched upon.

Hamilton Perry loses his wife at the time his son is born. As a result of his grief he also loses his faith in the justice and mercy of the Creator, wanders off in an aimless quest for forgetfulness and becomes an outcast. Not a novel situation in fiction or in real life, but the author of "The Turn in the Road" has surrounded it with incidents that are clean and wholesome, and the man and women of his story are the sort of folk that keep the current of existence palatable and sweet.

Its Mood One of Helpfulness and Cheer.

Evil passions have only a slight part in the action of the picture. The ruling emotions are love and devotion to duty, the predominant scenes being of quiet beauty, the charm of innocent childhood and the beneficial lesson of sorrow nobly borne. Its mood is one of helpfulness and cheer, a forceful reminder of the world-old truth that happiness is given only to the man who does not shirk his responsibilities, and it maintains this mood to the end.

Not all of its incidents will stand the cold-blooded test of absolute conviction, and the dramatic scenes are limited in their power to thrill; but they help to carry out the underlying feeling of the story and to keep it in the class to which it belongs. Failure to accomplish this result has caused many a picture to disappoint its producer and the exhibitor who booked it.

Selecting a Starless Cast.

The story of "The Turn in the Road" was published in the March 29 issue of the Moving Picture World. After completing the scenario author Vidor held a consultation with director Vidor on the selection of the cast. None of the parts were written for a star, but they all demanded the services of players of thorough ability. Excellently drawn and skilfully balanced, the characters that supply the interest are six in number.

Hamilton Perry heads the list. The type of business man who has fought his way up from an obscure beginning to wealth and a commanding position in his community, Perry is not actuated by selfishness but is devoted to money-getting for the sake of the power it gives him. When his men go on strike he fights them for daring to oppose his will. He has had neither the inclination nor the time to cultivate the better side of his nature, but he sees things clearly at last through the eyes of his little grandson and his surrender to the dictates of his conscience is wholly within reason.

George Nichols is the small town magnate to the life. In appearance and bearing he exactly fits his role and acts with equal authority.

Paul and the Rev. Matthew Barker.

Paul Perry, the son of Hamilton Perry, is the young man who loses faith in God. The part is not fully developed but enough of Paul's nature is shown to win him sympathy and to make his return to home and happiness the only satisfactory ending. Lloyd Hughes is a capital selection for young Perry, responding to the temperamental and other phases of the character quickly and surely.

The Rev. Matthew Barker is another of the finely conceived and accurately played characters. Winter Hall has been intrusted with the portrayal of this minister of the Gospel whose doubt, after the death of his idolized daughter, turns him from his old belief and deprives him of his church. Gentle dignity and earnestness in keeping with his calling are the salient points of his impersonation. The little scene with his grandson, where the boy shows him that bees are harmless to their friends, is never strained or overdone. This applies to all his work.

Evelyn and Little Bob.

Evelyn Barker, who marries Paul, calls for a pretty and attractive actress whose girlish fascination compensates for the impression that the minister's younger daughter has always been spoiled by the rest of her family. Pauline Curley answers these requirements completely.

Bob and his six pets are the gleams of sunshine in the picture. Little Ben Alexander, smile and all, is Bob and the owner of the puppies. Anyone familiar with this adorable youngster and his value to every screen story in which he has appeared will understand his importance in the cast and the reality of his acting. When he and the puppies roll together on the grass or trail into the room out of the storm to save the boy's paternal grandfather from being murdered by the strikers they work their will with the spectator. Even the latter scene achieves its intended effect by force of the little fellow's personality and the delightful way he handles the situation.

Helen Jerome Eddy's Fine Art.

June Barker must have been King Vidor's favorite character. He has lavished the most thought and sympathy on her, and she has repaid him doubly for all the care he has taken. The elder sister of Evelyn is a woman whose beauty of soul is like a benediction on those about her. She gives up the man she loves to her sister without one selfish regret and devotes her life to rearing Evelyn's child when death and grief deprive the boy of both parents. Faithful to her trust she waits with serene patience and calmness of spirit the return of little Bob's father, and is rewarded at last when Paul Berry realizes her worth, and understands all that they mean to each other.

Helen Jerome Eddy embodies these traits of character in her acting of June. There are incidents in the earlier part of the picture that demand the same firm delicacy of touch and refinement of feeling possessed by the master etcher. Her treatment of the self-sacrificing June from the moment she knows she has lost Paul until he turns for her sisterly kiss after the wedding ceremony, is marked by sympathetic comprehension and ample ability to express this exalted state of mind and heart.

Honest in purpose and aided by a sure intellectual grasp of her art, Helen Jerome Eddy has the sensibility that responds to the whole range of emotions. She will go far in her profession, if the future gives her half a chance.

Room for More Pictures of This Sort.

So much for a picture that is simple and wholesome and for a cast without a star! There is room for many more of the same sort. King W. Vidor's story is not flawless nor is his direction of it. He is a young man and experience will teach him how to improve his work. But "The Turn in the Road" should lead him to the degree of success he is striving for and abundantly deserves.

"LET THE PUBLIC KNOW WHAT YOU HAVE"

L. H. Gardner Conducts Four of Kunsky's Detroit Theatres on This Basis and Finds It Works Well

"GET the picture you want first—don't put it in on rubber shoes—let the public know you got it," is the slogan and basis on which L. H. Gardner operates, and it has proven most successful. Mr. Gardner is the house manager of the Garden Theatre, Detroit, and does the booking and personal supervising of the Liberty, Empress and Royal theatres, all of which are part of the John H. Kunsky circuit. Mr. Gardner, besides doing the booking and directing of these theatres, writes all the ads and all of the exploitation. Just think—he has to book twenty-one distinct shows a week to cover the four houses, which is a total of 1,100 shows in the course of a year.

The success of Mr. Gardner as a showman has been due to his ability as an advertiser. He knows what hits public fancy. Mr. Gardner says that no matter what picture is booked fifty per cent. of its success depends on how it is advertised—and there are many kinds of advertising methods: newspapers, billboards, circulars, special signs in front of the house, the mail list, etc. The four houses which Mr. Gardner books are in different locations and each has a distinct following, so he has to study the wants of four different types of audiences.

Mr. Gardner is a product of Battle Creek, Mich. As a youngster he was tenor with a musical show. When illustrated songs came out, he worked over the Butterfield Circuit as a singer, and was later engaged to manage the Vaudette Theatre in Battle Creek, afterward going to the Bijou Theatre, Jackson, for Butterfield. Then he went with C. A. Kuhlman, of Jackson, and stayed with him for five years as manager of the Rex and Crown theatres, and later was engaged by William F. Klatt and given full charge of Klatt's theatres. When Mr. Klatt opened the Rosedale Theatre, Mr. Gardner was placed in charge, where he remained for eighteen months.

He signed another contract with the Butterfield Circuit and went to Saginaw to open the Jeffers-Strand.

It was January 1, 1916, that Mr. Gardner affiliated with the John H. Kunsky Enterprises. He was engaged by Mr. Kunsky to manage the Royal Theatre on Monroe avenue, Detroit, and later was given the Empress, the Garden and the Liberty.

American Pictures for New Zealand.

Frank R. Day sailed last week to New Zealand for the Community Motion Picture Bureau, which is serving the "Y" there.

A year ago Mr. Day sailed for London in the service of the bureau, was Supervisor at Bordeau from May to September 25, going to Italy in October, where he had charge of the picture entertainment for the American forces.

After the armistice was signed he returned to France, when a leave area was established in the Pyrenees. Pictures were then shown at Cauterets and Luchun. Mr. Day became director at Bordeaux, December 5, 1918, and remained in charge until February 15, increasing the showings by two-thirds and putting on seventy-two points of showing in the billets for twenty miles round about. At La Rochelle alone thirty-three shows a week were given to 35,500.

L. H. Gardner.

Kenneth Macgowan Is Made Goldwyn Advertising Head

GOLDWYN PICTURES announces the engagement of Kenneth Macgowan as advertising director and Ralph Block as publicity director.

For Mr. Macgowan this means a return to Goldwyn after much fine work with the New York Tribune. A year ago he was director of publicity for Goldwyn, returning to the newspaper field as a special writer. Prior to his first alliance with Goldwyn, now resumed, he had been motion picture editor of the Philadelphia Evening Ledger and a contributor to a number of the better monthly magazines.

Mr. Block was formerly dramatic critic of the New York Tribune and has been a writer in other fields for the Tribune for several years, as well as a contributor to the magazines. This is his first entry into motion pictures. Before coming to New York he was a staff member of the Kansas City Star and other important newspapers.

Woman Exhibitor Offers Jobs to Ex-Service Men

Miss Florence Rose Fennyvessey, manager of the Strand Theatre, Rochester, N. Y., one of the largest downtown moving picture houses in that city, decided that it would be a good move for all concerned to engage four veterans of the war to form a quartet to sing at the Strand. Accordingly, she inserted the following "Help Wanted" advertisement in all of the Rochester newspapers:

Wanted—Returned soldiers or marines, honorably discharged, for quartet to sing evenings at the Strand Theatre, St. Paul street. Apply mornings, between 10:30 and 11:30, or evenings, after 8:30, to Miss Fenyvessy, manager.

Knowing that many of the men have gained experience as entertainers in camp and on board ship, Miss Fennyvessey thinks that she will be able to secure four men who will provide entertainment of a kind that the public will appreciate. She says the quartet will become a permanent feature of the Strand. The only stipulation that she made, besides ability to sing, is that the men be honorably discharged from the service and wear their uniforms while appearing at the Strand.

Named Head of Community Boston Office.

Robert A. Bakeman has been appointed director of the Boston office of the Community Motion Picture Bureau.

Boston was the home office of this organization when it began its work in 1911, and the demands for its service in that territory have seen constant growth even during the period when the war work of the Bureau necessitated removal of headquarters to New York City.

Mr. Bakeman has just returned from eleven months' service as a "Y" man in France with the French Army. He was previously a superintendent of schools in Massachusetts and a graduate of Colby College, with a master's degree from Harvard University.

To Manage Independent in Pittsburgh.

Norman S. Carroll, formerly assistant to H. Robbins, assistant general manager of Fox Film Corporation and more recently general manager Fort Pitt Theatre Corporation, Pittsburgh, has been placed in charge of the Pittsburgh branch of the Independent Sales Corporation. Mr. Carroll is one of the trade's youngest branch managers and is known throughout the Eastern territory to every exhibitor.

RUBBERNECKING IN FILMLAND

Los Angeles Correspondent Personally Conducts Our Readers Through the West Coast Studios

By Giebler

I HAVE long been addicted to the notebook habit, but a few years ago, when some smart Aleck started the story that reporters never use notebooks except in moving picture plays, I began to use old envelopes, bills and other scraps of paper for which I did not care when around the studios, and the cuffs and other smooth surfaces of my boiled shirt when reporting anything in the nature of a function.

Of course this was not a good way. Bills and old envelopes were never scarce, but shirts were, and the plan led to large laundry bills and unpleasant contretemps. Imagine my embarrassment when people would come into the office the day after a banquet to see if I had spelled their names correctly and find me with my shirt suspended from the light fixtures while I am writing the thrilling tale of the night before from its bosom.

Repentant, Returns to Paths of Truth.

It was with great pleasure, therefore, that I learned through a chance meeting with D. W. Griffith a few days ago that all reporters and press representatives in London use notebooks. I now carry my looseleaf note book with frankness, sang froid, abandon, and utter disregard of anything the fun pokers and paragraphers may say about the matter.

I rubbernecked two studios this week, and I am sure the looseleaf system of note taking enabled me to gather a great deal more data than would have been possible with either the scraps of paper or the laundry log book system.

First, I went to the Anita Stewart studio, where Marshall Neilan was engineering an all-star cast through the action of "Her Kingdom of Dreams," the working title for Miss Stewart's next contribution to the First National program.

Everybody Doing All Star Stuff.

The all-star cast idea seems to be growing. Everybody's doing it. Miss Stewart must have gone over the colony with a fine tooth comb to get the aggregation of talent she had lined up at the studio.

There were Spottiswoode Aitken, Kathleen Williams, Mahlon Hamilton, Lew Cody, Anna Q. Nilsson, Joseph Kilgour, and those three famous Thomases of the screen, Messrs. Santschi, Jefferson and Meighan.

Visiting around a studio is very pleasant, but there are so many interruptions. I had just begun to get well acquainted with everybody when Spottiswoode Aitken was called away to be the piece de resistance in a deathbed scene that Mickey Neilan was doping out, and Miss Stewart had to go and play the part of his orphan daughter.

And a few minutes later, just after I had got Thomas Jefferson worked around into a reminiscent mood, he left me all up in the air with a statement that he had appeared in his first moving picture twenty-five years ago, and went into the scene to look after the funeral arrangements.

Jefferson Some Super-Pioneer.

I talked to George Richeleavie, technical director, and Rudolph Cameron, husband to Miss Stewart in private life, until Aitken got through with being a defunct body, and Thomas Jefferson came out of the set. Then I nailed him.

"You mean five years ago, not twenty-five," I said, in my best you-can't-put-anything-over-on-me air.

"All right," said Mr. Jefferson. "If you don't believe me go down to the Griffith studio and ask Billy Bitzer. He was the cameraman. The feature made quite a hit in this country as well as in Europe, where it was exhibited in penny arcades at one cent a look. This is the way it was. My father was living then, and the Biograph company sent Billy Bitzer down to Buzzard's Bay, where the family was staying, to get a subject for their Mutascope machines. Father staged a bit from Rip Van Winkle, and my three brothers and I played the gnomes."

Giebler Stars in Fox Production.

My next stop was at the Fox plant, where Director J. Gordon Edwards was making a big scene for a forthcoming William Farnum feature.

I had an experience at this place that I am sure will make a big dent in the film industry, and maybe set a new standard for screen acting.

I made my first appearance before any movie camera!

The scene in which I appeared was a big one, a representation of a stock broker's office. There were forty-nine extras and one actor in the scene, and I created the part of a plunger who is so excited about a certain stock going up to 95, or going down to 95—I forget which—that he throws his hat up in the air and hollers.

Of course the others all did the same—they were imitating me—but they did not count, they were only extras. To make my identification easy to managers and others looking for rare talent, it may be said that the tall and distinguished looking thespian who turned around occasionally to see if the cameraman was on the job, was me.

Puts the Blame on the Camera.

After receiving the congratulations from Director Edwards and Mr. Farnum on my superb characterization, I posed for a picture before the still camera. Mr. Farnum supported me in this piece. Al Selig, Bill's press representative, acted as director and cameraman. And right here perfidy entered into the game and spoiled what otherwise would have been a perfect picture and a perfect day.

Of course I understand that an actor cannot afford to be photographed with any man handsomer than himself, and I would have stood for a little fixing being done to my features that would have kept the chances of the deadly parallel down to the minimum without a murmur. But the "fixing" that was done to my face—as one glance at the appended picture will convince any one that it has been fixed—is too much! It leaves me hurt and grieved beyond words.

Star May Seek Refuge in Double.

I talked to Selig about the matter, but he blamed it all on me, and said that if I had not changed my gum from the north to the south side of my face just as the camera clicked, I would not have looked quite as much like Joe Martin, the chimpanzee, as I do in the picture.

But these were mere words and held little comfort, and I am still convinced that I am the victim of trick photography.

Cameras always treat me this way. The same thing happened out at the National studios once when I had my picture taken with Billy Parsons. I am going to get a good picture of myself some day if I have to employ a double for the purpose.

Cantor Back in Los Angeles.

Abe Cantor, of the technical staff of the Anita Stewart Productions Company, who has been supervising the laboratory work on "The Midnight Romance" at the Rothacker laboratories in Chicago, has returned to Los Angeles to assist in the filming of Miss Stewart's next production.

William Farnum and the Deadly Parallel.
Giebler says, "All would have been well if I hadn't shifted my gum to the south side of my face."

Consider the Stills Producers Send Out.

DID you ever notice 'em? Did you? They are supposed to "sell" the picture; to awaken general interest in the production the producer desires, at the moment, to "put over" with the exhibitor and his ticket-buying customers. Of course YOUR stills are entirely different and are not under present discussion. But the others! Suffering photography! The others.

Tree tops, close ups of furniture, shots at the side of a perfectly lovely barn—pictures that wouldn't sell much of anything but the material consumed in getting them ready for distribution. The publicity department is expected to do amazing work with an amazingly imperfect equipment of camera-work.

Here we have a picture showing a strip of forest. In the foreground is an extra man playing with a dog while the star peeks out from behind a huge redwood tree, only the top of her head and one eye showing in the picture. Next comes to hand a set of parlor furniture, photographed in sumptuous surroundings and not a human being visible to the naked eye.

Star and leading man are pictured in the grip of photoplay love. The man is posed with his back to the observer with the star's forearms showing as they twine themselves around his neck. See the barn-yard with setting hen occupying the immediate foreground while the farmer leans over the gate with his back toward the camera!

When the publicist is unable to "land" this sort of stuff in print, who is to blame? Is it the director, the producer or the publicist?

The answer is: Editors are eager to print pictures of pictures that picture something about the pictures.

Figured Out to a Niceity.

"It is not the Tired, but the Retired business man who makes the theatrical business boom," says Olive Thomas. Miss Thomas ought to know. She used to be a star in the Ziegfeld Follies constellation.

Olive says the average New York business man, when he reaches the state of affluence which permits his associating with the stage beauties, only has to work about two or three hours a day, and most of the time he never goes near his office. The young fellows who do all the work and are compelled to be at the desk from nine to five are the real tired business men and can't afford the Follies.

C. E. Millard, the Rialto-Rivoli poster artist, is sometimes expensively absent minded. The other day he went up to his studio with his smoked glasses on and under the impression it was night, burned his arc lights all day.

First Aid to Those Who Must Have Stimulant After July 1.

IT was Mark Twain who said "everybody is complaining about the weather, but nobody does anything about it." There is a similar condition of affairs in our set—the drouth is approaching and Elihu Root is the only man earning his money. Someone with a quick thinker has said Elihu is only fighting for root beer, anyhow. But to proceed with the purpose of this space-killing here, from the New York World, we reproduce

"The Setting Hen":

"Take a tin kettle, drop in a handful of corn meal, oatmeal or rye meal, put in a lump of yeast and a little sugar, fill the kettle with hot water, let it simmer for a couple of hours, then stand it off to ferment for a day or two, and there you are.

"Three drinks of it will last you all of one day and most of the next. Total expense about 10 cents a quart. If you like an extra 'kick' put the 'Hen' through a simple distilling process and you'll have nothing to complain of and need not fear a revenue raider."

The Result of Propinquity.

So many reels of Charley Chaplins have passed under Terry Ramsaye's editorial eye that the "slap-stick" method of creating publicity has possessed him. Just look-a here:

"Warrant Officer Shepherd went to the Rialto the other night and stuck around a lot longer than he intended. It seems that a bottle of new-fangled cement came open in his pocket and made him remain with his seat after the close of the show until Charles Ries, the house manager, came to the rescue."

Frank Talk by Exhibitors

THE discussion by exhibitors of the letter of William Sievers printed in the issue of March 22 is continued in this number. The unanimity of these commentators in the belief that motion picture advertising should be confined to those papers devoted solely to the industry is worth noting. Interest to the discussion is lent this week by the letter of I. H. Ruben of Minneapolis and St. Paul, who strongly upholds the position of the First National in restricting its advertising to five mediums. Mr. Ruben's report of his conversation with Mr. Zukor on the subject of national advertising by producers will be found entertaining. The exhibitor is strong for the expenditure of money "fifty-fifty" by producers and showmen.

One of the men who at the time Mr. Ruben referred to was numbered among Mr. Zukor's advisers on advertising problems said to this writer that the scheme of half and half by the two factors would not work out. He went further and said if the producers should guarantee to match for exploitation purposes every dollar the exhibitors would spend in their localities that immediately the exhibitors would reduce their appropriation. The result would be, he pointed out, that less advertising would be done. By employing mediums independently of the exhibitor it was Mr. Zukor's belief a much larger public would be reached.

Vice-President Walter E. Greene of Famous Players-Lasky issues a statement this week on his company's work in national advertising that finely fits into the discussion. It will be found at the end of the letters from exhibitors. Mr. Greene points out that it is not the aim of his company in this large expenditure of money solely to push his concern's brands. Pressure is laid on the necessity for better pictures. He says it is the intention to carry the propaganda for better pictures directly to the firesides of the American public.

While the matter of national advertising had no place in the beginning of the discussion it is one of the phases of the forum that has cropped up continually, many showmen reverting to it, as did Mr. Ruben. It is a live topic. We print Mr. Greene's statement in full. That the company continues to spend large sums in independent exploitation of its productions is the best of evidence it believes this policy to be wise.

Next week the World will print the remaining letters from exhibitors. Much space is being devoted to the discussion, but we believe the subject is worthy of extended treatment. We are convinced producers and showmen alike are concerned.

The Woman Behind the Showman

THE impressions of Mrs. Oliver A. Kihchel on the question of Sunday opening, which will be found on another page of this issue, are well worth a careful reading. The side partner of the proprietor of the Eagle Theatre of Jeannette writes of the situation in Pennsylvania, but the application is general, it may refer to conditions in any state. The letter has interest for reason other than that of intrinsic merit.

Mrs. Kihchel is representative of a large clan in the motion picture busness. She is a fine type of the woman behind the man behind the screen; the woman who is not content with taking a passive interest in the matters affecting her husband's theatre or who limits her activities to advising him. She is one of those who dig in and work—and win. Among picture men she is legion. She may be unhonored and unsung—at large—but not so in her own community. There she is known to the clientele of the theatre, and when outside the walls of the house in which she is most interested she sees a production she can pretty closely estimate how that picture will be judged by the patrons of The theatre.

Here's to the wife of the proprietor of the Eagle—and to the earnest helpmates of his brother showmen everywhere!

Northwest Keeping Up Good Work

AND now the Northwest Film Board of Trade, with headquarters in Seattle, adds to its belt the scalp of Butte, Montana. On March 21 the Montana branch of the board was organized in Butte with a hundred per cent. representation of exhibitors, branch managers and salesmen. The great Northwest is pointing the way to the rest of the country, as that same Northwest has a habit of doing. If you don't believe it just recall the recent performance of one Ole Hansen, who took by the tail and a horn and bowled over and out a terrible animal that in the remainder of the country was causing many good people to lose sleep. In Seattle after Hansen got through with the I. W. W. the only persons suffering from insomnia were the particular objects of his untender solicitude. Yes, the Northwest has a habit of doing things right.

The Expected Has Happened

THERE is no sound reason why motion picture showmen should be overgenerous with their money—that is, when it comes to making presents to highwaymen. George W. Curtis, proprietor of the Doric, Kansas City, was relieved recently of $900 as he stepped from a taxicab and attempted to enter his home. Nine hundred dollars is too much money to hand out in any such fashion. Those exhibitors who have made a practice of doing as Mr. Curtis did may look upon his mishap in the light of a warning. It is more difficult to go through the walls of a safe than through the pockets of an unarmed pedestrian.

When Old Stories Are New

IT was about five years ago that the motion picture industry saw the beginning, the real beginning, of the adaptation of books and plays to the purposes of the screen. In nearly all cases the rights for these stories were sold for five years. In those days the prices were, speaking with a knowledge of present-day demands of authors, reminiscent of the proverbial song. The screen rights for one book upon which was based a production famous the world over as a great success, one of the largest of a popular actress, cost less than five years ago $250. What this same book again will sell for it is hard to hazard a guess. To say that it might be ten times the original amount would be absurd. An offer in the market of one hundred times the original sum undoubtedly would bring eager buyers.

We have the record of the recent payment of $60,000 for "Everywoman," some of the selling details of which were revealed by three of the bidders at the recent complimentary dinner to William A. Brady.

The story is coming into its own. The growing size of the purchase checks is revelatory of the increasing importance of the business of making and showing motion pictures. Incidentally the owners of the screen rights to these books and plays upon which the first five-year periods now are expiring undoubtedly are patting themselves on the back in the belief they are the possessors of valuable properties.

The Exhibitor Pays the Tax

ON another page will be found an explanation of the terms of the 5 per cent. rental tax which becomes effective May 1. This is the substitution for the reel tax which for so long was a bone of contention between exhibitors and exchanges. It seems the exhibitor will pay the tax, in the viewpoint of the Washington authorities as reflected in the letter sent by our correspondent.

According to the reading of the law if an exhibitor has prior to December 6 of last year entered into a contract which does not permit the adding of the whole of the tax then he shall pay so much of the tax as is not permitted to be added to the contract price. As is not unusual in the drafting of statutes the legislator takes no pains to make clear what he is attempting to say, conceding for the sake of argument that he is competent to make clear what he is attempting to say.

New International Organization

THE severing of relations by Benjamin P. Schulberg with the United Artists uncovers the existence of a large international organization heavily financed and managed by expert film men. No particulars of the new affiliation are announced, but it is a fair assumption the company will carry forward the exploitation of American pictures abroad and also the bringing to this country of subjects made with the American viewpoint in mind; in other words, the broadening of the field of the American picture as an institution. The good wishes of the industry will follow Mr. Schulberg.

Recreation League President Talks

WE are hearing quite a lot these days about the American Recreation League, with headquarters in the national capital. At the recent banquet of the Film Exchange Managers Association of that city Richard W. Austin, president of the league, talked of the value of the screen in combating discontent. He said the substitute for the vanishing saloons was the motion picture.

"I think the people who patronize motion picture theatres get more for their money than for like amounts spent for anything else in the way of amusements," he declared. He insisted the ministers of the country are making a mistake in fighting the showing of clean, healthy, wholesome motion pictures on the Sabbath. The industry is glad to be introduced to Mr. Austin. More than that, it wishes him well in his work of educating that small part of the public which still needs to be "shown" that the screen is an influence for good, on the Sabbath as well as on any other day.

The Three Stages of the Reviewer

EXPERIENCE has taught that both the critics of the daily press and the moving picture reviewers go through three stages before they are of any real worth to the readers of the publications for whom they cover pages of good print paper with opinions that are intended to be helpful and comprehensive. During the first stage they generally approach their task with fear and trembling. They have a vague understanding of the vast amount they don't know about the art they are attempting and take refuge in overpraising every play or picture they are sent to write up.

Then comes the second stage. It follows a faltering attempt to say a few unpleasant things about the play or picture they have been sent to criticise. Finding how much easier it is to find fault than to praise they go to the other extreme and proceed to shoot arrows of scorn into the unfortunate object of attack. Then comes the last stage, which may be early or late in arriving.

Realizing that a personal view of the matter is of no interest to the public and that there are definite laws which govern their profession, they take stock of themselves and do their best to give the public a square deal. At least, most of them do. A few never get past the second stage.

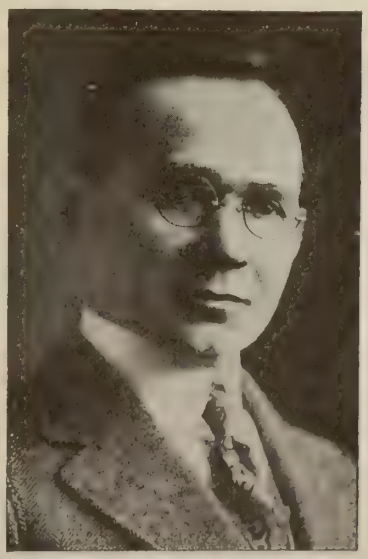
Thompson Worked a Year on New Processing Machine

FRED B. THOMPSON, who perfected the new Spoor-Thompson automatic processing machine for the development and printing of films, at the instigation of George K. Spoor, president of Essanay, is not only an inventor, but an expert engineer and chemist. Knowledge of both was necessary in working out this process, as the work involved not only the construction of the machines, which are forty feet in length and weigh fifteen tons each, but a thorough knowledge of the action of chemicals on films.



Fred B. Thompson.

Among Mr. Thompson's inventions is a water-proofing process on films. He was also a pioneer in color photography and the three color process in photo-engraving.

He spent more than a year in experimental work on the Spoor-Thompson process before he had a practical working machine.

These machines are now turning out millions of feet of film of uniform, high grade quality, film that is evenly processed in 1,000 foot length.

BEN SCHULBERG LEAVES UNITED ARTISTS

Resigns as Assistant General Manager to Take Up Important Work with Worldwide Distributors

BENJAMIN P. SCHULBERG, who was recently appointed Assistant General Manager of the United Artists Distributing Corporation in conjunction with Hiram Abrams' appointment as General Manager of that stellar organization, has resigned from that office in order to dovetail his time and attention to a new international film organization, as yet unnamed, which will operate distributing centres throughout the entire world, outside of the United States and Canada.

The announcement would be a greater surprise to the trade than it is were it not accompanied by a statement from Hiram Abrams, which indicates that he has released Mr. Schulberg from the obligation of remaining with the United Artists, and that there is as cordial and friendly a relationship between these two old-time business associates as ever existed. Both emphasize that the change in Mr. Schulberg's plans is actuated only by his securing "a greater personal opportunity" through the new international association.

Abrams Expresses Regrets.

Mr. Abrams in commenting upon the severance of official relations with Mr. Schulberg, said: "In the years that Mr. Schulberg's and my business life has been so closely allied, I have always found him intensely devoted to the interests he was serving, always faithful to the task in hand and always eagerly seeking to find or create the next step by which he might legitimately advance himself or the organization with which he was identified. I am gratified that such an opportunity has again come to him, and in regretting his departure I also rejoice with him in the chance he now has for greater personal service to the industry and the particular interests with which he has become associated."

Schulberg Outlines New Affiliation.

"It would take much, as the entire trade will know, to cause me to sever my relations with the United Artists, and Mr. Abrams in particular, after the long, pleasant, and harmonious relationship we have enjoyed for so many years, but the opportunity which has come to me to become identified with the largest European financial interests which have ever been invested in the motion picture industry and its correlated privilage of being of service to the entire motion picture industry both here and abroad are so attractive as to command my interest and dictate the course I am now pursuing," said Mr. Schulberg.

"These interests are reinforced by a strong organization composing the most expert film men in Europe, and their financial strength and long experience in the industry cannot but accomplish tremendous results and create a potent factor for good to film interests on both sides of the Atlantic.

"I would appreciate it if it were understood that the primary motive for my action at this time is the larger personal scope the new enterprise can afford my efforts."

Mr. Schulberg is making his temporary office at the Fitzgerald Building, where he will organize the American link of this international film chain.

Hodes Succeeds Cohn as Screen Magazine Editor

THE New Screen Magazine being issued weekly by Universal has a new editor. Following the resignation of Jack Cohn, who created the magazine, Universal has announced the appointment of Hal Hodes to succeed Mr. Cohn as editor of the weekly.

Mr. Hodes is well qualified to edit and exploit the weekly issue because of his long picture experience. Mr. Hodes began his film work with Vitagraph in 1904 and following several years with that company joined the navy to cruise around the world with Admiral Evans' fleet. Upon his return he became publicity and advertising man for Kalem and later joined Universal in a sales promotional capacity. When Jewel productions were first released and put in charge of an individual organization, H. M. Berman and Hal Hodes were selected to guide the destinies of the features. After sixteen months handling Jewels, Mr. Berman was appointed general manager of Universal exchanges and Mr. Hodes was elected his first lieutenant. He has given up his exchange duties to accept the position as head of the New Screen Magazine department.

Mrs. McPherson Aids in Campaign.

Mrs. McPherson, wife of the Burgess of Beaver Falls, Pa., who is chairman of the campaign committee on Sunday opening in Beaver County, Pa., is helping out Mr. McPherson wonderfully in getting the petition cards and slides distributed to the various theatres in the county. Mrs. McPherson uses her auto, and is speeding up the work in a masterly way.

Rothacker Gets Government Contract.

The Rothacker company has recently been awarded the exclusive printing and laboratory contract of the Bureau of Mines of the Department of the Interior, and is now engaged in the printing of several hundred thousand feet of educational subjects which the bureau will use in its forthcoming campaign in connection with safety methods.

Ben Wilson Re-engaged by Universal.

Ben Wilson, who with Neva Gerber, was featured in a number of Universal pictures, has been re-engaged by Universal and will begin work in comedy productions. Mr. Wilson prepared the script for his first comedy production which bears the tentative title "Billy's Hat," and Neva Gerber is to play opposite him in his new subjects.

By A. H. GIEBLER

TWO NEW THEATRES FOR LOS ANGELES

T. L. Tally and D. J. and Sid Grauman Will Build $700,000 Picture Houses of 3,000 Seats

TWO new theatre buildings, each to cost approximately $700,000 will be constructed during the summer in the downtown section of Los Angeles. One of these buildings will be put up by T. L. Tally, and the other by D. J. and Sid Grauman. The plans and contracts are being prepared for these structures, and both will be devoted to high class motion pictures.

The new Grauman building will be a theatre and nothing else, with a seating capacity of at least 3,000. Tally's house will seat about the same number of patrons, but will have two or four store rooms in addition to the theatre.

Consider Locations for Theatres.

Two sites are under consideration for each theatre. The Graumans are considering a location at Sixth and Hill streets, upon which a church stands at present, and another location opposite the Superba Theatre, on Broadway. Tally's new building will be located either at Eighth and Broadway, where the Garrick now stands, or on the site of the present Tally's Broadway Theatre. The construction of larger theatres have been made necessary, according to these exhibitors, because of lack of seating capacity in their present houses.

Another theatre that will be completed during the summer is the new Pantages Theatre, now under way at the corner of Seventh and Hill streets. This house will have a seating capacity of more than 2,000, and will be part of a twelve story office building that will cost in the neighborhood of $1,000,000. Work will soon begin.

Another Picture Plant Building in Hollywood

THE Hollywood Studios, Incorporated, a company composed of C. E. Toberman, President; C. W. Bradford, Vice-President and Treasurer, and John Jasper, General Manager, have begun the erection of a community studio on Santa Monica boulevard and Seward street in Hollywood. John Jasper, who superintended the erection of the Chaplin studios and acted as General Manager of the Chaplin plant until a few months ago, is in charge of the construction of the studios which are built according to his own plans.

The new plant will contain four complete studios, each with a stage of seventy by one hundred and twenty feet. The stages will be built entirely of steel and glass and absolutely fireproof. By the aid of an ingenious plan worked out by Mr. Jasper, each stage or any part of it can be darkened in a very few moments. Attached to each stage will be administration offices, dressing rooms, property rooms and film cutting and editing departments, thus making each studio a separate and complete unit.

Individual film vaults for companies operating at the plant will also be provided and as soon as the four studios are erected and in operation a commercial laboratory, to take care of printing and developing the product of the studio as well as outside work, will be erected.

Mr. Jasper says that he plans to make the plant one of the show places of the country. The main buildings, which will be in the Spanish style of architecture, will face Santa Monica boulevard. The stages and other buildings will be set farther back on the fifteen acre plot of ground owned by the corporation, and the spaces between the buildings will be treated by landscape gardening.

John Jasper, the promoter of the new plant, says that he has wanted to erect a studio of this kind for a long time and that he is sure that the experience which he gained in building the Chaplin plant, added to his knowledge gained by an intensive study of studio needs, will enable him to produce a plant that will be the last word in efficiency and convenience. Before his connection with Chaplin, Mr. Jasper was General Manager for the David Horsley enterprises, and Manager of the Lone Star studios.

West Coast "Lambs" in Film.

An impressive array of famous actors gathered at the Lasky studio on Sunday, March 23, to take part in a unique film that will be shown at the annual Gambol held by members of the Lambs' Club in New York. Sixty members of the Lambs have been discovered in the West Coast film colony, and William Conklin undertook to line them up at Lasky's so that each could appear in the film which Hugh Ford planned and directed for the entertainment of fellow members in the home club.

The large majority of the members who took part in the picture are engaged in motion picture work, but the gathering also included a strong representation of stage artists, with a few lay members from other walks of life. The Lambs who appeared in the film were:

Douglas Fairbanks, Dustin and William Farnum, Lewis S. Stone, William S. Hart, William Russell, William H. Crane, William Desmond, Hale Hamilton, Frank Campeau, Bert Lytell, Antonio Moreno, Thomas Meighan, James Neill, Milton Sills, Bayard Veiller, H. B. Hayes Hunter, Hardee Kirkland, Joseph Kilgour, Henry Kolker, Emmett King, Louis Willard, Marshall Neilan, Walter Percival, Albert Parker, James Quirk, Ben Wilson, Wallace Worsley, Walter Williams, William Wrigley, Jr., and Fred J. Zimmerman.

Loan Film Sent East.

When Oscar Price, assistant director-general of railroads, left Los Angeles for Washington, he carried with him a sample print of Douglas Fairbanks' Victory Loan propaganda picture, "Knocking Knockers." This is the only film made for the Government for the coming loan, and Mr. Price will deliver the print to Secretary of the Treasury Glass. Mr. Price spent several days in Los Angeles conferring with his former chief, William G. McAdoo, and with Douglas Fairbanks, D. W. Griffith, Mary Pickford and Charles Chaplin. On April 1, when his connection with the Government will cease, Mr. Price will open the New York office of the United Artists Distributing Co., of which he is president, and Mr. McAdoo is general counsel. Among the projects planned by Mr. McAdoo and Mr. Price for the "Big Four" is the opening of theatres in London and Paris for the exhibition of the Griffith-Fairbanks-Chaplin-Pickford films.

Mitchell Lewis in New Production.

Having begun production on another story of the rugged type, Mitchell Lewis left for location in the high Sierras last week, where he and his company will battle with the elements—providing the elements are in fighting humor—while making all the scenes with mountainous background and atmosphere needed for the new play. The story, which is an original play for the screen by Robert North Bradbury and Frank Howard Clark, is called "The Gulf Between." Norval MacGregor will again direct, and important roles will be played by Jack Richardson and Murdock McQuarrie.

James Young to Wed.

An announcement was made public last week to the effect that James Young, former husband of Clara Kimball Young, and Clara Whipple, film star and photoplay author, are to be married as soon as Young obtains his final decree of divorce from Miss Young. A suit for divorce, claiming desertion, was filed by Young in June, 1917, and on March 25 of last year, an interlocutory decree was granted. The final decree is due within a few days. The marriage will not take place until some time in April, when the couple will build themselves a home among the Hollywood foothills.

Miss Whipple is the daughter of Mrs. J. H. Bailey Whipple, and is a descendant of the famous Whipple family of Massachusetts which signed the Declaration of Independence and fought in the Revolution.

Arizona Film Law Vetoed.

A wire from Governor Campbell, of Arizona, received by A. P. N. Narlian, general counsel for the Southern California Film Board of Trade, states that the Governor has vetoed the Motion Picture bill that had been passed by the Arizona Legislature on March 13, which called for the establishment of exchanges in Arizona, and the filing of a fee with the state treasurer every time a film was released to an exhibitor. This expenditure, according to the Los Angeles film men, would have been too great for both the distributors and the exhibitors, and would have resulted in the closing of practically every theatre in Arizona.

Film Exporter Visits Studios.

Reginald Warde, New York exporter of American made films, who handles the output of Christie productions for almost the entire world outside of the United States and Canada, is in Los Angeles, visiting the Christie and other film plants.

Appointments by United Artists.

W. S. Rand, until recently western division manager of the General Film Co., has been appointed personal representative of Douglas Fairbanks, one of the "Big Four" artists, by Oscar A. Price, president of the United Artists Corporation. Coincident with Mr. Rand's appointment was the engagement of Louis Thompson, formerly with the Famous Players-Lasky company, as Mary Pickford's business representative. These men will establish their headquarters in the New York offices of the United Artists Corp., in the early part of April, and will leave Los Angeles for the East immediately.

Murray Does Detective Stunt.

Charlie Murray, whose house was broken into on March 15 and robbed of sundry suits of clothes and silk shirts, was walking down Spring street one day last week when he spied one of his stolen suits in a cleaner's window. He went in and made inquiries about the person who had brought the suit to be cleaned, with the result that one Don I. Kelly was arrested and put into the city jail while investigations were being made as to Kelly's record by city detectives. Murray recovered some of the clothing that was taken from his house, but he claims that he is still short a few jazz shirts.

Bill Desmond Married.

William Desmond, motion picture star, and for years a popular matinee idol of Los Angeles, was married at Pasadena on March 22 at the home of Mr. and Mrs. James W. Neill, to Mary MacIvor, his former leading lady and later his private secretary.

The ceremony was performed by Dr. Leslie E. Learned, rector of All Saints Episcopal Church, and the bride was given away by Mr. Neill. Jesse D. Hampton, head of the film company for which Desmond is making pictures, was best man. "Smiling" Bill Parsons, with whom the bride has played in Capitol Comedies, and his wife, Billie Rhodes, were among the guests.

Miss MacIvor, whose real name is Mary McKeever, is the daughter of Mrs. B. McKeever, of Hollywood. She met Desmond at the Triangle studio a short time after his first wife, Gertrude Lanson, died. The couple had intended to spend their honeymoon in New York, but on account of pressing work to be done at the Hampton studio in a production that has been begun, they went to Santa Barbara instead.

Lois Weber's Arm.

Lois Weber, famous film director, who had her arm broken several months ago by a fall on a slippery floor while in a department store, is soon to have full use of her arm again, according to the surgeon who performed an operation on the arm last week. Miss Weber found, after a number of X-ray photographs had been taken of the injured member, that there was a splinter in the cartilage of the elbow joint. When the cast was removed shortly after the accident it was found that part of the fractured bone had not knit into the right position. In the operation that has just been performed the surgeons removed three splinters. The operation was declared successful. Upon her discharge from the hospital Miss Weber plans to make a trip around the world with her husband, Phillips Smalley.

The Brunton Commissary.

A new building that is being given the finishing touches at the Brunton plant will house a modern eating plant—a combination restaurant and cafeteria that will cater to every kind of taste and purse on the Brunton lot. The most modern equipment for kitchens and pantries will be a feature of the restaurant

The principal players include E. K. Lincoln, Edward Coxen, Margery Wilson, Eileen Percy, W. Lawson Butt, Frank Lanning, Walter Long, W. H. Bainbridge, Russell Simpson and Arthur Morrison. Two cameras, operated by Abraham Scholtz and A. L. Todd, will be used for shooting the exterior scenes.

Famous Story for Jack Pickford.

Mrs. Charlotte Pickford, who is manager for her son Jack, has just purchased the film rights to "The Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come," which will be made as a super-feature as soon as Jack has finished his contract of three pictures for the First National Exhibitors. The story was one of the best sellers of ten years ago, and still retains its hold on readers of the present day.

Exhibitor to Become Producer.

Harry Leonhardt, manager of the California Theatre, is head of the new Poppy Comedy Company, which will produce one-reel comedies starring Mack Swain.

Temporary Demand for War Films Is Lessened

FILM exchange managers are complaining that there is no demand in San Francisco or vicinity for war films or productions with even a flavoring of war. Some who have a number of these pictures on their shelves, go further and declare that there is a boycott on the part of exhibitors against productions of this class, at the same time expressing the belief that the general public is not opposed to war films. Exhibitors advise that these charges are wild and that they are, as always, attempting to offer the class of entertainment most in demand, pointing out the fact that many war films have been shown here during the past three months.

That the market in this territory is not entirely closed to war films is indicated by the report of Jack Frazier, who recently returned from a trip through Nevada in the interests of the All Star Features Distributors. He found wonderful demand there for anything savoring of war and secured so many bookings on "The Kaiser's Finish" that another print of this production could be used to advantage by the local office, if it were available. Many bookings were also secured on the "Surrender of the German Fleet," while official Government films were also in demand.

Conditions in Nevada were found to be improving rapidly, particularly in the mining districts, where business has been quiet for a long time. One of the interesting discoveries made by Mr. Frazier on this trip was the finding of a town where there has not been a single case of influenza to date, with no quarantine, or any interference with the operation of the theatre. This fortunate place is Fallon, Nev.

RENTAL TAX FALLS ON THE EXHIBITOR

Will Continue to Pay Reel Excise Under New Law in Effect May 1 Unless Exchange Provides for Payment

A MISTAKEN idea prevails in the minds of many exhibitors that the rental tax, which becomes effective May 1 and which supersedes the present reel tax, will relieve them from the payment of money which they have, for the past year, been giving up willingly to the exchanges and producers under the revenue law.

This is by no means the case, however. Instead, the exhibitor will continue to pay the tax—for the ultimate consumer always does.

That section of the revenue law in which this tax appears is phrased in a manner which will prove somewhat vague to the average exhibitor. It provides that "on and after May 1, 1919, any person engaged in the business of leasing or licensing for exhibition positive motion picture films containing pictures ready for projection shall pay monthly an excise tax in respect to carrying on such business equal to 5 per centum of the total rentals earned from each such lease or license during the preceding month."

The Exhibitor Pays.

From the foregoing it would appear as though the exchange was to pay the tax, yet the following, taken from the same paragraph, makes it clear that the exhibitor is the "goat," for it provides that "if any such person (exchange) has, prior to December 6, 1918, made a bona fide contract with any person for the lease of licensing, after the tax imposed by this section takes effect, of such a film for exhibition for profit, and if such contract does not permit the adding of the whole of the tax imposed by this section to the amount to be paid under such contract, then the lessee or licensee (exhibitor) shall, in lieu of the lessor or licensor (exchange), pay so much of such tax as is not permitted to be added to the contract price."

In other words, if an exhibitor has a running contract for films, in which no provision is made for payment of the rental tax, this law makes it incumbent upon him to pay such tax anyhow.

While the law does not state specifically that the exhibitor must pay the tax under any contracts for films which he may make in the future, it is probable that the exchanges and producers will claim that the clause providing for payment by him under contracts previously made constitutes a precedent for such payment under future contracts.

The exhibitor should not delude himself that he is going to escape the tax. He is only shifting the burden from one arm to the other.

Salt Lake Managers Want Revenue Collector Nearer

SALT LAKE theatre managers were much surprised to receive notice from the office of the United States internal revenue collector at Helena, that they would be penalized five per cent. for failure to remit their January, 1919, war tax within the thirty day limit. Since the returned certified checks were in their possession, it was realized that a mistake had been made and now they are seeking to find out the reason.

Apparently through the rush of business the payment had not been entered on the Government records at the time of inspection and so it appeared that the managers had failed to remit the tax. The managers are wondering if this situation will again occur and the incident has resulted in a renewed movement to return the revenue office for this district to Salt Lake City, from which it was taken several years ago.

A little agitation along this line was started when it was moved, but since that time it has grown vastly in importance, and in view of the situation arising out of the war tax collection, the theatre men are receiving the support of other business men in their efforts to bring the office back to Salt Lake.

To Make Commercial Travelogue of Cuba

AN unusual enterprise is being undertaken by Arthur Liebes of New York, Latin-American trade expert in which the motion picture plays a modern part. Mr. Liebes left New York March 29 for Cuba upon a special trade investigation, carrying with him a technical director and two cameramen from the Eastern Motion Picture Company of New York, to take motion pictures of exclusive professional interest to American manufacturers and merchants. Mr. Liebes' trip is being made with the co-operation of the great Latin-American newspaper, El Mundo, of Havana, which has recognized the value of his idea.

The motion picture record of his visit will consist of action films of factories, stores, plantations, scenery, merchandise, raw products and manufactured goods, shipping and railroad facilities, and packing and sales methods.

Fred Schaefer of the Eastern Motion Picture Company announces that the crew accompanying Mr. Liebes consists of A. B. Heath, director, W. Howard Greene, cameraman and Otto H. Schaefer cameraman. A Pathe camera, a Bell & Howell camera, and a view camera will be used.

Semon Comedy at the Rialto.

Vitagraph's first Larry Semon Comedy, "Well, I'll Be ——!" gets its initial Broadway showing at the Rialto Theatre during the week of April 6. The comedy is a burlesque western thriller and Larry Semon plays the part of the timid sheriff of Beer Bottle Bend. Beer Bottle Bend is one of those places in which nobody is afraid of a sheriff and Larry's escapades in trying to assert his authority furnish two reels of uproarious comedy.

Christie on Way to New York.

Charles H. Christie has left Los Angeles for New York on a flying trip to the leading exchanges which have been handling Christie Comedies and which will now distribute the recently announced two reel Specials. He will be accompanied by Reginald Warde, foreign distributor of Christie Comedies, who has been in Los Angeles conferring with the Christies with regard to increased distribution in the world market.

HANDLES CENSORSHIP WITHOUT GLOVES

Chicago Commission at Stormy Meeting on March 28 Hears Facts Ably Stated by N. A. M. P. I. Committe

THE longest as well as the stormiest session yet held by the Chicago Censorship Commission, took place Friday, March 28. This was due to participation in the proceedings by William A. Brady, president; Walter E. Irwin, chairman of the executive committee, and Paul H. Cromelin, a director of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry.

These men had come on specially for the occasion and they certainly showed Chairman Hurley and other members of the commission that censorship of pictures was not so one-sided as they had imagined. The meeting lasted from 3 o'clock in the afternoon until 8 in the evening.

Censors Start from Wrong Angles.

Mr. Irwin was the principal speaker against censorship. He said in part: "When you seek to censor every foot of motion picture made, you are starting from the wrong angle. Don't put the onus of censorship on all pictures in order to get the occasional few bad ones.

"We believe the state has the power to punish any man who puts an indecent, immoral picture on the market. Punish him severely. Fine him enough to throw his business into bankruptcy. Send him to jail. We will help you with all the power and force at our command.

"This would be constructive action. Censorship, from out viewpoint, is destructive. We believe it leads to graft, corruption, politics, greed, hatred, revenge, religious and social hatred and 1,000 other evils.

"The motion picture should have the same liberty as the press has. Censorship is against the principles for which the people suffered during medieval days, against the principle for which the colonial fathers came over here and founded this country, against the principle for which our boys on the western front have died.

"A bad scene removed from a picture and displayed by itself is simply a bearing of false witness, a fraudulent evidence. No court will receive in evidence a sentence or a paragraph of an article that is, of course, modified by the article. No scene stands independently, they are put in for contrast, and to show both right and wrong.

N. A. M. P. I. Will Aid Prosecutions.

"My solution is thoroughly consistent with Americanism. Let this committee attend to its own city, see that its own laws are enforced. Then we won't be having our property taken away without due process of law; we won't be subjected to this censorship prior to publication, which has no legal justification. Let us have our day in court."

At this point Mr. Irwin was asked by an alderman present if he would rather have such a process, with its attendant expenses of court trial, than censorship, and Mr. Irwin shouted back:

"Yes, sir; that's American. I have no more right to be a censor than you have or the members upstairs. I do, however, favor a law prohibiting children under 16 from attending the theatres unless they have an adult with them."

Mr. Brady near the close of his address said: "Now help us. Co-operate with us. Would you like to try an experiment with us? Put the motion picture on its word for one year in Chicago, and I will come out here and aid you in the prosecution of any producer or theatre owner producing or displaying an unclean or improper picture.

"The industry proposes to use this power of the screen which has been so widely recognized the country over during these years of war itself. The producers propose to go into politics themselves."

Has Refused Films Passed by Board.

"Sam Katz, one of the owners of the Riviera and Central Park theatres, which are noted for their well selected and finely presented picture programs, during the meeting made the following plea for exhibitors:

"The exhibitors are all in one class. My houses are no different from the others. I have refused to show many pictures passed by the Chicago Board because they wouldn't suit my patrons. Let the exhibitors be their own censors."

Doings of F. I. L. M. Association.

The F. I. L. M. Association of this city met Thursday, March 20, when committees on grievances, legislation, credits, efficiency and building were appointed. On Friday afternoon, March 21, a meeting of the board of directors was held in the office of Manager Fred C. Aiken, of Select, at which the rules

S. S. Hutchinson Returns from European Trip

SAMUEL S. HUTCHINSON, president of the American Film Company, Inc., returned to Chicago, March 24, after spending nearly three months abroad. He left America December 21, arrived in London December 30, and, excepting a single week spent in Paris, was busily engaged at his London offices. He sailed for home March 8, landing at Halifax March 17, and thence to New York by rail.

While abroad he inspected the "Flying A" laboratories in Croydon, London, and also closed contracts for the distribution of the American product in a bigger and better way than it has yet been handled. American pictures are familiarly known as "Flying A" productions in the British Isles and Mr. Hutchinson says he was delighted to find them in high favor wherever he went, and that he received many testimonials as to their worth as box office attractions.

In the British Isles "Flying A" pictures will henceforth be distributed by H. W. Thompson, of Leeds, one of England's foremost film distributors, and a man whose interests reach into every nook and corner of the country. As formerly, all the printing and developing will be handled at the "Flying A" laboratories in Croydon, but the films are placed on a royalty basis with Mr. Thompson for distribution to exhibitors. Mr. Thompson is held in high esteem by exhibitors, and was a prominent member of the English film committee which co-operated with the government all through the war.

Olsen & Co. Get Scandinavia.

Mr. Hutchinson also closed a contract with John Olsen & Co., of Copenhagen, Denmark, for the distribution of "Flying A" pictures in Scandinavia and Finland. This concern is known to its customers as one of the foremost distributors in the territory covered by it, and it stands equally high with the governments of the allied nations, who imposed many restrictions on certain film organizations which they deemed unworthy of trust. "Flying A" pictures have been shown for years in the Scandinavian countries, but Mr. Hutchinson believes that a larger volume of business will be done under the new arrangement.

Several contracts were entered into with "Cinematograph Harry," of Paris, for the distribution of "Flying A" pictures in France, Switzerland, Holland, Belgium, Greece and Egypt. The countries just named are all included in one contract, while other distinctly separate contracts with the same firm provide for the handling of the American product in Spain, Portugal and Italy. Additional contracts with the same firm provide for the distribution of American's product in more distant countries.

"I was delighted to find 'Flying A' pictures popular with the exhibitors of Europe and to see them shown in some of the finest theatres on the Continent as well as in England," said Mr. Hutchinson. "For example, I discovered that the London Opera House, the famous theatre erected by Oscar Hammerstein some years ago, is now showing pictures and that among the prominent features advertised were Mary Miles Minter, William Russell and Margarita Fisher subjects, which were released in the United States several months ago, but are now being offered for the first time in Great Britain."

Pictures Are 85 Per Cent. U. S. Made.

On being asked about what percentage of European theatres are at present showing pictures made in the United States, Mr. Hutchinson replied: "I should say that fully 85 per cent. of all the films exhibited abroad are of American manufacture. I am proud to say that our own particular brand is ranked among the best by foreign exhibitors, and I was told frequently that 'Flying A' pictures are popular because the stories have a touch of real heart interest in them, and are interpreted by well balanced casts and photographed with unusual clearness.

"I was told in England and France that our brand name, 'Flying A,' is a household word. You would scarcely wonder at the popularity of pictures made in the United States after seeing the photography in some of the English and French films. These films seem as yet not to be nearly equal to even the mediocre stuff shown on this side."

Mr. Hutchinson informed me that practically all British theatres book on a three-day-run basis, there being two changes weekly. One feature is run on Monday to Wednesday and another Thursday to Saturday inclusive. Very few houses run Sunday shows at present, and all dramatic theatres are closed on Sunday throughout the entire British Isles. The patronage at both dramatic and picture theatres is exceptionally good. Long lines stand patiently in front of the box offices waiting their turn to enter, and the admission prices are considerably higher than in the United States.

Death Comes to London Manager.

Mr. Hutchinson informed me that women are still employed in most of the transportation systems, acting as conductors and collectors on trams, trolleys, subways and busses, and even as porters in the railway stations. He stated that his own offices in London had been managed for several months past by Mrs. W. C. Scott, wife of the manager, who was called to the colors and who was recently furloughed from army service only to be immediately confined to his bed by tuberculosis. Since Mr. Hutchinson sailed from Liverpool he received a cable saying that Mr. Scott had passed away. Mrs. Scott is now the manager of American's London offices.

Hobart Hutchinson On Pershing's Staff.

The week spent in Paris by Mr. Hutchinson was gladdened by the presence of his son, Hobart, who is connected with headquarters regiment and attached to the staff of General Pershing. Hobart has had several thrilling experiences. In one of these he escaped death by a hairsbreadth. He was running his car alone at sixty miles an hour when a six-inch shell exploded just behind the car, blowing the tonneau completely off the body and smashing the windshield to bits, yet he was untouched except by shell shock.

Hobart was the first American driver to enter Metz after the signing of the armistice. He found it extremely difficult to transport his officer passengers, as the Germans had minded the road and blown great holes in it. Some of these were seventy-five feet deep. Mr. Hutchinson is now busy forming new plans for the advancement of American's productions, concerning which announcements will be made later.

Harry Carey Has Reunion With Mother and Brother

HARRY CAREY, who recently visited the city and talked to many thousands of Chicago picture fans, just before leaving had one of the most pleasant surprise experiences of his life. This was the unexpected meeting of the Universal star with his mother and brother, who came on from New York to greet him after a separation of nine years .

Mrs. Carey is the widow of the late Judge Harry P. Carey of New York, in his day one of the leaders of Tammany Hall. The gladness and affection shown at the meeting of mother and son at the reunion are admirably reflected in the accompanying illustration, which was made possible by the foresight of Captain Harry E. Rice, publicity director of Universal's Chicago office, who had a camera man on hand to snap the happy event.

While in Chicago Mr. Carey was a star attraction, being honored by receptions and banquets, and by numerous articles in the city dailies. The role played by him while here must have impressed him as being in strong contrast with those assumed by him as the hero of many of Universal's western thrillers.

"Captured by Cannibals" Going Big at Randolph

"CAPTURED BY CANNIBALS" is having a record run at the Randolph Theatre, at 50 cents a throw. The best people in the city are included among the patrons. The Randolph management is to be complimented on the attractiveness of the lobby display, as very few, if any, people pass on the busy street without investigating the reason for such crowds. The display includes a fine showing of the weapons used by the South Sea islanders, their abbreviated costumes and an interesting list of curios.

Large photographs of the savages in groups and singly, both male and female, are also profusely distributed throughout the lobby space and above the entrance. The numerous friends of Aaron J. Jones are congratulating him on the success of this venture and compliment him on the showman's acumen and vision which enabled him to see the possibilities of the Robertson-Cole pictures.

Palm Theatre, Rockford, Showing to Fine Business

CHARLES LAMB, one of the twelve commissioners on the board of Illinois Exhibitors' Alliance, is taking an active part in the proceedings of that organization. He comes all the way from Rockford to attend the meetings and to book his weekly programs during the same visit. Mr. Lamb owns the Palm Theatre in Rockford, which seats 1,200 people. # ROBERTSON-COLE AND JURY'S AFFILIATE

Each Concern Will Now Circulate the Other's Pictures, Thus Increasing Their Distribution

ROBERTSON-COLE COMPANY'S importance as a factor in motion picture affairs throughout the world, is emphasized by an announcement this week in a cable from London, that a contract has just been effected whereby Jury's Imperial Pictures, Ltd., will distribute in the United Kingdom all the film controlled by Robertson-Cole with the exception of the pictures starring Sessue Hayakawa, J. Warren Kerrigan and Martin Johnson's Cannibals of the South Seas and other individual productions which had been previously disposed of.

The cabled news further states that a number of pretentious specials produced in this country are to be purchased by Robertson-Cole for distribution through Jury's in the British Isles, while Jury's will secure the foremost European cinema attractions for release in the United States by Robertson-Cole. By this arrangement, Robertson-Cole becomes the accredited American representatives of Jury's.

This engagement affiliates two most substantial film organizations in the United States and Great Britain.

Three Super Features Per Year Will Be Made.

In this indenture are included three super-features to be produced each year by Louis Mercanton, the noted French director, the United Kingdom rights of which Jury's control, and Robertson-Cole control the American rights. During the next twelve months Mercanton will stage an elaborate picture in Egypt, a second in France and a third in Italy.

It is one of Sir William's earnest desires to improve the quality of the positive prints. With this end in view, he is now having constructed in London the largest film laboratory in the United Kingdom with a capacity of two million feet per week. In addition to furnishing Jury's photoplays for distribution, Robertson-Cole will also supply the entire equipment for this plant, providing exclusively the Bell & Howell cinemachinery, to which they control all export rights.

Jury's Covers the British Isles.

The distributing organization of Jury's Ltd. has headquarters in all the important centres of the British Isles, and possesses unlimited exploitation possibilities.

The stars whom Jury's obtain under the arrangements with Robertson-Cole have all established their popularity with British Film fans. H. B. Warner, whose father was one of the foremost actors on the English stage, will undoubtedly prove a real favorite on the British screen. Others on the list are Billie Rhodes, Alma Rubens, William Desmond, Bessie Barriscale, and Henry B. Walthall, and productions already successfully launched in this country, such as "What Every Woman Wants" and "The Turn in the Road."

Dan Heenan Is Now a Papa.

Dan Heenan, salesman for the First National Exhibitors' Circuit Exchange in Philadelphia, is receiving congratulations from all quarters. The occasion for all this goodwill from his friends lies in the fact that Dan is now the proud father of a bouncing baby boy. His brother, William, who is the "Big man behind the gun" for the First National in the Quaker City, has presented the new baby with a silver loving cup which seems to tell us that the youngster will bear the name of William.

Drews Entertain Governor.

Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew, co-stars in Paramount-Drew comedies, recently entertained Governor and Mrs. Samuel R. McKelvie, of Nebraska, at a dinner party in the Fontenelle Hotel in Omaha, where the comedians played an engagement in "Keep Her Smiling" at Boyd's Theatre. The Governor and his wife are enthusiastic about the Drews and their comedies produced by the V. B. K. Film Corporation.

CANADIAN CENSOR UP FOR A GRILLING

Claimed in Legislature That He Fails to Suit as Licensor or Film Viewer—Too Many Yankee Films

A SENSATION was given to British Columbia moving picture circles as a result of charges in the Provincial Legislature at Victoria, against Walter Hepburn of Vancouver, chief censor of moving pictures for the Province. It was charged that Mr. Hepburn had shown preference and discrimination in granting operators' licenses to apprentices, that he had taken an objectionable stand toward returned soldiers and that his censoring of pictures was crude.

Wanted Censor's Salary Cut to $40.

A motion was offered in the Provincial House by Major R. J. Burde that the salary of Mr. Hepburn be cut from $2,040 a year to $40 a year and the house debated for more than an hour on the subject. The result has been that the Attorney-General has appointed Captain A. D. MacDonald, a Vancouver lawyer, to make an official investigation into the charges.

Complaint against Mr. Hepburn was first made by the Great War Veterans' Association of Vancouver, and it seems that action was taken after Mr. Hepburn, as a member of the Board of Examiners, had granted a license to an apprentice other than a returned soldier. The allegation is made that the Vancouver Operators' Union had an arrangement with the Soldiers' Civil Re-Establishment Board whereby the union would receive none but discharged soldiers as apprentices.

Too Many American War Pictures.

Major Burde went into the matter of the nature of pictures shown in Canada while speaking to the House and declared that there were altogether too many American war pictures. He declared that he knew from personal contact with American officers in France that it was the people of the United States who had remained at home during the war who had started the "We won the war" stuff and the American soldiers in France, he believed, would be among the last to want to see this doctrine spread throughout Canada by means of the pictures.

Another member, M. A. Macdonald, declared that the situation was largely a result of the lack of initiative on the part of the Canadians themselves.

Doubts Present Censor's Ability.

J. S. Cowper, a member of the legislature, deprecated the present censorship arrangement and severely criticized the present censor. He declared that he could not see how Mr. Hepburn, a former contractor, could be expected to have the grasp of things which would enable him to mould the ideas and morals of the people. Some of the censoring had been ridiculous, he declared. Splendid pictures like "Intolerance" had been "censored to death," many beautiful and educational parts having been cut.

Ticket Seller Becomes Scenarioist.

Until recently Adele Buffington sold tickets at the window of the California Theatre in Los Angeles. Then she sold a story to Thomas H. Ince for $300. A little later Mr. Ince gave her a position on his scenario staff and she gives promise of being heard from as one of the popular scenarioists of the day.

The scenario department of the Ince studios have been enlarged by the addition of several new members lately, owing to the fact that the producer will double his activities during the coming year.

Leah Baird Initiates the New Hodkinson Special

IN the projection rooms of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation Wednesday the executives obtained their first full view of the pretentious Leah Baird-Augustus Thomas special "As a Man Thinks."

The completion of days and nights of toil by Director George Irving and of similar co-operative efforts by Leah Baird, has resulted in Harry Raver presenting to the theatre public a pretentious and a "big" picture. Her perfect poise and clever emotional work was supplemented by that of the picked cast.

Immediately after the screening Miss Baird was surrounded by members of both organizations and received the spontaneous congratulations of the entire gathering.

The new policies of W. W. Hodkinson demanded a super picture that would convince and demonstrate to the exhibiting world his organization's radical departure from program features to "exclusive specials" produced for the exclusive theatres of America. Miss Baird was chosen star to initiate the new Hodkinson superplays.

Gives Style Show with Live Models.

Saxe's Alhambra, Milwaukee, introduced as a special attraction with Dorothy Dalton in "Hard Boiled," week ending March 29, a Spring style show as an especial appeal to women patrons. Living models were used to display the new dress creations, the idea being "hooked up" with local merchants. This is an idea successfully projected with vaudeville bills and, according to Henriette Luscher, the Alhambra's publicity representative, proved attractive.

"Leaving" Pleasant Memories.

Is the task of this leafy view of Alice Joyce in her new Vitagraph, "The Cambric Mask."

Ohio Exhibitors Combat Much Adverse Legislation

THE latest piece of legislation introduced in the Ohio Assembly is an amendment to the building code whereby all theatre buildings to be erected must have steel roofs. It was also reported that there was a plan on foot by opponents of Sunday opening to get a bill prohibiting Sunday movies jammed through the Legislature during the last few days of the session.

This winter has seen more proposed legislation affecting the motion picture industry in Ohio than ever before during a single session of the Assembly.

Other proposed laws are the one to give all municipalities the right to vote local option whether or not they want Sunday movies, and one to put a censorship fee on posters and slides. Another bill increases the salaries of the state film censors.

The Exchange Men's Association of the Cleveland Chamber of Commerce is maintaining a representative in Columbus, the state capital, who is reporting on film activities.

John Tyrone Kelly, who has been in charge of the production department of the American Red Cross Bureau of Pictures, since last August, announced his resignation this week to head a propaganda film producing company which will have offices at 1493 Broadway, New York.

Concerning his new venture Mr. Kelly stated that the first production of the new company will be a five reel feature under the name "Was It Worth While?" The picture is being produced privately in several sections of the United States where Bolshevism has shown its head. Through the feature runs a story which Government investigators have pronounced as typical of much of the unusual propaganda Russian agents have furthered in America.

First National Expands in Philadelphia.

The old headquarters of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit in Philadelphia proved to be entirely too small to handle the increasing business of that concern, and William Heenan, the Quaker City representative, with his force, is now located in more comfortable and spacious quarters at 1339 Vine street. The new offices are equipped in a way that insures comfort for exhibitors who have business to contract and the office of Mr. Heenan is located where they can have easy access to it.

Censor Bill Passes House Committee.

The censor bill before the Missouri Legislature has passed the house committee. Little action, if any, is being taken by the exchanges, but the exhibitors have been sending in protests to their representatives at Jefferson City.

KANE IMPRESSED BY WIDE PROSPERITY

Back from Six Weeks' Trip in South and Middle West Select's General Manager Sees Good Times Coming

ARTHUR S. KANE, general manager of Select Pictures Corporation, has returned from a six weeks' trip through the South and Middle West. He was impressed by the signs of prosperity.

In Kansas City, Frank L. Newman is putting the finishing touches on his new two thousand seat house, the Newman. In Omaha, the Goldberg Brothers, owners of the Sun Theatre, are building a large new picture house alongside of the Rialto, and have projected another across the street. Everywhere Mr. Kane found exhibitors basking in the sunshine of a wonderful season's prosperity. Kicks have disappeared; plans for future aggrandizement have replaced them.

In New Orleans Mr. Kane exchanged views with E. V. Richards, Jr., manager of the Saenger Amusement Company, and J. Eugene Pearce, owner of the Trianon and Tudor theatres. In Houston, he was met by Manager Claude C. Ezell and with him visited Manager MacFarland, of Hulsey's Queen Theatre, William Gerringer of the Isis, and Miss Elizabeth Johnson of the Liberty.

Shore Dinner in Galveston.

In Galveston Mr. Kane and his party were entertained by Manager S. T. McDonald, of the Queen Theatre with an old-fashioned Texas shore dinner. A night trip to San Antonio put Mr. Kane in touch with that highly successful theatre owner, William J. Lytle, owner of the Princess, Empire, and other theatres. In Dallas he made a brief stop and exchanged greetings with Manager Ray Stinnett, of the Jefferson Theatre, and in Kansas City he was entertained by Frank L. Newman, of the Royal and the Regent theatres. Among those whom Mr. Kane met in the city were Sam Harding, of the Liberty Theatre, on Main street; Jack Savage, of the Isis, one of the main theatres in the residence district; William Flynn, of Richards & Flynn, of the 12th Street Theatre; Adolph Eisner, of the Doric, one of the important downtown theatres, and A. F. Baker, of Baker & Grubel, operating a chain of first-run theatres.

Big Reduction in St. Louis.

In St. Louis Mr. Kane was met by Manager J. C. Ragland. Here he was tendered a luncheon at the Elks' Club by the St. Louis Film Board of Trade. Among those present were: George Weeks, E. W. Dustin, Harry Strickland, J. C. Ragland, F. A. Keller, Cecil Mayberry, S. J. Baker, William Seivers, J. Desberger, George McKean, Barney Fegan, Robert Werth, Floyd Lewis, C. Werner, S. Werner, Harry Thayer, Harry Hynes, Jack O'Neill, Horace Talbot, D. C. Boswell, Jack Weill, H. C. Alewe and J. P. Weinbronner.

Exhibitors who visited him in St. Louis were Joe Mogler, president of the Exhibitors' Association; Henry and William Scherrer, of the Mikado Theatre, and Harry Koplar, of Koplar's chain of theatres in St. Louis. Calls were made on William Seivers at the new Grand Central and also on Charles and Todd Cella, of Cella & Tate, who operate the Columbia Theatre, Orpheum, Grand Opera House, American Theatre, and the Rialto, which last named was built from the old Princess Theatre on Grand and Olive streets.

From St. Louis Mr. Kane went to Indianapolis, where he was met by Manager Harry H. Hicks, and calls were paid to Charles M. Olson, of the Alhambra Theatre, and Robert Lieber, the principal owner of the splendid Circle Theatre. In this city A. C. Zaring, of the Garrick, and the North Star theatres had assembled in his office a score of leading exhibitors to greet Mr. Kane.

Organize Cameo Pictures to Star Miss Cassinelli

ADOLPHE OSSO, who recently promoted the organization of the Albert Capellani Productions, Inc., has negotiated the organization of a second producing company to make pictures featuring Dolores Cassinelli.

Miss Cassinelli will be at the head of the new company which will operate under the name of the Cameo Pictures Corporation.

Mr. Capellani will direct Miss Cassinelli and supervise the productions and although the Cameo Pictures Corporation and the Albert Capellani Productions, Inc., will operate independently of each other, he will serve both companies.

Arrangements have already been completed and contracts entered into between the Cameo Pictures Corporation and the Pathe Exchange Inc. for the release and distribution of the pictures. Just how many and at what intervals these Cameo productions will be released has not yet been definitely decided.

Miss Cassinelli's company will commence work immediately at the Capellani Studio in Fort Lee.

The Cameo corporation has established offices in the Brokaw Building, with Adolphe Osso in charge of the business affairs of the company.

World Man Gives Newburg Once Over and Is Pleased

THE other day a ride of sixty miles brought us to Newburg, N. Y., to renew old and make new acquaintances. Our objective was our old friend and World subscriber, Fred W. Taylor, who manages the Academy, seating about 1,500, showing a combination of pictures and vaudeville. The first three days of the week he gives a feature of five reels a serial episode and five acts of vaudeville. The balance of the week a five reel feature and five vaudeville numbers. Admission fifteen and twenty-five cents. He employs an orchestra, gives full value for double the price and packs them in every night.

L. F. Hanmore runs the Broadway, 200 balcony and 600 orchestra seats. We found Mr. Hanmore a live businessman, giving his personal attention to the management of his house and possessed of a comprehensive knowledge of the industry. We were pleased to hear him say that business is very good and especially to have him show us a clipping from Moving Picture World mentioning that during the showing of "The Common Cause" he had been obliged to turn hundreds away from his theatre adding: "I am a regular reader of the old reliable."

In the same neighborhood, on Broadway, we stepped into the Royal, managed by W. F. Foote. He was not in at the time, but we gave the house the "once over." It contains 700 seats and adjoins the Opera House, which is used for burlesque shows. Both these theatres (as well as the Star) are owned by George Cohen, of Poughkeepsie. We were told by the cashier of the Royal that we would find Mr. Foote at the Star, where we found him exercising his managerial functions.

The Star seats 900 and looks very much like a converted rink. It is very comfortable inside and presents a very finely projected picture, so much so, that we asked the make of machine used and we were told by Mr. Foote they used the Simplex. On leaving we thanked Manager Foote for his courtesy in showing us through the house and he very graciously told us the Moving Picture World was a weekly visitor and he appreciated the personal visit of its representative.

SPEDON.

May Not Move Censor Office.

Manager McAleer, of the Pittsburgh Universal exchange, was among those present at the conference of picture men and Governor Sproul, of Pennsylvania, at Harrisburg, Wednesday, March 19. He says the State Executive made a most favorable impression upon the members of the committee and listened to their arguments in a most earnest manner. The particular matter which was discussed was the removal of the censor office from Philadelphia to Harrisburg, the great majority of the committee being against the proposition. It is entirely likely that the change will not be made.

OMAHA FILM BOARD IS NOW PERMANENT

After Successful Censorship Fight Body Organizes for Continuous Activity—Elects Officers for Year

THE Omaha Film Board of Trade, which organized to fight state censorship, and which was successful, recently perfected a permanent organization. The rules and by-laws of the Minneapolis board were adopted, and the board is now considering affiliation with the Omaha Chamber of Commerce. At its next meeting the commissioner of the Omaha chamber will address the board, explaining how such affiliation would be of benefit.

The film men present at the organization meeting were: Managers Myers, of Fox; Holah, of First National; Taylor, of Select; Akers, of Famous Players-Lasky; Getzler, of Vitagraph; Skirboll, of Metro; Bailey, of General; Wintroub, of Fontenelle; Reed, of World; Graham, of Pathe; Blakeman, of Triangle; Goldstone, of Sterling, and Messrs. Peave and Thiel, of the Famous Players-Lasky branch.

Manager Graham, of Pathe, was elected president of the permanent organization; Taylor, of Select, vice-president; Myers, of Fox, secretary, and Skirboll, of Metro, treasurer. Blakeman, Peave, Goldstone, Bailey and Holah were elected to the board of directors. All the elections were spirited and closely contested.

Managers, Taylor, Blakeman and Myers were appointed on a committee to select an attorney for the board.

Manager Akers, of Pathe, the retiring president, and Exhibitor H. M. Thomas, of the Rialto, Omaha, were extended a unanimous vote of thanks for splendid work in leading the fight on state censorship. It was announced that all exhibitors throughout the state of Nebraska will be furnished a list of state representatives who voted for or against the bill.

A committee from the board is seeking permanent quarters for the organization, and another is studying the transportation question, which has long bothered Omaha.

All's Quiet on Mississippi with Minneapolis Film Men

THE MARCH 15 issue of the World printed an article saying that the Minneapolis Film Board of Trade was up in arms over an order from the express companies to the effect that in the future no shipments of film would be delivered in Minneapolis unless the charges were prepaid.

A letter from A. H. Fisher, chairman of the board's transportation committee, advises that everything is as quiet and as peaceful among exhibitors and express men as it was along the historic Potomac. The showmen believe the ruling to be a satisfactory one inasmuch as it will save a great amount of trouble and bookkeeping. The express service is better at the present than it has been for a long time.

F. I. L. M. Club Aiding Loan Committee.

The various exchange members of the F. I. L. M. Club of New York are arranging plans for the distribution of films for the Victory Loan. It is proposed that each exchange will handle a certain territory for distribution and booking and certain stars will be allotted to the various exchanges, so that each territory will have a full quota of all stars participating in the Victory Loan campaign. As soon as the Treasury Department advises when the release dates will be, notice will be sent to all exhibitors.

Curtis Parts with $900.

George W. Curtis, proprietor of the Doric, Kansas City, was robbed of $900 a few evenings ago, but is still smiling. For what are a few odd dollars when "Mickey" is to the fore? Mr. Curtis had gone home in a taxi and been landed at his own door. As the taxi drove away two men slipped up to him as he was about to apply his latchkey and relieved him of his roll. They evidently had been keeping watch on the Doric, and also knew that Mr. Curtis was in the habit of carrying the box receipts home with him after the last performance.

Pearl White at Actors Fund Benefit.

Pearl White, Pathe's serial star, is to be one of the chief attractions at the big field day to be held for the Actors' Fund at the Polo Grounds, New York, on Sunday, April 13. She will temporarily stop work on the Robert W. Chambers serial, "In Secret," to prepare for the event.

"Anything under the sun for the Actors' Fund," Miss White said enthusiastically. "That cause deserves the best efforts of everyone in the profession, and I am more than glad to have an opportunity to do anything I can for so worthy a cause."

Tom Geraghty Expected in New York.

Tom Geraghty, scenarist for Famous Players-Lasky, is coming East. He may be in New York when this is printed, as he left Los Angeles in time to arrive on Main Street by now. He seeks "atmosphere" for new scripts and will also revisit his old haunts; the places where he and Charles Kenmore Ulrich were well and favorably known when they worked on the New York Herald in other days. Mr. Geraghty will be interviewed by the leading trade papers, and it is possible that he will write an entirely original photoplay with New York night life as its basis.

New Pathe Manager at Newark.

A. S. Abeles has been appointed manager of the Newark branch of Pathe Exchange, Inc. He joined Pathe in January, 1914, as a traveling salesman for the New York exchange, then in West 23d street. He went thence to St. Louis as branch manager, which position he held for seven months, when he was selected as manager of the New York exchange. Here he served from 1915 to 1918, when he was appointed district manager of the central western division.

BESTOW SIGNAL HONORS ON EXHIBITOR

Tennessee Governor Officially Recognizes Action of Tony Sudekum in Providing Shows for Prisoners

A NOTABLE honor has just been bestowed upon Tony Sudekum, president of the Crescent Amusement Company, operating theatres showing First National Exhibitors' Circuit attractions in Nashville, Tenn., by the Legislature and Governor of the State.

The sixty-first general assembly of Tennessee adopted, in both houses of the Legislature, a set of resolutions in formal acknowledgment and appreciation for Mr. Sudekum's contributions, during the last five years, of free moving picture entertainment to the prisoners in the state penitentiary and to the inmates of Central Hospital, a state institution for mental defectives. The shows provided at regular intervals by Mr. Sudekum, and for which he paid all expenses, have been the principal diversion of the insane patients and the state prisoners. Officials in charge of the two institutions incorporated, in their respective reports to the Legislature, strong commendations for what the exhibitor had done to aid them, in the absence of any specific legislative appropriations for entertainment purposes.

After these reports had been read to both houses, it was moved that the State of Tennessee officially recognize Mr. Sudekum's action. The Governor subscribed to the acknowledgment both as the chief executive and as an individual.

The set of resolutions received by Mr. Sudekum followed closely another gift bestowed upon him as chairman of the Four Minute Men Speakers' Bureau of Nashville. This was a large silver loving cup commemorating his excellent work as the chairman.

Goldburg Leaves for Coast

JESSE J. GOLDBURG, general manager of the Frohman Amusement Corporation, left recently for Chicago, expecting to close for Illinois and Ohio rights on this company's productions and to return to New York in a few days. However, on reaching Chicago, he received a telegram from William L. Sherrill, president of the company, to join him in Los Angeles.

Mr. Goldburg immediately left for the Pacific Coast via Minneapolis, Seattle and San Francisco, and expects to return in about four weeks. He will bring with him the first print of "South of the Santa Fe" and "The She Wolf," the first two of the two-reel western productions starring Texas Guinan, and he also expects to bring back a print of the first Mack Swain comedy, which he anticipates will be finished by that time. These pictures will be given a private trade showing on Mr. Goldburg's return.

Maritime Showman in New York.

S. W. Dimock, of Campbellton, N. B., is in New York arranging for a concert company to tour the Maritime Provinces this summer. Mr. Dimock is owner of three moving picture theatres which he has leased to F. G. Spencer, of St. John, and is turning his attention to travelling shows.

BUTTE GETS IN LINE WITH NORTHWEST

Exhibitors and Exchange Managers Form 100 Per Cent. Branch of Film Board of Trade

A CONVENTION was held in Butte, Montana, Friday, March 21, film salesmen, branch managers of the various exchanges and exhibitors being in attendance. The object of the conference was the formation of a Montana branch of the Northwest Film Board of Trade, which has headquarters at Seattle.

Manager Ralph Ruffner of the Rialto theatre of Butte introduced Toastmaster Harry Arthur, western district representative of the United Picture Theatres of America, who made a brief address, at the conclusion of which he introduced Harry Sigmond, general counsel for the Board of Trade at Seattle. Mr. Sigmond explained the objects of the organization and the benefits which both exhibitors and producers would derive from membership in the board of trade.

Tentative plans were laid for organization after short talks were heard from several of the exhibitors present. The conference followed a luncheon at the Thornton hotel, covers being laid for thirty-eight.

Among those present were K. D. Burk, branch manager for Fox; R. A. Allen, branch manager of General Film; J. S. Stout, Metro; R. A. Nelson, Mutual; George Colliday, Vitagraph; J. E. Bourke, branch manager of Universal.

The meeting resulted in 100 per cent. associated memberships in the Northwest Film Board of Trade, and the heartiest co-operation with the board was promised by exhibitors of Butte and Montana.

Martin Johnson Visits His Parents.

It may not be known to the world at large that Martin Johnson, who sprang into fame with his "Cannibals of the South Seas," is a Kansas man and when he came through Kansas City on his way to San Francisco to embark on another South Sea expedition he stopped over for a week to run down and see his parents in the southeastern part of Kansas. He stayed only an hour in this center of moving activity on his arrival and no one saw him except Earl McAvoy, the manager for the Mutual in Kansas City. Then he went down into Kansas and spent a week, or nearly so, with his old father and mother.

Mr. Johnson returned to Kansas City from his brief sojourn in the Sunflower state March 29 and said to the representative of the Moving Picture World that he intended returning to the United States two years later with a better picture of natives in the South Seas than those were he gave us in the Cannibals.

Produce Gun-Making Films for Archives of the Navy

MOTION PICTURES are still playing a big part in the war as conducted by the United States Government and among the film archives of the Navy Department will be about 30 reels of pictures recently taken by the Bureau of Ordnance under the direction of Rear Admiral Ralph Earle to depict methods employed by various gun and gun-mount plants all over the country in the fulfilment of their war contracts.

A motion picture party under the command of Lieutenant Walter A. Darling and consisting of Marine Gunner Frank A. Dorner, directing, and William B. Laub cameraman, returned to Washington on March 14 with about 30,000 feet of negative film after an eight weeks' trip which took them as far west as Moline, Ill.

Using two Simplex arc lamps and a Bell & Howell camera outfit the party, often working under the most trying conditions in poorly lighted forge and machine shops, secured splendid results and pictures that are going to be of inestimable value to the Government. Upon completion one set of prints will probably go to the United States Naval Academy, at Annapolis, Md., for the instruction of midshipmen in ordnance work and other prints may possibly be released to the public though there is much that is confidential.

The forging, machining and assembly of big naval guns and gun-mounts has probably for the first time in history been faithfully recorded by the motion picture camera for future generations to study and possibly profit thereby to a vast extent in the event of another national emergency.

'Twas Ever Thus, Was't Not? Careers Were Blighted Like This Since ——
Oh, well, you'd better see Fay Tincher in Christie's "Sally's Blighted Career," and see the blighters blighting.

Emerson-Loos Go on Tour to Study Picture Conditions

SO far as is known this is the first time in the history of the motion picture industry that a director and a scenario writer are making a transcontinental tour of the States, investigating conditions, relative to their future productions. During their tour they will also give a series of talks and lectures in twenty of the largest cities on the value of the future motion pictures. The couple who have taken this course to get to the bottom of affairs and feel the film-public's pulse are John Emerson and Anita Loos, who have been making satirical comedies for Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

Mr. Emerson and Miss Loos left New York this past week on their way to the West Coast. They will stop in Buffalo, Cleveland, Detroit, Chicago, Kansas City, Denver, Salt Lake City, Seattle, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Dallas, New Orleans, Atlanta, Washington, Baltimore, Philadelphia and Boston, together with other cities en route. Their tour will comprise about five or six weeks, with a stay at the West Coast studios of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation of about one week, where they will make their preparations for another comedy which is to be produced in the West by this couple during the early summer months.

"Common Clay" Pleases the President.

"Common Clay," with Fannie Ward, according to a radiogram received at Pathe Exchange home office, scored a hit on the program arranged for President Wilson on his return journey to France. The issue of the Pathe News shown during the trip composed a comprehensive record of the President's activities in England, France and Italy, the selections being made from the most important occasions.

Captain Rose of the George Washington, conveyed the news in the following message:

"Pathe News and 'Common Clay' greatly appreciated by President and party and by returning troops. Please try and include Pathe Review for the next trip."

Fox Purchases Popular Novel.

Another well-known book has been added to the list bought by William Fox for conversion into screen plays. The newest purchase is "My Little Sister," one of the season's best sellers. It will be a starring vehicle for Evelyn Nesbit. Kenean Buel will direct.

The novel was written by Elizabeth Robins, a prominent English authoress, and more than a million copies already have been sold on both sides of the Altantic.

COURT DECIDES IN EXHIBITOR'S FAVOR

William P. Murphy of Bath, New York, May Get Back Theatre as Result of Decision on Lease

AN important decision has been handed down by Justice S. Nelson Sawyer, of the Supreme Court of New York State, which affects the lease of the Park Theatre at Bath, a matter that has been in litigation for nearly two years.

Some two years ago, William P. Murphy, owner and operator of the theatre and the National Hotel, both situated on East Steuben street, in the heart of the city, had a dispute over assessments levied against his property by the city. When the taxes were not paid the city officials held a tax sale and leased the property to Matthew E. Shannon for five years for the amount of the unpaid and accrued taxes.

Shannon proceeded to operate the theatre as well as the hotel. People who held liens on the property then secured an injunction restraining him from enjoying the benefits of what was claimed to be still Murphy's property. A receiver was appointed to administer the property. Murphy then began another court action to have Shannon's tax lease set aside, alleging irregularities and that the entire proceeding was illegal.

Justice Sawyer in his decision holds that the assessors erred in not specifically describing and bounding the property in question, the description being too vague to permit the city to conduct a sale from the description thereof. Mr. Shannon will probably carry the case to the Appellate Division, but if the point taken by Justice Sawyer is sustained the property will automatically be returned to the original owner, Mr. Murphy.

Hodupp Again With Pathe.

V. H. Hodupp is again connected with Pathe Exchange, Inc. He entered the organization in May, 1914, as a salesman for the Pathe News in Jersey City. Later he was appointed salesman out of the Syracuse office, and, after several months' service in this capacity, he was appointed branch manager of the Syracuse office. In 1915 Mr. Hodupp was appointed branch manager of the Chicago exchange, and after more than a year, was called into the home office and appointed as special representative. His new duties will call upon him to visit the various exchanges to inspect the poster and shipping departments. He will also install the sales control and see that it is being kept up to date. He will also install the perpetual inventory on posters.

Kinograms Rushes Prints of Victory Parade.

The rapidity with which current events are recorded on the screen and shown to audiences far removed from the scenes of activity indicates the wonderful possibilities of the motion picture. It might be that it is no idle prophecy that some day the busy man will drop into a motion picture theatre and spend fifteen or twenty minutes before getting to his office in order that he may have the world news in concise and striking form without having to wade through a hundred or more columns of a newspaper. This is a future promise of how time conservation may be brought about to the man who even now finds that twenty four hours is too short for a day.

Kinograms pictured the Victory parade of the Twenty-Seventh Division which was staged on Fifth avenue, New York, on March 25. It began at 10 o'clock and was concluded at 2. At 5 o'clock the same day, prints from the Kinogram laboratory were being rushed out to all parts of the Union showing in full the greatest home coming reception ever accorded victorious troops.

Prints were delivered to the Palace, Rivoli and Rialto at 3.25 P. M. on the day of the parade.

Rosenfeld a "Best Seller."

Charles H. Rosenfeld, better known among his friends and the exhibitors of Brooklyn as "Rosey," has been "knocking 'em dead," to use that vernacular. Rosenfeld has been holding high mark on the sales force of the New York Exchange of Exhibitors Mutual for the period of time he has been connected with that company. He has a great following of friends among the Brooklyn exhibitors and has the confidence of all who know him.

Exhibitors Mutual has been offering some handsome rewards for the highest amount of sales in its organization, and Rosenfeld has his eye on these.

Violet Mersereau Claims the Honors.

Violet Mersereau, a Universal star, has been returned winner in the annual motion picture star's popularity contest conducted by the Minneapolis Journal. Over 75,000 votes were received by Carlton W. Miles, photoplay and dramatic editor, who was in charge of the contest, and Miss Mersereau was victorious by a margin of several thousand votes.

Grace Cunard, Dorothy Phillips and Priscilla Dean were among the first six in the contest. Last year Grace Cunard won the contest, and the year previous Marguerite Clark and Pearl White ran a close race for the honors which were captured by the Paramount star.

Says Soldiers at the Front Wanted to See Scenic Films

WILLIAM L. SHERRY, of the Sherry Service, 729 Seventh avenue, New York, has received a letter from Martin Coleman, a foreman of pictorial amusements in the Montdidier section, attached to the French army since 1916, who was mustered out of the French auxiliary service after being gassed early last year, in which the writer describes queer psychological effects he observed in men who sought entertainment between bursts of shellfire. Mr. Coleman was formerly an employe of the Parex Film Corporation, of which Mr. Sherry is president.

"The first thing the poilus wanted when they came out of the trenches staggering and hardly able to stand, was sleep," writes Mr. Coleman, "but as soon as they had got rid of the deadly fatigue they were crazy for something that would take their minds off the horrors they had been through, and were so soon again to encounter.

"We had a motion picture house a little way back of the lines. It was in a dugout and it held about fifty men at a time. Those ragged dirty fellows caked with mud and covered with vermin, did not want to look at the pictures that well-intentioned folks thought they would be interested in, but were eagerly enthusiastic over scenes of city streets of Paris, London, New York. You see they had got in a state of mind where none of them believed they would ever see a city street again, and a city street with well dressed crowds walking about. Love plots didn't seem to interest them much, but a comedy —I mean regular slapstick stuff—started them shouting with glee."

Majestic, Detroit, Splits the Week.

The change in management at the Detroit Majestic has brought about a change in policy—first runs, splitting twice-a-week. Detroit has six first-run houses playing full week stands and the Majestic looks for an advantage under the split week. Charles G. Branham, who resigned the managing directorship last week, has gone to Atlanta where he assumes an important position with the S. A. Lynch interest in the South. George E. Guise, who was the Majestic's publicity man, is now managing director, the press work being in charge of G. Phillip Gersdorf, lately appointed.

Bacon's Son in Hart's New Artcraft.

Lloyd Bacon, son of Frank Bacon, the character actor of the "legitimate" stage, is cast for the "sympathetic" role in William S. Hart's Artcraft picture, "Square Deal Sanderson," now in course of production.

There is only one woman in the cast and she is Ann Little. Miss Little has her first opportunity of playing opposite William S. Hart

HODKINSON SECURES FOURTH BIG LINE

Not Ready Yet to Make Definite Announcement, but Says Contracts Have Been Signed for New Product

IN view of the recent announcements that the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation has been able to put into operation its long prepared for policy of handling above-average pictures only, and that the Hodkinson organization has inaugurated this policy with the Zane Grey Pictures, Inc., and the Augustus Thomas-Harry Raver "Four Star" productions, as two of the four big new lines to be handled from now on, Mr. Hodkinson makes the following statement.

"For some months now," said Mr. Hodkinson, "we have been laying the foundation for something big, and laying that foundation slowly and soundly. During the past fifteen months we have upon occasion been forced to take on product with which we were not entirely satisfied, but we have done it in the knowledge that it was but a stopgap and that the product we were soon going to be able to offer the exhibitor would make up for any indifferent product that we might have been forced to carry.

Has Four Big Lines Now.

"Today we have four lines of product which will run second to none in the United States. Two of these lines will, in my opinion, establish themselves as the best, the biggest, the most worth while pictures of the year 1919. The other two will certainly fall within the scope of our policy, based flatly upon an above-average standard and above-average means to us that the picture must be distinctly in the better-picture class, well written, well produced, well directed and well acted. Mediocre or indifferent stuff is not above-average.

"What we have done is just this: By developing a selective machinery, very much like the exhibitor's own, but upon a far larger scale, we have been able to select and eliminate. That we have really eliminated is shown by the fact that out of all our past year's product we have kept but one line—the one line that has distinctly measured up to the better-picture-standard. This line is J. Warren Kerrigan, under the presentation of Jesse D. Hampton.

Will Announce Fourth Line Soon.

"Of our brand new product the Augustus Thomas-Harry Raver Four Star pictures, directed by George Irving and featuring Leah Baird, are decidedly of the above-average class. The first of these pictures, a splendid screen presentation of Augustus Thomas' famous play, 'As a Man Thinks,' is a strong production.

"Then we have Zane Grey—the Zane Grey Pictures, Inc., which is the author's own company. I can't say too much for this series and what it promises. The first picture, a remarkable production of Zane Grey's nationally popular novel, 'Desert Gold,' is being produced on a scale which has been equaled in cost and care not more than half a dozen times in the history of motion pictures.

"And these three lines are but three of the four we are going to handle. The fourth is so big, so wide in scope, that the time for its announcement is not quite ripe. The productions involved, however, are well under way as far as the initial plans are concerned, and the contracts are signed."

Hodkinson Representative Promoted.

E. C. Fielder, Hodkinson representative, has again taken on more territory. Originally in charge of the Cleveland territory, he was recently transferred to the Chicago office to handle both districts. Now he will cover Indianapolis as well. D. W. Phillips, formerly General Film branch manager, will assist Mr. Fielder in Cleveland, and E. S. Rowley, a Chicago film man of long experience, will assist in Chicago. An assistant for Indianapolis will be appointed soon. Hodkinson service is distributed through Pathe Exchange, Inc.

Metro Studios Install New System of Lighting Control

UNIQUE in studio equipment is the new system of lighting control which Maxwell Karger, director general, has caused to be installed at the Metro studios in Hollywood.

Under the new system of lighting, the control of all the great banks of arcs used on his set will be right at the individual director's finger-tips. The bulky portable switchboards, requiring the services of from three to six electricians on each set have been discarded. In their place is a little box that may be in the palm of the hand. This compact device gives complete control over the slightest graduation of light.

The device, which is known as the Cutler-Hammer Remote Control System, will not only do away with the heavy switchboards that are scattered over the studio floor, but will result in the abolishment of the miles of electrical cable.

Silver Statuette for Keenan.

Admiring western friends of Frank Keenan who are in the mining industry have presented him with a statuette of solid silver, from a design by Haydon Jones, the illustrator, of the figure of a bareheaded girl in ranch riding costume, with quirt in hand and her head thrown back and her hair blowing in the wind. It is called "The Silver Girl" after Edward Peple's Broadway stage production, in a screen adaptation of which Mr. Keenan will be seen the week beginning April 8. The photodrama is released as a Pathe extra selected, star photoplay.

Lichtman Starts on Tour of Exchanges.

Al Lichtman, general manager of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation's distribution department, left New York Thursday afternoon, March 27, for a tour of exchanges. Mr. Lichtman's first stops will be Buffalo, Chicago and Detroit.

Increased business at the Paramount-Artcraft exchanges during the past month makes it necessary for Mr. Lichtman to visit various exchanges to give his supervision in the matter of handling the activities which will involve the addition to a number of branch offices of space and forces.

Charles Pathe Coming to America.

Charles Pathe, head of Pathe Exchange, Inc., is expected to arrive in America about April 15. Already the service he has rendered to the French Government has earned him the distinction of the Legion of Honor, and now that the war is over he is turning his attention to the vast problem of peace and the large opportunities which are promised with the great resumption. Mr. Pathe's last visit to America was about two years ago.

CO-OPERATIVE EXCHANGE SELLS STOCK

At April Meeting of Ontario M. P. E. P. A. Prospectus and List of Stockholders Reach Members Attending

THE printed prospectus, list of shareholders already secured, formal applications for stock and a printed appeal by President J. C. Brady for the support and co-operation of every exhibitor in Canada for the new Canadian Exhibitors' Exchange, Limited, Toronto, were placed in the hands of the exhibitors who attended the regular April meeting of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Protective Association of Ontario at 143 Yonge street, Toronto, on Tuesday, April 1. The printed prospectus, which was signed by James Crang, proprietor of the Oakwood Theatre, Toronto, as the treasurer of the new company, gave various details of the new co-operative exchange and the articles of incorporation under the Companies' Act of Canada are also reproduced.

Pay for Stock by Installments.

Arrangements are made to have exhibitors to pay for twenty-five per cent. of the stock which they take when application is made and the remainder is to be paid in three equal instalments bimonthly. The company is capitalized at $100,000, divided into 1,000 shares of $100 each, all common stock. It is announced that the preliminary expenses of the company will not exceed $750. No commission is being paid for promoting the company and the manager will be engaged by the board of permanent directors after the latter are elected by the shareholders

Eighty-one Canadian exhibitors have promised in writing to support the new exchange and, according to the list of shareholders, eighty exhibitors of Ontario, Quebec and Manitoba have already taken stock.

Called Step in Self-Protection.

In the printed appeal issued by President J. C. Brady, the statement is made that the exchange company has been organized by the exhibitors for self-protection and he also refers to the danger of a monopolistic tendency.

Several score exhibitors from Toronto and outside points attended the general meeting to discuss developments.

Exhibitors Find It Hard to Keep Fixtures Fixed

THE exhibitor has troubles of his own. Not all of them begin and end at the box office. In some of the large manufacturing cities where there is a mixed population we are told by the managers of three or four of the large and modernly equipped theatres that some of their most exasperating problems were brought to their attention in the furnishings of the retiring rooms, providing all the comforts of home for their patrons. They find it impossible to keep anything in them that is detachable and not too large to carry away.

For instance, towels, soap dishes, combs and brushes and even paper toweling mysteriously disappear. Anything in the shape of metal is removed that could only have been displaced with the aid of a screw-driver or jimmy. Articles of clothing, collars, neck-ties, etc., are very often found in the washrooms, giving one the impression that the visitors had made a complete change in the place.

New Portland Theatre Changes Hands.

Control of the New Portland Theatre of Portland, Me., has just passed into the hands of three Portland men, Melvin D. Chatto, DeForrest H. Perkins and Herbert W. Hutchinson. These men have acquired equal shares of the stock of the Green Amusement Company of Massachusetts, the corporate management of the local playhouse. Mr. Hutchinson, who has been the manager, will continue in that capacity. He assumed the management of the house two and a half years ago, succeeding James W. Greeley. The new owners will in the near future make needed repairs and improvements, including extensive redecorating and innovations that will add to the comfort of patrons.

Renco to State Right "The Birth of a Race"

THE Renco Film Company of Chicago, announces that the spectacular photoplay, "The Birth of a Race" will be distributed on the state right market. This production was first presented at the Blackstone Theatre in Chicago and the engagement in that city ran into three months, followed by engagements in a few cities at large legitimate theatres.

This picture is described as a great drama and was several months in the making. The scenes were taken in Florida, New York and New Jersey under the direction of John W. Noble and represents the work of a corps of high class directors and scenario writers, competent actors and efficient photographers.

The music for "The Birth of a Race" was composed by Joseph Carl Breil, who has also composed the scores for some of the greatest film productions. The photography is by Herbert O. Carlton and art titles by Ferdinand Pinney Earle. Important characterizations in the production are contributed by Jane Grey, Anna Lehr, Anita Cortez, George LeGuerre, Phillip Van Loan, Charles Graham, Ben Hendricks, Alice Gale, Doris Doscher, Dick Lee, Edwin Boring, David Wall and Belle Seacombe.

Peace is Theme of Story.

The theme is the story of peace, democracy and brotherhood. It traces the history of world advancement from the Garden of Eden to the dawn of peace, and shows in its progress through the ages, scenes of peace, diplomacy and happiness. It deals with freedom and the better understanding between different races and nationalities which have poured into this country and the amalgamation that has resulted in a new race—the American Race; with its vision of freedom, liberty, equality and fraternity. It is claimed to be one of the most graphic histories of the world ever presented, and the producers assert that perhaps no photoplay has been prepared with more earnest care, more historical research, more truth and more eager effort for dramatic effect than "The Birth of a Race." While it pictures the great events of history, it is not a war picture.

It is reported that before the picture was properly assembled, the Pennsylvania rights were sold to a Pittsburgh syndicate for an unusually large figure and after the Chicago showing resold at a large advance; and as soon as state rights were available that Michigan, Iowa and half of Ohio were sold for very large sums. Several other big deals are pending, and offers have been received for practically every state.

Simplex to Offer New Device.

From one of the executives of the Precision Machine Company comes the news, that on top of the many additions and features which have been evolved on the Simplex machine, is one that will make a direct appeal to the projectionist on account of its principle.

No further information was forthcoming concerning this feature other than that photographic and art work was being prepared for use in the customary position on the inside back covers of the various trade papers, where a striking advertisement of this new feature will soon appear.

Mix Writes Waltz in Memory of Horse.

In memory of his favorite horse, Old Blue, which died recently, Tom Mix has written the "Old Blue Waltz," which is being published by a New York music publishing house.

The composition found its inspiration in the wonderful companionship that for nineteen years existed between the Fox screen star and his horse.

Vanderveer Joins Outing-Chester.

The Outing-Chester Pictures which are produced by C. L. Chester in cooperation with Outing Magazine have again secured the services of one of the best cameramen the company has ever had—Williard Vanderveer, now of the United States Army but soon to be released for civilian duty. Sergeant Vanderveer was in the photographic division of the expeditionary forces.

EXCHANGES LET THE EXHIBITOR WORRY

Distributors Take Chances on Delivery and Showmen Too Often Have to Tell Patrons Film Failed to Come

THE responsibility of an exchange to an exhibitor does not end with the signing of a contract," says Joseph P. Morgan, general manager of the Crandall string of theatres. "It must see to it that the latter gets the film he books and in ample time to properly put it on. Too often of late the managers have apparently taken the view that selling the picture to the exhibitor lets them out of everything else.

"The exchange manager should cooperate with the exhibitor until he at least gets the show he books. Every once in a while something happens through the failure of the exchange to properly follow up a booking, and only an exhibitor knows what an awful grill it is to be compelled to stand outside in front of the ticket booth and tell several thousand people why it is you are not showing the films advertised in the papers and on the boards.

"We try to avoid just such a condition as this. We play two prints, one at the Knickerbocker and one at the Metropolitan, both, of course, first run. We usually call up the exchange early in the week before show date to find out if the feature is in Washington. If it has not arrived, we keep right after the exchange until we get it into the theatre.

Exhibitor Has to Worry.

"Quite often we are told 'never mind, don't worry, we will get the film to you on time,' and invariably we do have to worry, because the speaker tried to cover too much territory. A specific case occurred recently when we were to be given a film playing Saturday in Richmond, Va., for a Sunday showing in the Knickerbocker. We received the usual assurances, but not satisfied, we called up the Richmond exhibitor on the long distance and asked him to send it in by special messenger at our expense. He arrived about ten minutes before the opening of the afternoon show. There had been a wreck on the road and if the film had been left to come to us by parcel post or express we would never have received it.

"Last week," continued Mr. Morgan, "we spent $1,500 advertising a feature and the picture did not get here until almost the last minute. This does not give the orchestra leader time enough to go over his music, and he has to depend upon his ability during the first afternoon show to make music and play match. Very often we hear the complaint from the exchange that a picture is not put over properly. They do not realize that they are largely to blame because of their failure to cooperate. They take too much for granted. I tell you, it makes an exhibitor hesitate when considering heavy advertising for any one production. He may not get his show on time and past experience has made him thoughtful."

Simplex Factory Working Nights to Fill Orders

THE sight of blazing windows illuminating the two upper floors of the factory at 317 East Thirty-fourth street, New York, has its answer in the report received from Simplex officials to the effect that during the past two weeks it has been necessary to work the factory force at night in order to catch up with the orders which have recently piled up, and at the same time take care of the regular orders that are being daily received from the various Simplex distributors.

A recent order for forty-eight machines for foreign shipment which require special packing and attention added to the bustling situation. E. M. Porter, general manager of the Precision Machine Company, reports that extensive and elaborate plans are being made for an increase of production which the present large sales made imperative.

Myrtis Morgan Returns from France.

Myrtis Morgan, who created the part of Miss Lydia in "The Duplicity of Hargreaves," the O. Henry story adapted for the screen by Vitagraph, returned on the Aquitania from France, where she has been for the past four months, serving as an ambulance driver for the Red Cross.

Miss Morgan, who is an expert automobile driver, offered her services to the Red Cross, immediately after the completion of her work for the Fourth Liberty Loan Campaign last October. She was immediately accepted for overseas service, and sailed October 12.

More Press Men for Universal.

Tarkington Baker, general manager for Universal, has announced the appointment of Philip W. Alexander as publicity manager of the Universal exchange at San Francisco. The addition of Mr. Alexander to the Universal publicity forces brings the number of staff men up to twenty-three.

E. A. Crane.
Wins promotion to Manhattan.

Crane New Sales Head for Hodkinson in New York City

E. A. CRANE, formerly a Hodkinson representative in Washington, D. C., has been promoted by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation to the New York office, where he will be in charge of Hodkinson sales throughout the Greater New York territory. He will be located at the New York exchange of Pathe Exchange, Inc., through which channels Hodkinson service is distributed.

Mr. Crane joined the Hodkinson organization last September and during his seven months in the capitol city accomplished some splendid results, in recognition of which came his promotion. It was Mr. Crane who arranged for and put over with great success the official presentation to the War Department of Ashley Miller's patriotic series, "Made in America," at Crandall's Knickerbocker Theatre, as well as the private showing to the National Press Club.

While Mr. Crane is a salesman of broad experience, having held executive positions in advertising, publicity and selling—principally selling—this is his first experience in the film industry. One of the first things he noticed in entering the business was the method used in selling film.

Mr. Crane is optimistic as to the future of film selling. He is delighted with the new lines of product being taken over by the Hodkinson organization and believes that the stories of Augustus Thomas and Zane Grey, as well as other product to be announced later, will be in great demand, every indication pointing to deep interest on the part of the exhibitors.

Fleming Back With Fairbanks.

Victor Fleming, lieutenant in the Signal Corps, who had charge of photographing President Wilson's first trip to Europe on the George Washington, arrived in Los Angeles yesterday, having been honorably discharged from the U. S. Army. Before entering the military service, Fleming was head photographer for Dougias Fairbanks and has already resumed his old position in that capacity.

BUSINESS EXPANDS IN THE NORTHWEST

Bookings Are Heavier and Picture Men Now Feel Very Optimistic Regarding the Future

CONSTRUCTION of new theatres, expansion of business generally, heavier bookings and a pronounced spirit of optimism, are spring activities which indicate substantial growth and increased prosperity for the moving picture industry in the northwest.

Frank L. Koppelberger, proprietor of four moving picture theatres in LaCrosse, Wis., the Strand, Casino, Majestic and LaCrosse, is about to break ground for a new cinema theatre in that city, which will seat 1,500 people all on one floor. The growth in the popularity of moving pictures, and the evident fact that LaCrosse needed another theatre to accommodate the demand, prompted Mr. Koppelberger to build. The new theatre will be modern in every respect and one of the best in LaCrosse.

Thomas E. Vallancey, owner of the Rialto Theatre at Dickinson, N. Dak., and the Isis at Glendive, Mont., has announced that he will begin the construction of a new moving picture house at Glendive in April.

The new Montana theatre will cost approximately $100,000. It will be a two story building and will have a seating capacity of 700. The incorporators are Mr. Vallancey, T. F. Hagen and E. A. Schabel.

McCarthy Brothers Making Headway.

Two brothers are rapidly coming to the front as leading exhibitors in the Northwest territory and have some ambitious plans for the exploitation of moving pictures in 1919.

They are Charles and John McCarthy, who own and control the chain of six theatres in Grand Forks and Fargo, N. Dak.; Aberdeen and Watertown, S. Dak. Before September 1, a seventh theatre will be added to their string, which includes the Orpheum at Grand Forks, recently completed to replace the Grand destroyed some time ago by fire; the Orpheum and Grand at Fargo; Lyric at Watertown; Rialto, Orpheum and Lyric at Aberdeen.

The McCarthy brothers have just taken over the lease of the Orpheum at Aberdeen from H. L. Walker. In addition to showing moving pictures, this theatre will stage the road show and vaudeville attractions on the McCarthy circuit. The Orpheum at Watertown will be completed and ready for business by September 1.

The McCarthy brothers new theatre at Grand Forks opened Monday, March 24, under the management of Charles McCarthy. John McCarthy, senior member of the firm, spent several days in Minneapolis recently, booking several big film attractions for his circuit. Mr. McCarthy reported conditions in the Dakotas excellent and predicted a big year for pictures.

Yale Opens its New House.

The Yale Theatre Co., of Yale, S. D., opened its theatre at that place Saturday, March 15. Officers and operators of the company are: Lloyd Granger, president and operator: H. W. Williscroft, business manager: Guy S. Abbott, musical director and advertiser.

George and William Hessen have announced that they will build a new picture theatre at Osseo, Minn.

J. H. McCauley will build a new theatre at Glenwood, Minn., at an estimated cost of $20,000.

The Conners & Sweet Amusement Co. will build a new picture theatre at Huron, S. D., to cost approximately $50,000.

The Northfield Company will construct a new $10,000 movie house at Northfield, Minn., this spring.

Jack King will build a new moving picture house at Butte, Mont.

Peter Des Rosier has begun construction of an addition to the Orpheum Theatre at Browning, Montana.

The Hines Theatre Company has been incorporated to erect a new $50,000 theatre at Duluth.

John Kuehn has purchased a site for a new moving picture theatre at Little Chute, Wis.

Films Youngstown's Heroes Upon Arrival in New York

C. W. DIEBEL, manager of the Liberty Theatre, Youngstown, Ohio, has put over one of the most novel and successful advertising ideas to be tried by an exhibitor in some time, and by so doing has made a splendid investment in that intangible but most essential assets called "good will."

The Thirty-seventh division made up of Ohio men, was due to land in New York March 24 and 25. Everyone in Youngstown had a relative or a friend among the boys who came home. Everyone in Youngstown wanted to go to New York to see the boys walk down the gangplank—but since that could not be done, Mr. Diebel determined to bring the landing home to the home folk.

In conjunction with William Rock, city editor of the Youngstown Vindicator, and accompanied by Mrs. Harold Taylor, representing the Youngstown Red Cross, and Mrs. Julia Bonnell, representing the Youngstown War Camp Community Service, Mr. Diebel came to New York and after having arranged to film the landing of the division, took views of them as they marched down the gangplank.

Arrangements were made with the commanding officers, and the Youngstown boys were segregated from the others on the wharf and were filmed.

Governor Cox was also a member of the welcoming party, and he was shown shaking hands with each of the Youngstown boys. A little more than 1,000 feet of film was taken.

Famous Players Buys More Novels.

Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, recently announced the acquisition for screen presentation of three subjects. They are William Gillette's "Too Much Johnson," Louis Joseph Vance's "The Black Bag" and "Hawthorne of the U. S. A.," the Cohan and Harris hit.

"Too Much Johnson" is the second piece by William Gillette purchased recently by Famous Players-Lasky, "Secret Service" having been obtained some few weeks ago as a vehicle for Captain Robert Warwick.

Louis Joseph Vance's novel, "The Black Bag," published in 1908, is also well-known to the American public. This story was obtained as a vehicle for Wallace Reid.

"Hawthorne of the U. S. A." is another play of the American stage. Produced first at the Astor Theatre in New York, November, 1912, with Douglas Fairbanks in the leading role, this piece by James B. Fagan proved a hit and soon became popular throughout the country.

Christie Closes for Eastern Canada.

Contracts have just been signed between C. H. Christie for the Christie Film Company and Jule and J. J. Allan, Famous Players Film Service of Toronto, for the release of all Christie subjects in Canada east of Port Arthur, Ontario. This contract comes close on the heels of the contract with the First National for Western Canada.

The Famous Players Film Service of Toronto formerly acted as the distributors for Christie one reel comedies and released the first fifty-two of those subjects. The Allan firm has recently added largely to the number of houses in their territory and now include all of the leading theatres in Ontario. The Famous Players will now handle the one reel comedies and also the new two reel Specials.

Complaint on Lobby Display.

Sometimes the exhibitor has occasion for complaint without finding fault. A manager of a moving picture theatre called our attention to a new style lobby display which was sent him instead of the customary photographs. The former display pictures are printed by the photogravure process on seventy or eighty pound paper, similar to the Sunday newspaper supplement. They are too flimsy to stay in the display frames without thumbtacks or paste. It is true they are 15 cents cheaper the set, but two exhibitors say they would rather pay the difference and have them stand up.

BUILDING UP AN EXCLUSIVE CLIENTELE

Barbion of Akron with a 300-Seat House Went After and Got Patronage of Towns Well-to-Do

C. A. BARBION and the Waldorf Theatre of Akron, Ohio, are successful commentaries on the dictum voiced by C. L. Yearsley, advertising manager of First National Exhibitors' Circuit, in an exclusive interview with Moving Picture World last week to the effect that there is an audience for every production.

In Akron there are two things that are recognized by the entire populace as being synonymous with quality. They are Barbion and the Waldorf. Just how he has succeeded, as an exhibitor with a three hundred seat house, in making a city with a population of 125,000 admit that the Waldorf is far more within the boundaries of the "set" than any one of the larger houses conducted by his competitors, is a story worthy of the attention of every exhibitor.

And the facts become vastly more interesting in light of his contract with the First National Exhibitors' Circuit exchange in Cleveland which provided for a week's run on "Virtuous Wives" at a rental of $100 a day. That price, for a house with only three hundred seats, seems prohibitive, but Barbion makes a handsome profit and does it regularly, once a week.

Had a House: Had to Fill It.

Mr. Barbion's policy is set with all the firmness of bedrock in the fact that there is an audience for every picture. His original problem was to find the audience for the pictures. This gave him a lot of worry and trouble, and sometimes unprofitable results. There were no indications of failure, but he felt that there was some other system of management whereby he could perfect, to a far greater degree, the insurance he was seeking against an average of two unprofitable weeks out of each month.

The reasoning of the Waldorf's owner brought him to the conclusion that it was much easier and less costly to find productions to suit a definite character of audience than it was to book releases of varying kinds of appeal, and then dig into the population of Akron with various kinds of advertising to locate the class of theatre patrons to whom each of the different classes of screen stories would prove an incentive to visit the Waldorf.

Builds Up Special Clientele.

This led to the suggestion that perhaps there was some way by which Mr. Barbion could standardize the audiences at the Waldorf—a possibility that if he could select a certain clientele and cater to it exclusively, he would have less difficulty than was the case without any specific type of patronage.

Mr. Barbion decided that it would cost him no more to shoot for the elite of the city than it would to make the well to do or the workers his target. More than this, there was the certainty that the prosperous element could afford to pay higher admissions for its motion picture entertainment than would the other classes. Akron is the heart of the tire industry of the United States, and there are hundreds of well to do executives, office men, and merchants of all kinds and descriptions.

Thenceforth, the Waldorf Theatre, with its three hundred seats, became a gathering place for the prosperous citizens of Akron who wanted motion pictures for their amusement. Instead of scurrying round among the exchanges in Cleveland, booking whatever he could that looked promising, he began to exercise a great deal of care in his choice of subjects.

Subjects Must Appeal to Clients.

Barbion wanted only those releases that would appeal to his class of patronage. He had determined on his market in Akron, and now he wanted the product to fit it. No more did he spend the the time traveling back to the Waldorf with a number of booking contracts in his pocket speculating on the various types of citizens to whom a miscellaneous variety of screen stories would appeal. Instead, he knew to a certainty the type of audience he was seeking, and he knew to an equal degree of positiveness that the productions he had scheduled would be just the kind they wanted to see.

Thereby, with a single stroke of reasoning genius, he had reduced his exhibitor problems to one—the search for the releases that would fit a certain class of audience.

Up in Cleveland they told him he was overestimating his box office capacity when he agreed to pay $100 a day for "Virtuous Wives" for a week's run.

"A three hundred seat house can't accommodate a sufficient number of patrons each day to make up your cost at that price," he was told.

Refuses to Heed Croakers.

"Let me worry about that," he answered. "I know the Waldorf, and I know the prosperous citizenry of Akron. I have the very cream of the city as regular patrons of my little house, and I know that this production, at that price, is worth every nickel it is costing me. It is a society story, and they'll eat it up, figuratively speaking."

They did!

Newspaper advertising is the foundation, structure and component parts of Barbion's local promotional campaigns. His copy always is short, pertinent and direct to the point. It radiates "class."

There is a wealth of good counsel and sage reasoning in Barbion's declaration that "I never try to fool my patrons, or try to give them something inferior. I want the real thing, not imitations. I keep my faith with them, and they keep faith with me."

Looks Like "Home," Doesn't It? Well, It Is.

Mildred Harris is featured in Jewel's forthcoming Lois Weber production, "Home."

Schnitzer Returns from Trip Across the Country

JOSEPH I. SCHNITZER, Universal's general sales manager, has returned to his New York office from a five weeks' trip which carried him to the Pacific Coast and back, convinced that Universal productions are to enjoy record distribution and success during the present year. Mr. Schnitzer visited Pittsburgh, Indianapolis, Chicago, St. Louis, Omaha, Denver, Portland, San Francisco and Los Angeles, acquainting exhibitors and exchangemen with Universal new star series selling policy. Upon his arrival in each of the cities mentioned, Mr. Schnitzer held a conference with exchangemen of surrounding territories and later conferred with the leading exhibitors of the localities visited, outlining Universal's plans for exploiting its pictures during the spring and summer months.

Upon his return to New York Mr. Schnitzer stated that he found conditions in exchanges and theatres greatly in excess to his fondest hopes. In every city visited Mr. Schnitzer states he found theatres doing a greater amount of business than they ever recorded previously and the outlook for a big summer's business seems to be well founded.

Carey Winds Up Western Tour.

Harry Carey, Universal's Western star returned to the Hollywood studios last week. He wound up his 5,000 mile personal appearance tour of the West at San Francisco, Monday, March 31, by addressing film fans at six different theatres in the Golden Gate City.

SELZNICK BRINGS STUDIO STAFF EAST

Move Indicates New Development in Affairs of His Corporation Which Demands His Being in New York

MYRON SELZNICK, president and general manager of the Selznick Pictures Corporation, and his entire producing staff is on his way back to New York and will produce the next two Olive Thomas pictures in the East.

Two Olive Thomas pictures have been completed by Director Charles Giblyn, in Los Angeles. The first of these is "Upstairs and Down," made from the play by Frederic and Fanny Hatton. The name of the second has not been stated. An extensive system of exploitation has been worked out for these and the succeeding productions starring Miss Thomas, of which there will be eight yearly.

It is understood that the move to New York has nothing to do with producing facilities, but is in connection with new developments in the company's affairs. There are no officers of the company now in the East, and the following statement was the only information issued by the New York office:

"Myron Selznick, with his valuable experience in studio management, keeps his eye on all details of production as well as handling the executive work as president of the corporation. Certain important future developments are coming up for consideration, demanding his personal attention, and he is coming East for this reason. Believing it to be for the best interests of the company to keep the administration concentrated, he is bringing his entire staff with him, and has informed us that the next two Olive Thomas pictures will be made here.

Not long ago Myron Selznick was joined in Los Angeles by his brothers, David and Howard, and Mrs. Selznick also went to the Coast for a visit. They will all return together, arriving here Sunday, April 13, accompanied by Miss Thomas and Director Giblyn.

Took Aeroplane Ride With DeMille.

Sylvia Breamer, star of J. Stuart Blackton's productions, returned to New York last Saturday after a brief vacation between pictures on the coast.

The thrill of the vacation, says Miss Breamer, was in an aeroplane ride she had with Cecil DeMille.

Latest Outing-Chesters Photographed from Comic Angle, Aided by Subtitles

THE latest of the Outing-Chester productions have taken Canada as a background for the action with which the pictures are fraught. The first number "Guided and Miss Guided," contains considerable humor at the expense of a feminine mountain climber. Katherine Hilliker in subtitling the pictures, has lost no chance for legitimate comedy in emphasizing the unhappy moments of the heroine by skilfully worded shots at her whose daring cannot fail to cause a thrill in the fearful feminine heart. Needless to say the comedy "gets over," and Mrs. Hilliker and the climbing lady are each entitled to a degree of praise for the fine effects obtained by each, each in her particular line of action.

"Guided and Miss Guided" was photographed in the wilds of the Canadian Rockies. Two mountains are centered out for special location, Lafroy and Assinaboine, and the charming Lake Louise. The picture is especially beautiful in its earlier scenes, after which the spectator becomes absorbed with the ascent of one of the mountains. Here it is that we become acquainted with the fact that we have a woman in our midst, whereafter we follow with admiration and amusement the exhibition of mountain climbing which she gives us. Her eulogist states with an appended illustration that when she meets with trouble "she doesn't stop to argue, but promptly sits down on it." She also tells us among other things that whether she arrives at her goal by natural means or is lugged there on the end of a rope her happy smile always "stays put." "Guided and Miss Guided" has a distinctly successful outlook as a box office attraction, apparently possessing all the attributes that makes a film "get over."

"A Waswanipae Week End" introduces us to a tribe of Indians that inhabit the James Bay region, and incidentally to the rapid runing Bell River. Exhibitions of fine canoemanship on the part of the Indians among the river's rapids are included in the interesting features of the picture. The fishing industry as depicted along the wooded shores of the river would make many a sportsman green with envy. Some beautiful shots of the Kiask Falls and scenes which necessitate portaging to escape them, are very attractive. Then there is the arrival at the Waswanipae village and introductions to various types, old and young. The tanning of hides, a ceremony in which the whole family participates, until what is left of the skin looks like a very good one, is a lesson in perseverance not taught by more modern methods. Glimpses into the life of the village are also interesting.

Films for National Education Association's Conference

A SIGNIFICANT issue in film affairs is in the request received by the National Board of Review from George A. Strayer, President of the National Educational Association, to arrange a series of exhibits on visual education for the national conference to be held by the association in Milwaukee the first week in July. This will include motion pictures and lantern slides now being used by the schools in departments of visual education. The interest expressed by President Strayer in this form of education is full of possibilities for the larger use of motion pictures in school buildings both for the instruction of scholars and for the social activities of the schools through community centers, parent-teacher associations and neighborhood meetings.

It has also been noted by the National Board that following the war there has been a great increase in interest on the part of the churches in the use of selected films, requests having come from states as widely scattered as Maine, Arkansas and Montana for advice regarding films of social value. A number of inquiries have also been received regarding films available for use by municipalities, conferences of city officials and social organizations. Among those seeking information for use on a national or state-wide scale are the American City Bureau, Publishers of the magazine "The American City," the New Jersey Bureau of Municipalities, and various chambers of commerce. The demand is not alone for industrial and civic films, but for those which present social problems in a dramatic way.

"Flapjacking in the Adirondacks."

The Paramount-Bray Pictograph No. 6110 has proof that all the population of the snow-infested regions do not pack bag and baggage and set out for Palm Beach or some other Southern resort. It shows that at Lake Placid in the Adirondacks, winter sports abound which are powerful enough in their lure to fascinate a goodly number of the wealthy. In this picture can be seen some of the ways in which these more fortunate folk amuse themselves. Among them is a chase over the mountains and through the woods which ends up with a flapjack party. The subject as presented is exhilarating in the extreme.

"Tin Can Toys."

The 6110th release of the Paramount-Bray Pictograph shows, among other things, how a variety of toys can be made from old tin cans with the aid of a pair of scissors and a bit of solder. Prof. Thatcher, "Tin-Can Daddy," as he is known to the children, is the exponent of the idea which may be welcome to children and lovers of children.

"Northern Sports in Southern Waters."

The Ford-Goldwyn "Northern Sports in Southern Waters" is an unusually attractive sporting picture. After taking a spin in an aeroplane along the Florida coast in the vicinity of Miami, and gliding merrily over the tops of houses, beautiful gardens and parks and wonderful automobile roads at Miami, we visit the golf links and the tennis courts, including an indoor court built by a sportsman for rainy days. Next we go to the beach and witness one of the nerviest of aquaplane acts, and also take in the display of styles among the bathing girls. The polo grounds come next, followed by a school for colored children, where we watch some colored boys indulge in their favorite sport of throwing dice. Motor boating is also included.

"What Uncle Sam Had Up His Sleeve."

The Ford-Goldwyn release "What Uncle Sam Had Up His Sleeve" gives the "once over" to the various things that the United States accomplished in the way of war-winning appurtenances. The making of steel helmets and army shoes is given a brief illustration. Tank manoeuvers, ships being launched, training camps that sprung up in the night, aeroplanes, and Liberty

"Cut It Out."

A splendid illustration of the cut glass industry is given in the Ford-Goldwyn weekly "Cut It Out." Glass blowing which dates back thousands of years is of course the first step in the making of glass articles, after the mixture of sand, red lead, potash and silica has been heated in a furnace of terrific temperature for a period of twenty-four hours. The shaping of a pitcher, the cutting of the hot glass with a pair of shears, and the placing of the handle which in its heated state wobbles about like a piece of rubber, are interesting features of the demonstration. Then there is the placing of the design on a goblet and the delicate work of etching, the cutting of designs in the glass with wheels of different kinds, and the final bathing and polishing of the articles. This is an excellent industrial number.

Prizma Pictures Trout Raising.

One of the most welcome subjects in the Rivoli Pictorial for the week of Mar. 24 illustrates in a graphic manner details in connection with the raising of trout. The fish ladder up which the trout leap step by step to reach the spawning ground reveals one of the peculiar habits of this species of fish, which leads them under present circumstances into the hands of the Game Commissioner and his agents, who strip the females of their eggs. The stripping of the eggs is shown in a closeup which is of special interest to amateurs in the fish hatchery business. Then there is the placing of the eggs in the hatcheries, and the elimination of injured eggs which after a short time turn white and are easy of detection. The actual hatching of the fish from the eggs, their transportation to other parts of the country to help stock fishless streams, when they have reached the age of two weeks, and pictures of the matured fish a few years later are scenes of special interest. The packing of trout eggs in ice to send to different parts of the world for hatching purposes is also shown. The value of the Prizma method in this interesting illustration is apparent.

Fred Levy Again Puts His Shoulder to Wheel

COLONEL FRED LEVY, president of the Big Feature Rights Corporation and holder of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit franchise for Kentucky and Tennessee, has been made chairman of the Kentucky Division in the National Campaign for the Jewish War Sufferers.

One of the first steps taken by Colonel Levy was to line up the motion picture theatres to aid him by running slides. The theatres have responded with their customary generosity in aiding any charity, and without exception have agreed to give all the film publicity asked in the three weeks' campaign.

Lee L. Goldberg, secretary of the Big Feature Rights Corporation, was appointed chairman of the film division by Colonel Levy.

OUR FRIEND, THE MOVIE.

Editorial from the Louisville Herald, March 6, 1919.

THOSE evenings when you feel so all-fired blue that life doesn't seem worth the daily effort of getting up and facing it again and you wonder what in Sam Hill we're all here for anyhow and where you're going—only you don't care much about that—zowie, those are rough evenings on the old disposition!

And then when you are in the deepest depths of discontent you stray despondently into a movie.

A comedy is on—one of those screams where a big dog paws for the goldfish in a small bowl and gets the bowl lodged on his paw and races around, cutting capers and knocking over comical looking cusses, and all that sort of stuff; and some queer individual with a couple of ingrowing eyes and a doleful face that looks as unhappy as you feel comes bursting right into the film like General Despair, seizing hold of the human system. That fellow is really funny, and he sure does do crazy stunts. Despite your own troubles the comedian and the dog and the goldfish and everything catch your interest. You forget yourself; you smile, you giggle, you snort!

Half an hour later you jauntily saunter forth, snapping your fingers in the face of care and ready for another bout with Old Boy Life and General Experience.

Thank heaven for the movies! They help keep us sane!

Picture Engineers to Meet April 14-15.

Attention is again called to the meeting of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, which will take place in Philadelphia on April 14, 15 and 16. Reservations are coming in satisfactorily and it is suggested that those who contemplate attending make their reservations without delay at the Hotel Adelphia, Chestnut and Thirteenth streets, where the convention will be held, as it is believed better opportunities will thus be offered for getting together informally and discussing the many questions which will arise.

Carl Edwin Corwin.

Corwin is Busy Cameraman Over France and Belgium

CARL EDWIN CORWIN, cameraman for the Community Motion Picture Bureau in France and Belgium, is busier running over all parts of both countries than the murderous star photographer of a metropolitan daily. He has no office hours and may be called upon at any moment of the day or night to "get" this commander or that distinguished personage, a pageant put on at one of the leave centres for A. E. F., or anything else in the way of novelty.

Corwin is familiar with all the war torn districts, and there isn't a Y.M. hut in France he has not visited. He lays claim to the distinction of being the first cameraman across the border when the American troops went into Mexico, and he has made travel films in India, China, the Philippines, and Africa.

How the Doric Advertised "Mickey."

When Kansas City saw the green tinted Irish booth with green leaf thatched roof in front of the Doric Theatre, it took notice and decided that something a little beyond the ordinary was going on inside. When it saw a race track elevated above the thatch roof, and a horse race in progress, it was more than confirmed in that opinion. So strongly did the advertising features take hold of the picturegoers that when the second night of "Mickey" came the waiting line for admission extended down the street two blocks. When the week it was billed for was over so many people had failed to get inside the door, and so many who had seen it wanted to see it again that Manager Eisner was obliged to contract for a renewal the next week. The Doric seats 800, and the week brought in $7,000.

Charles Hutchison Recovered.

Charles Hutchison, who co-stars with Anne Luther in "The Great Gamble," the fifteen-episode serial which Western Photoplays is producing for Pathe, has completely recovered from the injuries he received while taking part in one of the scenes down South.

Mr. Hutchison was thrown violently against a tree while riding down a mountain side and was severely shaken as a result.

Car Cards De Luxe.

THE New Liberty, St. Paul, sends in car cards, but no letter of explanation. We think that they would be hard to beat for general effect. It's a pity that they cannot be reproduced in colors, for the color effects are unusual. Usually but two colors are employed, but now and then a two-tone ink is used for a half-tone, though often three and four colors are worked up with only the standard inks. The first example shows what seems to be a stock design, but it is stock only when they have no other idea. About two-thirds of the generous batch sent in show this frame. This card for Clara Kimball Young, for example, has the cut printed in a two-tone reddish black. The rest of the card is done in orange red and light blue. Printing the blue on the orange gives almost a black. This works in the shadows of the statue as well as in the lettering below the house signature and in the lower margin. The "New Liberty" is a white letter with a heavy blue shading. On a part of this blue the orange is also run, giving a letter in white, blue and black. In the white space the "Clara Kimball" has a wider letter on the orange plate than for the blue. This gives a black letter with red shading. For the "Young" the letters are the same size, but the blue is set to the left of the orange, with a resulting black letter shaded in blue on the left and in red on the right. It is all very simple—when you have figured it out—and it is decidedly more effective than straight printing. It is not easy to describe, and the colors will not show in the cut, but no layman would suppose that these effects were gained with but three printings; practically two, since the third ink is used only for the cut. The second example is only red and black, yet the portrait seems to be done in several colors. The hair is black, but overprinted in red to give an auburn tint. The flesh is gained through black and red stipples, and the rose is in red as well. Only the two colors are used, but the average man would be willing to swear that four colors had been employed. The only other trick work here is the red shading on the name of the star, produced with straight type through the use of the same letter in both forms set off register. Simplicity is the keynote of this design, and that effect is carried out throughout the card. It has all of the value of art work with none of the expense. The Nazimova card is another red and blue, but here the red is more of a geranium. The cut is printed in a two-tone reddish violet. The only double printing is on the Nazimova, in which the two letters are in exact register. This is all type work, we presume, at least similar letters may be had from the type book, and we do not suppose that extra expense was incurred. The last showing is all straight work, red and blue. It is strong and forceful. Here the character of the story is rugged, and to use fancy printing would detract from the suggestion of strength, and so the printing is simple and sincere. This is one of the niceties of the treatment. Some twenty cards were sent in for comment, and not one of them but shows in the general treatment the type of story. The press work matches the theme. Dainty stories are treated daintily. Rugged stories are given a bolder treatment. It is a pleasure to see such excellent work, for it is artistic in every sense. We have seen far more elaborate cards; cards costing three to ten times as much to produce, but we have never seen more uniformly good work, and it is not cost but effect which really counts.

Another Car Card in which the Portrait Appears To Be Tinted, Though but Two Colors Are Used—Red and Black.

Holman Ads.

Here are two more displays from the Holman, Montreal, rather different from those recently shown, but which stand up even better than the others. On a crowded page the white space about the cut serves to get the eye and bring it down to this particular advertisement. The selling talk occupies but comparatively small space in the advertisement, yet it is easily read and gets over strongly. In "Who Will Marry Me?" the selling talk is in dialect. That for Carey is straight six point matter, set into a mortise in the cut, but it beats twice as much stuff in big type. If you have an engraver in your town any stock cut can be routed to give this effect. If you have not, you can often do the work yourself with a small cold chisel. It pays now and then.

The Trinity.

H. E. Gardner, of the Princess, Colorado Springs, sends in an advertisement that is not showy, not artistic, not even striking in one sense, and yet no one who reads the papers could escape the fact that he had Fred Stone in "The Goat" at the Princess. The three big facts were only in 48-point letters, but by keeping them away from other big type he makes it look like a poster. The rest is all small. Under the star, he gives three lines of identification, with four lines to the play under the title. The whole display was only three fives, and yet we have seen half pages that did not get the message over as clearly. Mr. Gardner does not ring the bell every time, but he hits a strong percentage of bull's-eyes.

Know Your Words.

If you don't know the meaning of a word, find out before you use it. The Victoria, Buffalo, says, "He tried to live the life of a raconteur on a salary of $12 a week," seeking to convey the suggestion that Bryant Washburn in "The Way of a Man with a Maid" was a devil of a fellow. He could be a raconteur on $11.50 for that matter, as the dictionary will show. Use only the words you are personally acquainted with, but enlarge your vocabulary.

Ruff Stuff.

Here's a funny one that Ralph Ruffner pulled when he had "Arizona." He wanted to get a cut of all of the principals in "Arizona." There was no still giving all the people, but there were stills (he doesn't always get stills, as he'll tell you himself), so he sat down and did a little thinking. One of the stills apparently was taken just off the other, as these cuts show. This gave Ruff all of the characters he wanted, plus an extra figure of Denton. Then Ruff's quick eye noted the bench in the background, and he had his idea. A newspaper artist would probably have mounted the two photographs and have painted in a backing. Had he seen the bench, too, he would have cut out and pasted. Ruff just used common sense instead of art training, and arrived at the same end by a short cut. With a sharp pen-knife he cut along the line of Hodgeman's arm and the tail of his blouse. He slipped the top photograph under the arm and coat and had them reproduced as a whole, routing the top part of the cut more to get the figures into relief than to match up the background. The result is shown in this reproduction of a five fourteens. It could not have been better had the photographer been instructed to make Ruff a still to his especial order. It was pure luck that Hodgeman and Estrella were looking in the right direction and with the proper expression, but it was hustle that let Ruff see how he could get an ensemble. Just a little cutting and two dabs of glue and he had cut-copy made to order. He is not always so lucky, and we have just consigned to the waste basket some heated remarks on some juvenile minded clerk in an exchange who sent him three poor half-tones and no stills whatever. We junked the note not because we are not in sympathy, but the boss likes the paper to go through the mails, and that stuff would have to go by express in a refrigerator car. And you cannot blame Ruff for kicking. He cleaned up big with "Arizona" because he was able to advertise it with a free arm movement and not with his fingers crossed.

A Bleich.

George Bleich, of Owensboro, Ky., believes in the square deal to his patron. He heard that "My Cousin" was not making good in spite of the presence of Caruso, and so, in announcing it, he gave his patrons the proper angle before they went in, and he made good with it that way. They went just to see Caruso, not to see a good picture, and so there was no complaint when they found that the picture was not good. This was the text he used:

Look, Maggie!

Here's the "gink" we've been hearing in our phonograph. He's in "movin' pitchers." Let's go see him at the Empress today. The play is—

"MY COUSIN."

They don't say it's much "pitcher," but what's the diff—let's see what this "Eyetalian" looks like.

That's just as easy as telling it is a good picture and then having to stand for the kicks when the spectators come out.

Poetical.

The Elmwood, Buffalo, is always doing something new in its program, and the latest is breaking into poetry for each attraction. Nine four-line stanzas in a week is no joke, but the Elmwood gets away with it. They are always up to something, and the program is read as religiously here as by the local fans. They have held to the same general form for a couple of years, and it is a form hard to improve upon, but it does not get stale with age, because they keep it fresh with new ideas. They have only a three by five page for each day, but in that they manage to tell of two features, name the small stuff, go into details and keep it readable. That's some job, if you want to know, but they manage to get away with it fifty-two weeks a year.

Too Elaborate.

Sometimes the Tudor Theatre, Atlanta, gets out a very pretty design and sometimes it doesn't. That for "Borrowed Clothes" belongs in the latter class. It's bad in a lot of ways. In the first place, it is badly laid out. The house name is obscured by the superimposed slogan. This may be all right if every one is looking for the Tudor advertisement, but unless they are it would be better to run the slogan under the name. It would be better in any case, for there is no real profit in taking a hundred square inches and not getting some display for the house. In the second place, the lettering is not plain. It sinks into the art work, and it is in poor taste to use so small a "Mrs." with which to qualify the name of the comedian, nor should his picture have been used. It suggests that he will be seen, though there is nothing in the advertisement or the press notice to indicate that one of his comedies is used. We think it poor business policy to play so heavily upon the Chaplin. Professionally, she is still Mildred Harris, and should be advertised as such. Any reference to her marriage should be subordinated to her own playing name. But the chief objection to this advertisement is its wretched art work. Sketching and fancy lettering should be employed to embellish not to obscure an announcement, and here the artist has done his best to hide the facts by running his lettering across three tints. It may look pretty, but it is not an advertisement.

A Five Tens from Atlanta which Is Badly Planned.

Keep Them Pleased.

A dissatisfied patron is not merely one patron lost. He may draw several from your list of regulars through personal influence. Be slow to give offense even if the patron may seem to be unreasonable.

Music Counts.

There are people here in town who take a half hour street car ride, passing half a dozen other houses, to attend a certain theatre where the music is made a feature. One man put it in a nutshell the other day. "I don't care much about pictures," he explained, "and I seldom go to see a particular picture. I know that I shall hear a good musical program, enjoy a comfortable seat, and perhaps a good picture. If the picture is not what I like, I know the music will be, so I am taking no chance." Do not merely have music to play the pictures. Offer some good musical selections. It will pay you to build up along these lines.

More of the Bride.

We shall be rather glad when Mildred Harris gets her own name back—if she ever does. Here is the way the Coliseum, Seattle, handled the subject. We think that a prettier portrait might have been selected, but the Seattle papers do not give good results from any cuts as a rule, and small stuff is murdered. These displays are each four fifteens, and are notable chiefly for the manner in which the type is displayed. There is not a line in either display that cannot be read at a glance, and the entire message is gotten over without difficulty. That on the right is a coming and the other a current space. It will be noted that the chief sales talk is in the advance, where it should be. Not the lines on the left:

Two Four Fifteens in Which the Layout Permits the Talk to be Used to the Greatest Advantage.

It started today.
It ends Tuesday.
There will be crowds.

This will make a good pick-up. But don't emphasize the crowds too strongly. Lately, we saw Ralph Ruffner's "Try to get in" amended to "Bring your lunch and try to get in." This was from an Eastern paper, and we think that the addition will discourage many from trying to get in, because it gives over-emphasis to the difficulty in gaining admission. Tell them to come early and you have an argument. Tell them it is almost impossible to get in, and many will not try.

Old Style.

This three fours from the Royal, St. Louis, tries to get too much into the space. It looks more crowded than it is because it has been badly set, but there is too much copy there at best. Much could have been done by cutting out a lot of the rule work at the top and by setting the two banks in an eight-point roman instead of using a bold face. This would have given greater value to the more important black letters, would have been easier to read, and would have given some white space for contrast. This is old-fashioned composition; the sort of stuff that would bring joy to the heart of a small town job compositor, but it is not good advertising. Greater use should have been made of the name of the star, who is thrown to the bottom with two of her support. It is a good plan to play up Miss Weber's productions, but the star should not be neglected. She is advertising capital, too.

Steve Stunts.

Steve Farrar believes in taking what advertising space he needs instead of taking a regular space no matter what he has. The other day he had a good story. He felt that he did not need to spend too much, so he took a double nine and a half, got a fairly good display for the name and title and then told about the story in a way to arouse curiosity. He did not take three inches just because the other house had. He took what he needed, but he felt that he needed to fight harder when the other house had "The Cavell Case," so he hit up the display, taking three eights. He knows he has got to fight and fight hard to hold his crowd. He knows, too, that it will be wise not to talk too much, for he has not as much to talk about, so he gets interest in his story and stops. He has three comedies, and he counts on his comedies to do the rest. Apparently comedies pull in Harrisburg, for they run two and three to the bill as a rule, and especially when there is something at the other house to be fought. And, talking of comedies, we show two examples of the manner in which Steve handles his smaller features. We like the bottom style the best. Rules clear across the space should never be permitted. Paneling is better, but the main thing is to get the bill considered as a whole, and this cannot be done if the entire layout is all tied up with bits of rule work. If you will look at the first advertisement of these three you will see where the misplacing of a rule makes a comedy "Guaranteed the best comedy-drama of the year." This line applies to the feature, but it is cut off from the feature and put into a pen with the comedy, from which it cannot escape. Both houses are going through that personal guarantee period, but they make the mistake of using it too often and without system. The Hardwick Brothers, who were the first to bring this idea to a science, made it mean something when they used it. It was not just another advertising line, but really a personal guarantee. They meant it just that way.

Small and Good.

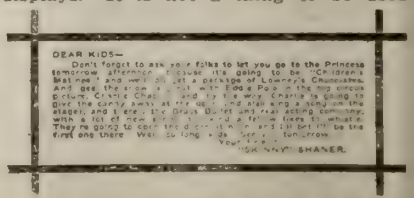
Here is a double two from the Princess, Calgary, Can. It is not large, but it stands out on the page above much larger displays. It is not a thing to be used



DEAR KIDS—
Don't forget to ask your folks to let you go to the Princess tomorrow afternoon because it's going to be "Children's Matinee" and we'll all get a package of Lowney's Chocolates, and gee, they're good, so don't forget. Bring a Pass in the top corner. Crystal Chats and by the way Charlie is going to give the candy away at the end and also sing a song on the stage, and I see the Drum Duet and that acting company, with a lot of new faces in it, so what's the use, they're going to come and I'll let it be the first one there. Well so long for this time.

regularly, but for a "just once" it works well, and many persons will stop to read through curiosity who would pass it over were it of the same display type as the rest. Try it some time and see how it works for you.

Give Them a Chance.

If you run a transient house and depend upon your lobby showing to get them in, don't make the mistake of filling your lobby so full of attractors that they cannot get in. Give them a chance. # Tips for the House Manager

Conducted by E. T. KEYSER

Making the Aisle Safe for Your Patrons' Feet

A LARGE, late patron of the picture show stumbled down the dim aisle which, to him, in contrast with outside daylight, was pitchy darkness. He walked by faith and not by sight, and apparently his faith was missing on two cylinders.

Four rows from the rear he connected with a cane that was projecting slightly into the passageway, recovering his balance, but losing his temper, the large patron progressed screenward only to come in contact with a carelessly placed foot of some one who had become so interested in the picture as to fail to realize that he was extending over the building line.

Even at that, the large and late one would have finally made a safe mooring but for the sad fact that the occupant of another aisle seat had been shopping with voluminous results and had carefully placed said carefully wrapped results alongside his seat while removing his gloves.

The bundle was the large one's Waterloo, and after untangling his vocabulary and getting rid of a hurried apology for being on both earth and the package, he retired without even asking for a rebate on the war tax.

All of which might have been avoided if the house manager had permitted a little helpful illumination to guide the feet of his patrons in their search for seats.

It was to prevent such little unpleasantnesses as we have described that the Brookins Company, of Euclid avenue and East Eighteenth street, Cleveland, devised the Aislelite, which makes the aisle a safely lighted passageway at all times without interfering with screen effects.

The Aislelite, as the illustration shows, resembles one of those desk lights which put all the light on the desk while keeping the glare out of one's eyes. It is to be attached to the seat frames directly under the arm rest and lights the aisle sufficiently to make walking therein comfortable and safe without spoiling the picture.

The number of Aislelites required for a house depends upon the number of rows into which the seating is divided and also the number of aisles. It may be computed upon the following basis:

For a level or sloping floor, commence with the last row on each aisle, and on that seat and each succeeding sixth seat install the light, then on the opposite side of the same aisle install the Aislelite, commencing with the third seat from the rear and continue with each sixth seat. Where steps in the aisle cut off the diffusion of light, the fixtures should be but four rows apart.

It will be seen that on level or sloping aisles three fixtures will be required to light seven rows of seats, while in a stepped aisle three fixtures will light five rows.

The current consumption may be calculated on a basis of ten watts for each fixture, as the Aislelite takes the ten-watt Mazda sign lamp with an S-14 bulb.

They Recognize a Good Thing.

I have received the following communications in regard to the First Aid Kit for Busted Cap Screws, which was illustrated and described in this department in the issue of March 22:

Endicott, N. Y., March 24, '19.

E. T. Keyser:

We were very much interested in your news item regarding the First Aid Kit for Busted Cap Screws. We are somewhat surprised to learn that there are some folks still in existence who have something that is worthy to exploit, like the kit that you refer to, and do not know the value of proper advertising necessary to reap the desired profit that we are all looking for. We would like one of the kits and will appreciate any information that you may supply us with so that we may add one or more sets of these handly little outfits to our equipment in the different houses that we operate.

Thanking you in advance for the above favor, with best wishes, we beg to remain,

Yours truly,
ENDICOTT THEATRE CO.,
Benj. H. Dittrich,
Manager.

Balto., March 25, 1919.

E. T. Keyser:

Dear Sir—Kindly furnish me with information of the following: First Aid Kit for Busted Cap Screws. Where can I get and the cost of same. It's something that I have wished for from the beginning of my projectionist career.

Thanking you for your trouble, I remain,

F. CLARENCE GROTE.

I have advised Messrs. Dittrich and Grote as to where the kits may be procured, and if any of the rest of you want a set will be glad to help you out.

Projection Department

Conducted by F. H. RICHARDSON

Important Notice.

OWING to the mass of matter awaiting publication, it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost), will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

Both the first and second sets of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

Lens Charts for Framing.

In response to requests from several progressive projectionists we have had the lens charts printed on heavy paper, size 11x17 inches, for framing.

These charts should form a part of the equipment of every projectionist. Remit the sum of 50 cents and they (both charts on one sheet) will be sent you in a mailing tube. You can then have them framed for your projection room. They are of size which shows up very clearly. The figures on Chart No. 1 are ¼-inch high. Those of Chart No. 2 a bit smaller. There is no longer the slightest question as to the value of these charts. Make them a permanent part of your equipment and be up to date.

Addresses Wanted.

This department has occasional inquiries for addresses of dealers in motion picture supplies in various cities or parts of the country. For instance, just now a large manufacturer asks addresses of all reliable dealers on the Pacific Coast.

My records in this are a bit out of date. Will dealers kindly send me a letterhead, so that I may get an up-to-date list of addresses?

A Fine Projection Plant.

W. W. Brumberg, to whom I remove my lid as being a high-class projectionist, sends the following interesting communication from Douglas, Arizona:

"Dear Mr. Richardson: Well, I am back again, after a year and nine months in Uncle Sam's navy. Suppose I had better re-introduce myself, as events happen pretty fast with you, and it is easy to forget. While on your Big Trip in 1917 you stopped in Tucson, Arizona, and addressed the theatre men there. Might add that you woke up the exhibitors to such an extent that their projectionists were given the right kind of consideration. You also inspected the projection rooms of the city. I was then in charge of projection at the Opera House, and in your account of your visit you were good enough to say some very kind things about its equipment.

"Well, now that I am back in the game, I hope to be able to contribute to the department right along. I only hope that in the future I may get as much good out of it as I did in the past.

"Am now in charge of projection at the Grand Theatre. Those I am working for are as keenly interested in high-class screen results as I am myself. They realize the fact, which so many do not, viz., that excellence of screen results is very largely what they have to sell; hence, the higher the class of projection the more seats will be filled, and the wider will be the smile of the cashier. This theatre has recently been completed. It cost a quarter of a million dollars (2,500,000 ten cent or an even million twenty-five cent admissions.—Ed.), and one might almost say it was built around the projection room. The projection room occupies an ideal location. It is in the center of the front of the balcony, roof of room being sloped so that people seated to rear of it have a perfect view of screen. Distance of projection, 68 feet. The room is of reinforced concrete throughout. All wiring is in conduit. There are proper inlet ducts for fresh air and an exhaust vent. Ports are of proper size. Have two De Luxe Motiograph projectors, but same may soon be switched to another of our theatres and another popular make of projector installed in their place. There is a transverter, type L, 50-50, machine, a motor rewind, framing lamps, automatic dowsers, same as at Opera House, Tucson, which were described in the department June 2, 1917, issue. There are dimmers in series, with dimmers on the stage for different colored lights in the indirect bowls and alcove lighting system. There are lockers, running water, typewriter, and many other things which go to make the projection room equipment ideal. The room is 11x14, with two adjoining rooms, one for generator and other for lockers. Entrance to projection room is from mezzanine floor.

"The theatre seats 1,650; all seats upholstered. Everything is commodious. The owners believed in providing comfort for patrons, rather than trying to crowd in every possible seat. The picture is a nineteen-footer.

"As I was in the service when the December 28 issue came out I missed the new lens chart. Will you therefore give me the correct lineup. Use 45 amperes D. C. Projection lenses, 1⅝ inches diameter. Back focus, 2 7/16 inches. Use ⅝-inch cored upper and 11/16-inch Silvertip lower. Have good light at present, but have a hunch that it can be improved, and want you to help me do it. As soon as I hear from you will install correct lineup in the way of condensers, etc. Hope you have fully recovered from your recent trouble."

Mighty glad to welcome you back, Brother Brumberg. The profession cannot afford to lose your kind. I would call the attention of exhibitors and architects to the fact that in very many cases it is entirely practical to locate the projection room as has been done in the Grand. Reinforced concrete is excellent, though I would have preferred hollow tile as being lighter and more thoroughly soundproof. But that is not a criticism by any manner of means. You surely have a most excellent equipment. Don't know whether to congratulate you or your employers more heartily. Guess it is you, however, because they will reap their reward every hour the theatre operates. But I must most earnestly compliment them on their good sense and sound judgment in the matter of location and equipment of the projection room. When I look around and see the number of examples of plain, unvarnished stupidity in both these items, a projection installation such as yours is like unto shade and cool drink after a day in the desert without water.

As to your optical train, you can secure copy of the lens charts, on heavy paper, size 11x17 inches, for framing, by remitting the sum of fifty cents to the Moving Picture World, 516 Fifth avenue, New York City. Every up-to-date projectionist should secure a copy of the charts and have it framed for his projection room. You are using 45 amperes D. C. Correct line-up will be as follows: Two 6.5 condenser lenses, spaced with their apexes not to exceed 1/16-inch apart. This latter is imperative. Distance center of condenser combination to aperture just a trifle more than 17.5 inches. Projection lenses are of sufficient diameter. As to shutter position, the best you can do is to get the shutter as close to the lens as you can. Your condenser aereal image will, I am pretty sure, be inside the lens barrel. It should be about 6.75 inches from the aperture. We shall be glad, of course, to have your contributions.

By the way, you don't mean 11/16-inch silvertile lower do you? You should have about a 5/16, I think.

CARBON STUBS WANTED.

Some weeks ago we asked for carbon stubs, both A. C. and D. C., from projectionists using amperage in excess of 60 and up to 100.

The response has not been at all satisfactory. These stubs, which need not be more than an inch long (it is the crater I want), are to be used in extending the lens table from 60 to 100 amperes. Only upper stubs are wanted, and it is imperative that the exact ameperage be given.

Surely you can help to that extent. Don't think the "other fellow" will send stubs. DO IT YOURSELF, because there is no danger of having too many. The more the better. Get busy.

Illumination Increases with Amperage.

For lo this long time we have all been puzzled by the fact that whereas backtesting seems to prove that only a certain, and relatively small definite area of the crater is available to the lens system of the projector, still the screen illumination unquestionably does increase with increased amperage without any altering of the optical train. This enigma was further complicated by the fact that whereas up to about 60 amperes D. C. the gain through increased amperage seemed fairly steady, beyond that point it decreased gradually, and with increasing slowness, until at about 120 amperes it apparently entirely disappeared. At least it became entirely imperceptible to the eye.

Several attempts to solve the riddle have been made. Lester Bowen, projectionist, attributed it to forced volatization of carbon, which, according to his theory, caused increased brilliancy of the crater per unit of area. This department neither accepted or denied this explanation. It was inclined to doubt, though unable to offer proof that friend Bowen's theory was in error. Mr. Mott, of the National Carbon Company laboratories, offered an explanation that the increased amperage stabilized the position of the area of greatest crater brilliancy, which, at lower amperage, had, said he, tendency to wander. This theory we took immediate issue with, since it seemed to be disputed by known facts. And there the matter rested up to date.

But now comes that old war horse, John Griffith, Ansonia, Conn., who has already, through this department, done so much wonderful work on the optics of the projector—work of real, practical value to the projectionist, and advances the following, which, on the face of it, looks good to yours truly—so good, in fact, that we have already arranged for experiments which will prove or disprove its correctness. The resul twill be hereto appended. Mr. Griffith says:

"The subject of this letter is found on page 1036, February 26 issue, in which is found your discussion of the theory attributed to Mr. Mott, of the National Carbon Company laboratories. I was greatly interested in your comments thereon. I do not think I have contributed my theory on this subject, which is a matter to which I have given much thought.

"The explanation of added screen brilliancy with increased amperage, which means additional crater area, without changing the factors of the optical train or altering their adjustment is, after all, a very simple one. Each point of the entire area of the front condenser surface is projecting a complete image of the crater to some part of the spot. This is easily verified. The size of the crater images projected by a condenser-surface point is, however, much smaller than the spot itself. These images will even be found, where ordinary amperage is used, to be smaller than the aperture opening, this by reason of the fact that the ratio of enlargement between the size of the crater and the size of the spot is different when projected by the whole condenser and when projected by a single point of th econdenser surface. This being the case the crater image as projected by a point of the condenser surface, when ordinary amperage is used, can be enlarged considerably before having an area equal to that of the aperture opening.

"To understand this matter fully one must be familiar with the fact that the 'spot' is a complicated affair, composed of innumerable small crater images projected by pin-points of the front condenser surface, the images being somewhat scattered. This statement may be verified by moving a plate with a small hole in its center across the condenser surface, being sure the hole rests snugly against the lens. This hole must, of course, be in the center of a plate large enough to cover the rest of the surface of the lens. It will be found that the image projected through this small hole will move about within the limits of the area of the 'spot.' That is, of course, due to the fact that the crater images from all points of the surface of the condenser cannot be focused so that they reach the axis of the condenser ray at any one plane (At any one distance from the condenser. —Ed.).

"Having grasped these facts, let us now revert to our original subject, viz.: What the effect of increased amperage, hence increased crater area, will be. First, increased area of crater will not only automatically increase the size of the spot, as a whole, but it will also increase the size (area) of the individual crater images projected by each pinpoint of the condenser surface. This is quite obvious. It is the simplest of simple optical laws and is infallible in its operation. This fact being established, and inasmuch as the point crater images are smaller in area than is the aperture opening, when using ordinary amperage (by ordinary amperage anything below say 60 is meant.—Ed.) it follows that with any increase in current strength, causing increase in crater area, there would be increase in the area of the individual images, which means that there would be additional light flux through the aperture. And this gain would continue as crater area is increased up to the point where the area of the separate crater images became equil in area to the area of the aperture opening. To put it in other words, more light would pass through each point of the condenser surface as crater area is increased. This added light would, however, only be entirely utilized at the screen from those images became equal in area to the area aperture center—which strike the aperture squarely—and this is only a relatively small percentage of the whole. A very large percentage of the images overlap on the cooling plate, so that only a portion of their area falls upon the aperture opening. The rest of their light is lost.

"When crater area has, by increased amperage, been increased to the point where images which have their axis at or near the center of the aperture opening completely cover the opening, then no further gain in light is possible, except from those images which overlap the aperture and cooling plate, or, in other words, those images which are only partly effective at the aperture. It will thus readily be seen that added crater area (amperage) will contribute some more light to the screen, but as amperage is increased the proportional increase in effective light is diminished because of the fact that more and more of these overlapping images are extended over the entire aperture, until a point is reached where all but the very outlying images do so cover the aperture, or nearly cover it. Beyond this point, while there may still be some added gain, through increase of amperage, from the outer images, it becomes too slight to be discerned by anything but the most delicate light-measuring instruments.

"We thus see that added screen brilliancy from increased amperage does not prove or mean that there is any increase in crater brilliancy per unit of area."

The test, which was made in the testing room of the Precision Machine Company, witnessed by E. S. Porter, fully bore out Brother Griffiths' theory. And thus has Griffiths, through this department, solved another mystery which has been puzzling use for lo an extended period. We used a pinhole 5/1000 of an inch in diameter, and the test bore out every one of Griffiths' arguments. Also it showed us a new way to study the arc, especially as to uniformity of illumination of crater. In attempting this experiment, which you can all try for yourselves, remember two things, viz.: The hole must be a very small one and must be flat against the lens surface all the time. It should be in the center of a sheet metal plate about ten inches square, so that the surplus will keep the lens covered while you move the hole to any part of the lens you desire. You will find there will be a central bright spot, surrounded by a wide halo. This halo is caused by spherical aberration. The bright spot is what you must watch.

Current Effect on Crater.

On page 1495, March 15 issue, appears an excellent article by G. F. Benkelman, of the Speer Carbon Company laboratories, St. Marys, Pa., under the caption, "Current Effect on Craters." This article is the first we remember having appeared in this department since its inception in March, 1910, without first having subject to the scrutiny of the conductor. When it came, however, we were flat on our back, all in, down, and pretty darned nearly out, and for the very first time in the history of the department it began to look as though there might be a shortage of "copy." So in it went. But we are not thus to be cheated of our just due. We feel we must take a whack at it, if only to ruffle neighbor Benkelman's feelings.

In the first place, let us point out the fact that the crater angle shown in Figure 1 is decidedly inefficient. The crater can readily be maintained at a considerably less angle to the lens than that shown, and the more nearly the crater is parallel to the lens the (a) greater the light flux available to the lens, and (b) the more nearly the crater image can be focused in one plane. I would also call attention to the fact that with the test plate located as shown any variation of crater angle in the various tests would have a decided effect on results, though very likely this point was carefully checked up at each test.

We note, with considerable satisfaction, that Mr. Benkelman's tests have sustained the position of this department and its editor in one important item. He says, third column, page 1495, March 15 issue, second paragraph: "It is to be noted that the c. p. of the ⅝ carbon is greater than the ¾, and that the ¾ is greater than the ⅞, at the same current value.

Examination of the pages of back numbers of this department will prove that, while we have accepted, broadly, the statements of the authorities, that crater c. p. is constant at 130 c. p. per square mm, when cored carbons are used, still, in our opinion, this would be modified to some extent unless the carbon be worked at or near capacity. We based this view on the fact that where a carbon is worked much under capacity there is considerable comparatively cool carbon lying near the crater, which could not, it seemed to us, help but act to cool the crater surface to some extent.

Mr. Benkelman arrives at the conclusion that maximum crater c. p. is only had when carbons are worked just below their penciling point—which means, in other words, when worked right up to capacity. This appeals to us as sound logic. We are of the opinion that Mr. Benkelman's conclusion in this respect is absolutely correct. But either we do not correctly understand curve 1080, or else there is something wrong somewhere. As we understand it, the c. p. advances in a perfectly straight line as the amperage is raised from about 37 to about 65 when using ⅝ carbon. Now, since 37 is far below the normal capacity of a ⅝ carbon, it seems to us the line should not be straight, but should curve slightly from 37 amperes to about 40, and then rather sharply up until needling starts. We should appreciate an explanation from Friend Benkelman of this seeming contradiction. The results shown in curves 1082 and 1083 seem to indicate need for more study of this phase of matters. If it is true that crater area increases with increase in size of carbons, current remaining the same, and that crater brilliancy per unit of area decreases as area increases, then the statement that crater brilliancy is constant at 130 c. p. (cored carbons) per square mm, regardless of current strength, is in a measure overturned, and would only hold true with carbons loaded just to full capacity. But we are not yet prepared to accept this as fact without further tests. That the c. p. per square mm may be changed somewhat by radiation by reason of proximity of mass of comparatively cool carbon, where carbons are worked very much below capacity, we do believe, but that crater size changes merely through change in carbon size we cannot yet accept as fact, except in cases where the change is from a carbon working above capacity to one working below capacity, or vice versa.

For the two grades used for the tests, presumably Speer and National, though that is only a guess, Mr. Benkelman places the penciling point at 65 amperes for ⅝, 80 for ¾ and 100 for ⅞-inch carbons. This would indicate a very decided tendency on the part of projectionists to underload their carbons. According to Benkelman's conclusions, ⅝ carbons should be used at about 60 amperes, and ⅞ at about 75, which would seem to indicate need for a finer subdivision of sizes. If his conclusions are correct, we should have a 12/16-inch cored carbon, which would operate economically at about 68 amperes; also we need to use more ½-inch carbons, and need a size between half-inch and five-eighths. As a matter of fact, if Benkelmen be right, practically all theatres using less than 60 amperes D. C. are using too large carbons.

But there is another side to this whole argument, viz., working carbons right up to the limit of capacity means very close attention on the part of projectionists. He cannot be rewinding carbons or doing other stunts. He must be right there on friend job, else he will have trouble with his light pronto. But if Benkelman is right in his conclusions, then the projectionist who does place results ahead of convenience, and who is a projectionist, not a rewind and general utility boy, can get considerably increased screen illumination by working his carbons at just below the penciling point. Anyhow, the point is one we should understand, and we thank Friend Benkelman for giving us the data.

We would like reports from projectionists who test this matter out. Let your report cover results as to increased illumination, steadiness of operation of the arc and such other points as seem of importance or interest.

Suggestion to Precision Company.

John Griffiths, Ansonia, Connecticut, says:

"Tried to make myself a counting device a year or so ago, same to be used as change-over signal. It is a good stunt, but in my opinion, the counter face should be like a clock dial, and should be located on the front wall—something a fellow can see plainly from any part of the room. Drive could be by means of a flexible shaft."

Cannot agree with you this time, Brother Griffiths. In the first place such a device would be too costly; also, whereas it is possible the Simplex Counter might be somewhat improved as to location and size (I do not know as to that), it is unnecessary, in my judgment, to have it on the front wall. If the projectionist is beside his machine, where he belongs, he should have no difficulty in seeing the counter as at present located.

A Good Laugh Alee Samee.

A former bunkie of my son wrote: "Well, I'm a civilian since ten o'clock this morning. Guess I'll have taps played over friend uniform and then bury it with military honors. Gee, it feels good to be one's own boss again. I do hope there'll be no more "Me und Gott wars" in my time, because if there are I am going to appear in the role of spectator. I'll hide in some large forest, and if the military authorities desire my distinguished services they will have to burn said forest and sift the ashes. I've done mine, thanks, and enough is quite sufficient. Selah. I have spoken!"

To Tell When the Intermittent Moves.

J. L. Bolivida, New York City, asks:

"For certain reasons I desire to be able to tell precisely when the intermittent sprocket starts to move. For my purpose it is necessary that the exact beginning of movement be determined. Neither the fingers or the eyes are accurate enough for my purpose. Can you suggest a more accurate method?"

A plan which will meet your requirements was suggested to this department by one of its correspondents some time ago. In the illustration we see how it works. A heavy weight is laid on the machine table, or on a block high enough so that the weight will come opposite the top of the intermittent sprocket. Next we secure a straight, thin piece of spring steel, such as, for instance, the mainspring of a watch is made of, or a trifle heavier. This strip may be any convenient length, say four inches. One end of it is placed against an intermittent sprocket tooth, and the other against the weight, as shown, the weight being shoved tight enough so that all lost motion in the sprocket is taken up. Having arranged matters thus it will readily be seen that the instant the sprocket begins to move the spring will begin to bow, either up or down, and the movement will be readily felt or seen. And there you are.

Effect of Changes on Optical Train.

From the South comes the following:

"We are using 60 amperes A. C. through an A. C. compensarc. Two 6.5 piano convex condenser lenses. Distance centre of condenser combination, 18.5 inches; 5.5 E. F. projection lens, which gives us a 12-foot 8-inch picture at 79 feet. We use National White Light ⅝-inch carbons. Our shutter is set 12.5 inches from the aperture (aerial image, 0.8x1.1 inch), with its blades cut down to minimum. Our projection lens is 1.75 inches in diameter.

"We are enlarging the theatre and will have a distance of projection of 97 feet instead of 79, and the screen will be 16 feet, which same we propose to cover as nearly as may be.

"According to your charts published December 28 last, which we have framed, we will need the same lens combination and distance dondenser to aperture as we now have, and the same projection lens will give us about a 15.5-foot picture at the 97-foot throw. Query: Is this correct? Also do you think we can get enough light with 60 amperes A. C. for the enlarged picture using extra-lite shutters, which same we have bought and expect daily to arrive? We understand the diffusion of light on the larger screen as compared to the smaller one, but we would like to have your opinion, as it will not be possible to actually try the thing ou tuntil some time later. If it develops that we cannot get enough light at 60 amperes, would it be practical to increase amperage to 70 or 80 by hooking up two compensarcs in multiple, and, if so, what combination of condensers, distances, etc., will be required? Also, would the ⅝ carbons be large enough, and what effect would the increased heat have on the condenser? Would meniscus bi-convex help much. Tried to buy some, but have been unable to get them. Have tried to make plain to you what we want to know. We are subscribers and readers of the Moving Picture World. We have heard of your illness and hope that you are on the high road to recovery."

As clear, understandable and explicit data as I have received for a good, long while. Many thanks for your good wishes. I am all right again, thanks be! And now to business. The lens charts are based primarially on the minimum distance a condenser lens can be placed from a condenser lens without excessive breakage. This means that the various combinations are based on amperage, and that the same amperage calls for the same combination in all cases, regardless of all other considerations. The combinations for A. C. are much less in number than those for D. C., there being, in fact, only two, viz.: For 40 and for 60 amperes, which means that up to 50 you would use the 40 ampere combination and above that the 60 ampere one. Under present conditions, with a projection lens 1.75 inches in diameter, you are losing considerable light. Unfortunately I have not the figures by me just now, but would estimate it at 10 per cent. of the total. The increased distance of projection will act to slightly lessen the back focus of your projection lens, though not much. Meniscus bi-convex condensers (see chart for combination) would lessen, if not entirely, stop the loss of light referred to, hence would help.

You should be able to get a very fair projection light on a 15.5-foot picture with 60 amperes A. C., provided you have a good screen. It will not, however, be as brilliant as your present light, hence may not be satisfactory. Yes, you can hitch two A. C. compensarcs in multiple, and by setting them both at 40 can get 80 amperes, which will give you a very excellent projection light. On the whole, however, I would advise you to try out the 60 amperes first. You seem to be careful, painstaking men who will get all there is in the 60 out, and I have seen some excellent pictures put on with 60 amperes A. C. If you think it advisable to use 70 or 80 amperes, however, you will, I think, find the 60 ampere condenser combination O. K. up to 70 amperes, but if you use 80, then I think you will find one 6.5 and one 7.5 plano convex about right, with 17 inches from centre of condenser combination to aperture. In other words, the 50 ampere D. C. set. But if you can get M. Bi-C. lenses, then a 6.5 meniscus and an 8.5 bi-convex, with 19 inches, will be better. If you can get 2-inch diameter projection lenses, then there will be only a small light loss with plano convex lenses. Would prefer you to consult the National Carbon Company, Cleveland, Ohio, as to size carbons required.

I note what you say about being subscribers and readers. That latter is the big thing. There are too many who subscribe, glance through, but fail to really read understandingly.

How Westinghouse Helps the Producer

We comfortably seat ourselves in a "movie" theatre and watch an absorbing tale of romance or adventure unravel before our eyes. Yet, we little realize how intimately the name Westinghouse is intertwined with our delight. The produce pictures with great artistic and mechanical perfection. Their productions are universally popular. When a "set-up" is taken, requiring artificial illumination, such as night scenes or other interior work, you will find Westinghouse apparatus assisting in the job. Two Westinghouse Motor Generator Sets are used to supply direct current for studio lighting.

Perfect Illumination

is secured with this arrangement, and the directors and "movie stars" work with the encouraging knowledge that the lighting effects are the best—while the camera man is assured that no flicker will interfere with the distinctness of his photography.

The utility of Westinghouse products, so generally linked with huge power house and general industrial needs, has been demonstrated in even the field of entertainment. Write us and let us explain how we assist producers in their lighting problems.

MESSRS. SMITH AND KELLY GO SLEUTHING

And Succeed in Solving the Most Mysterious Disappearance of Many Pittsburgh Subjects

"DOC" SMITH, of Pathe and T. P. Kelly, of the Paramount, recently succeeded in solving the mystery of many lost reels of film from Pittsburgh film exchanges. After performing a series of Craig Kennedy stunts they located 29 reels of stolen film in the basement of a house in Mount Washington, carried there by a gang of boys who, with the aid of an old projection machine, were in the habit of giving private shows for the benefit of their youthful companions.

The reels recovered belonged to various exchanges as follows: Max Herring, 2 reels; General Film Co., 15; Goldwyn, 3; World, 1; Famous Players, 4; Pathe, 4.

It seems the boys were in league with an employee of one of the theatres on the hilltop, who delivered the films to exchanges. His plan of operation was to deliver his own film to the exchange and then pick up any loose reels that were lying about.

Smith and Kelly apprehended the boys while they were in the midst of a "show," and some of the lads got away. However the ringleaders were caught, but at the earnest solicitation of the boys' parents they were released. The police were notified, however, and they will keep a watch on the boys in order to prevent a repetition of the offense.

The Finkel Brothers Start an Exchange.

William H. and Marcus Finkel, exhibitors of the South Side, Pittsburgh, have purchased the rights to the new Shorty Hamilton features and have opened an exchange at 414 Ferry Street, Pittsburgh, to be known as the Globe Film Attractions. Several of the Shorty Hamilton features are already on hand and a number of bookings have already been taken. It is likely that the Globe will add other pictures to its line in the near future.

The Finkel Brothers have no intention of selling their Colonial Theatre. The house will be looked after by the boys' father, H. Finkel.

He is in Germany at present, with the 11th Infantry, 5th Division. He sends his best regards to all the boys at home.

The completion of this house, which will be thoroughly modern in every respect, is expected by the first of September.

Sanford Makes Good.

UP in the Highland Park region of South avenue, Rochester, things are somewhat livelier since E. J. Sanford took over the Princess Theatre. The district is one of the best residential parts of the city. About a year ago Mr. Sanford bought the Princess and made himself a powerful figure in the neighborhood. Now within a block of him everything bears the trade-mark "Princess." There are a bakery, ice cream parlor, shoe shine stand, photo studio, book store and many other places which are known as the Princess something or other. And on top of it all nearly every night a long line is seen in front of the theatre waiting to get in. It is rumored that Mr. Sanford is to be pushed into the race for alderman next election.

Discouraging the Lobby Loiterers.

A new chief of police has introduced an innovation in Dunkirk. Hitherto the youths of the city have been wont to loiter around the entrances to the picture houses, making it more or less unpleasant for showgoers and those who stopped to look over the paper on display. The chief has ruled that the gang must not congregate around the theatres and he is backing up his mandate with both physical and moral force. Naturally, the new order of things is pleasing to the managers.

Through the courtesy of Palmore & Holmand, of Baltimore, the ladies were entertained with a five reel picture after their first meeting.

Cahill Is Aggressive.

Building his own twenty-four sheet holders, around each of the two country towns where he operates a theatre, and then going out in his automobile and posting the bills himself, is the method which J. E. Cahill, of Centreville, Md., uses in addition to the town papers to advertise his shows.

Martin Johnson, City Court Bailiff of Gary, Also Insists That He Has No Passes to Distribute

MARTIN JOHNSON'S famous film, "Cannibals of the South Seas," drew big crowds at the Orpheum Theatre at Gary, Ind., recently, but caused Gary's own Martin Johnson, baliff of the city court there, a whole lot of discomfort.

Johnson said that there were any number of people in Gary who thought the film belonged to him and almost drove him to distraction by their requests for passes to "his show."

"I never saw a cannibal, never was eaten by a cannibal and never ran a cannibal show," was the bailiff's answer to persons who called him up to ask about free tickets.

Church Will Run Sunday Picture.

The motion picture exhibitors at Indiana Harbor, Ind., have encountered some competition outside of the regular trade. St. John's Catholic church there recently bought a projecting machine and in the future will give motion picture shows on Sunday nights.

The Rev. E. Stachowiak, pastor, said he decided that if the members of his parish desired motion picture shows on Sundays—and there was every evidence that they did—he believed the church ought to present the opportunity and as a result bought the new machine.

Three hundred additional chairs have been added to the seating capacity of the auditorium of the school building, where the pictures are to be shown on Sunday afternons and nights. An admission of twenty-five cents will be charged for adults and ten cents for children, the proceeds to go to the church.

The equipment is less than one year old and probably will be ready for use at the Grand early this month.

Mr. O'Donnell also announced that several other improvements are contemplated at the Grand in the near future. An Eastern hat concern recently leased the building occupied by the Princess Theatre at Evansville and, unable to find another suitable location, the management decided to quit the business.

The Eureka Theatre, at What Cheer, Iowa, has been rechristened the Columbia, having been completely overhauled, and is now under the management of Leo Muhme, a returned soldier. The First National pictures will be handled as specials at advanced admission prices backed with big publicity campaigns in city and county.

Bremerton Manager Is Also Up Against Effects of Closing of Nearby Naval Training Station

JACK RANTZ, manager of the Osran Amusement Company of Bremerton, reported to the WORLD correspondent this week that the Lenten season is affecting his business as much, if not more than usual and that the closing of the Naval Training Station, taking away 600 or 800 young men, has added to his troubles. The Osran Amusement Company controls the two motion picture theatres in Bremerton, and has been doing a get-rich-quick business for the last two years or more. A little over a year ago the fine new Rialto, the second of the two houses, was opened; and nothing was left to be desired in the motion picture business in Bremerton, until after the armistice was signed, for the increased activity at the Navy Yard brought hundreds of new people to the vicinity. # Producers' and Distributors' News

Choose Bluebirds To Be Marketed at Special Price

PRECEDED by an announcement to exhibitors that a series of the best Bluebird pictures released up to March 3 were shortly to be marketed at a special price, Universal exchanges all over the country on April 1 began an aggressive booking campaign. Sixty-seven Bluebird photoplays, selected from among all the Bluebirds produced during three years, each one chosen because its merits had been proved, are being offered to exhibitors at a special campaign price.

Sixty-seven Selected Subjects.

In announcing the arrangements for booking the series of pictures it was pointed out to exhibitors that in this campaign the number of pictures booked automatically established the average price per production. The announcement also brought out the idea that exhibitors who had not previously booked the releases comprising the series were now in a position to obtain pictures with proved quality at special prices and that the showmen could profit greatly by the knowledge of how other exhibitors had exploited the film plays. The announcement calls attention to the fact that the public cares little about the age of a film story. If it is interesting and pleasing the release date matters little or not at all.

This series of Bluebirds are comprised of 11 from Monroe Salisbury, 13 from Carmel Myers, 8 from Franklyn Farnum. The exhibitor may book as many as he desires, the price a picture being governed entirely by the number of productions booked at one time.

Shows Testing of Giant Dirigibles.

Receptions given returning Canadian and American heroes, the launching of the super-dreadnought Idaho, and the testing of England's giant dirigibles, form the main features of the International News No. 13, released by International through Universal exchanges last week. The great reception given New York's famous 27th Division, and scenes showing the hundreds of thousands of people who witnesses the division's historic parade on Fifth avenue, is perhaps the principal feature of the issue. However, there is great interest in the return of the famous "Princess Pats" from four years of war in France. A 250-mile race at Santa Monica, Cal.; an intresting subject entitled "Camouflage," and showing the art of camouflaging ships and the reasons for various freak designs, and the testing of the R33, a dirigible which England expects to be able to cross the Atlantic, complete the release.

Work is progressing fast on the big Pearl White-Robert W. Chambers serial, "In Secret," which is being produced by George B. Seitz, Inc., for release by Pathe.

Those who have followed her in her many Pathe serials will find that she has taken the utmost advantage of the possibilities of her best role.

Can It Be? Pearl White Idle?

You see, this is a special picture given the Moving Picture World by the Pathe serial star to show our readers how she appears without an automatic or two in her hand.

Real Pacific Tornado Seen in Lockwood's Last Picture

THE production which will be seen in the coming release of Harold Lockwood's last Screen Classics, Inc., release, "A Man of Honor," is a series of scenic triumphs.

It was on the island of Santa Cruz that the majority of the scenes were taken. Here were found the picturesque rock-ribbed coast, with the deep coves and caves, the impenetrable recesses in the vastness of the interior, the semi-tropical vegetation and climate and the periodical hurricanes typical of that region.

A peculiar fact in connection with the shooting of scenes in Santa Cruz is the occurrence of a real hurricane or tornado which blew up while Mr. Lockwood's company was quartered on the island. Fred J. Balshofer, Lockwood's director, had erected several huts with the native tule covering, and crowds of natives were housed in these huts when the hurricane struck the island. Mr. Balshofer took advantage of this freak of nature, and lashing his camera, the operator and himself to a point of rocks, proceeded to shoot many scenes during the storm. Many were injured in taking this picture.

Pathe News Aero Work Is Praised by Army Experts

PATHE NEWS has established a reputation for aero work which gives to the News a distinct and unique character. Some of the achievements, notably over New York, of which the most unusual views were taken—including a half-height shot of the Woolworth Building and the Statue of Liberty—have been commended by army experts and civilian professionals. They especially commended, also, the views taken of New York Harbor on the occasion of the President's first journey to France; and the scenes shot from the clouds of the procession of ships into Boston Harbor upon the return of the President. But the most recent achievement, and one during which the evolution of the plane held spellbound 100,000 spectators, was at the automobile races at Santa Monica, Cal.

Shows Warship Air Base.

Down at Guantanamo Bay where Uncle Sam's warships rendezvous some striking innovations in aviation have been operated. The warships, as Pathe News has shown, is now an air base, and American naval aviators demonstrate spectacular feats in releasing land airplanes from the fighting ships.

Pathe News has not only shown this as practiced at Guantanamo, but the cameraman, flying high above the maneuvering warships secured unusual and instructive views.

Second Lytell Boston Blackie Story Ready.

"Blackie's Redemption" is the name of the Metro release for April 14, with Bert Lytell as the star. It is not so very long ago that this popular star was seen in another crook play, "Boston Blackie's Little Pal," to which this April feature is a sequel. Both are from the pen of Jack Boyle. Finis Fox, one of the best of Metro's staff of dramatists, has converted the story to the screen, and John Ince is the director.

Many scenes are interiors of the famous San Quentin Prison, and show the lives of the inmates of this popular "hostelry," as well as the life and habits tricks and ruses, of the confirmed "con" man and crook at large.

Alice Lake will be seen for the first time in a serious role as leading woman. Others in the cast are Henry Kolker, Bernard Durning, Jack Duff, William Musgrave, Gertrude Short, Don Bailey, Wilton Taylor and Chinese Ah Tov.

Announces Capitol Comedies for April.

Exhibitors of Capitol Comedies have much to anticipate in the schedule of releases for April. He is seen as the triple-troubled hero in "The Midnight Alarm," released on April 6. Next comes "Wanted—a Baby," in which the rotund comedian whirls through numberless laughable situations in attempting to win a wager that he, a merry bachelor, can nurse and rear an infant as well as one of the opposite sex.

Chester Secures Series of G. M. Dyatt's Peruvian Films

C. L. CHESTER, producer of the Outing-Chester Pictures, has obtained the entire series of Peruvian films taken by Commander G. M. Dyatt in a recent trip through this picturesque country. Commander Dyatt, who left the Royal Flying Corps of Great Britain a short time ago, is one of the few English officers who has been in the three branches of the service, in the air, on sea and on land.

As a result of serious injuries he was given an indefinite leave of absence and, to soothe his nerves, he started out on the most dangerous expedition that a traveler could imagine. He went over the Andes into territory where the natives are violently hostile to strangers and especially to a white face. He was upset in the waters of the Amazon, where he lost part of his films and found himself astray in the jungle for a day and a night. He was finally rescued by a friendly tribe of natives, who took care of him until he was able to travel again and who gave him endless opportunity for screening their fantastic customs, religious rites and dances.

These pictures of Peru will be placed among the coming releases of the Outing-Chester Pictures and shown in the series that is now appearing at the Strand Theatre, New York.

Screen Version of Play Pleases Augustus Thomas

FEW writers of stage plays are said to have the same enthusiasm for the motion picture drama as Augustus Thomas, the author of "As a Man Thinks," described as a thrilling pyschological study with quick scenic transitions and a strong moral lesson.

In building for the screen drama, Mr. Thomas states that he finds dramatic opportunities transcending those of the spoken play. After viewing the completed picture, "As a Man Thinks," he remarked there were a lot of things in the production, pictorially speaking, that had not been brought out in the original version. "And the queer part of it," remarked the author, "is that I have had the notes on these very situations from the time I made my first drafts of the play. They would have gone into the stage version if I could have worked them in with the proper cohesion.

"Here I have superior opportunity. In the picture one may obtain effects far more readily and support them with detail that is more convincing than words."

"As a Man Thinks" is a Four Star picture produced by Harry Raver, with Leah Baird as the star. George Irving directed the production.

"The Boomerang" Secured by Pioneer.

The Pioneer Film Corporation announces it has secured "The Boomerang," based on a novel by William Hamilton Osborne, with Henry B. Walthall in the leading role. Bertram Bracken directed the production which deals with the subject of labor unrest. It was made for the National Film Corporation of America, and will be distributed on state rights basis.

Loew Features Selects on His Metropolitan Circuit

DETAILS of how Marcus Loew is presenting two of the current Select productions in the many theatres of his metropolitan circuit show in an interesting manner how this veteran showman works to put over what he regards as unusually strong attractions.

The features in question are "The World to Live In," featuring Alice Brady, and "The Probation Wife, featuring Norma Talmadge.

For the Brady production Mr. Loew has had printed a large quantity of block-letter, twenty-four sheet stands, with which he has plastered all sections and all boroughs of New York. In big type, these posters ask, "Could You Love a Girl With a Tin Heart?" and "Do You Know What a Tinpanner Is? The poster then proceeds to state that a trip to the nearest Marcus Loew house to see Alice Brady in "The World to Live In" would prove a delightful experience and provide the answer.

But this is only one feature of Mr. Loew's special campaign. A composite one-sheet has been drawn up and posted in the lobbies of these theatres, which announces Alice Brady in "The World to Live In," and also shows four scenes from the photoplay, which give the high lights of the story.

In the exploitation of "The Probation Wife," Mr. Loew has made lavish use of an unusually attractive twenty-four sheet, which Select has provided for this subject. This stand shows Norma Talmadge reclining full-length upon a couch, under a floor lamp and reading a book on social etiquette. Specially constructed lobby displays are also used. Throughout Marcus Loew's entire metropolitan circuit, the lobbies are hung with cards designed to pique the curiosity of the reader. "What is virtue in a wife?" asks the card, and then goes on: "See Norma Talmadge in 'The Probation Wife' at Loew's ——— Theatre." Every window in the vicinity of Loew's Theatre is also freely placarded with these cards, in addition to the wide display of paper the Loew Circuit puts out in accordance with its usual program.

Begin Work on "Secret Service."

Work on "Secret Service," the Famous Players-Lasky production adapted from William Gillette's play, and starring Captain Robert Warwick, who has just returned to pictures after seventeen months in the army, has started at the Lasky Hollywood studio. Hugh Ford is directing the production from the scenario by Beulah Marie Dix.

A notable cast will appear in this production, which is to be one of the most elaborate ever made at the studio. Besides the star, there are Shirley Mason, Theodore Roberts, Edythe Chapman, Irving Cummings, Robert Caine, Lillian Leighton, Guy Oliver and Casson Ferguson.

San Antonio Appreciates Home Made Film.

When "The Forfeit," starring House Peters, was shown at the Empire Theatre, San Antonio, Texas, the whole town turned out to see the picture. In order to accommodate everybody, the management found it necessary to extend the run. "The Forfeit" was staged in and around San Antonio by Frank Powell. It is distributed by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation through Pathe Exchange, Inc.

First Virginia Pearson Film May 18.

President Meyer of the Virginia Pearson Photoplays Company announces that May 18 will be the release date, through Pathe, of the first Virginia Pearson feature, "The Bishop's Emeralds," in which she is supported by an excellent company headed by Sheldon Lewis.

What Happens When Comedy Meets Tragedy?

Spectacular Lighting Effects in "Red Lantern"

EXTRAORDINARY lighting effects are among the many spectacular features promised to picture devotees in "The Red Lantern," the coming Nazimova production.

The Pacific Coast was the scene of Nazimova's labors in the production. Age-old Pekin was transplanted from China to California. Within the confines of the studio lot an exact duplicate of a street in Pekin was constructed, while on the great inclosed stage were set up massive interiors furnished and furbished with all the lavish magnificence of the Manchu dynasty.

Novel lighting effects were made necessary by the fact that a number of the most dramatic episodes take place on this Chinese street at night, during the celebration of the religio-patriotic Feast of the Red Lantern. The scenes comprising these episodes actually were taken at night.

More than 1,000 Chinese lanterns were hung from the Chinese shops, dwellings and temples lining both sides of the thoroughfare. Atop the giant arch, overlooking the Great Wall surrounding the ancient capital, was placed a big searchlight, the beams of which were played upon the figure of Nazimova as the star, attired in the regal robes of the Goddess of the Red Lantern, was borne down the street on a palanquin carried by two dozen Chinese coolies through a surging throng of Celestials.

High on platforms were batteries of arc-lights, known as "broadsides," that simulate the sun. More than 100 of these were used. In addition there were spotlights to the number of 50.

Nor are the special lighting effects confined alone to the night street scenes. Weird lighting marks the ancient Chinese ceremonial of being "measured for one's casket," that takes place in the coffin shop kept by Madame Ling, grandmother of Mahlee, the half-Chinese, half-English girl portrayed by Nazimova.

Director Albert Capellani further required special, novel lightings when he photographed the Chinese garden back of the American Mission in Pekin just after sundown; when he took the scenes in the throne room of the Palace where the Dowager Empress and her mandarins hear of the Boxer uprising that is rapidly fomenting in the outlying provinces and gathering momentum is headed for the city of Pekin itself, and when he took the scenes in the subterranean rendezvous of the Boxers.

Besides playing Mahlee, the Eurasian, Nazimova also enacts the totally dissimilar role of Blanche Sackville, an English girl and half-sister of Mahlee.

Artistic Poster Work for "Unknown Love" Advertising

THE UNKNOWN LOVE," Leonce Perret's romantic production, starring Dolores Cassinelli with E. K. Lincoln, which will be released as a Pathe Special April 27, is being put forward with a large amount of exploitation and advertising aids.

The posters, which have been designed by Frederick Brown McDan and Emmet Owen Smith are exceedingly artistic in both the handling and general beauty of design. Both artists were strongly inspired by the head of Miss Cassinelli and they have most effectively used it in the posters. Mr. Smith's contribution is the 24 sheet.

Frederick Brown McDan contributes a one sheet, two three sheets and a six sheet. The design of the three sheet is an eye-compelling study of the star. It is a bold portrait study of Miss Cassinelli and will be reproduced in three colors on the cover of the elaborate campaign book prepared for the production.

In addition to the posters, the advertising material includes: portrait slide in colors; 2 two column scene cuts; line cuts; an ad sheet; 2 one column portrait cuts; and one two column cut of the star; sets of ten black and white photographs of star and scenes; 22x28 color of star; 22x28 color scene; lobby display in color; and the campaign book in which will be bound a one sheet, four page insert on calandered paper made up of half tone engravings of Miss Cassinelli and selected scenes from the play.

Three Exhibitors Mutual Specials Going Strong

THE rapidly augmenting accounts of Exhibitors Mutual have received a big impetus through three special features—"What Every Woman Wants," "The Turn in the Road" and Martin Johnson's "Cannibals of the South Seas."

During the week of April 7 ten big Chicago theatres will play "What Every Woman Wants" as their leading attraction. Ascher Brothers have booked the Exhibitors Mutual feature for each of their twelve theatres, while the Lubliner & Trintz circuit dated it for seven of their leading houses. The Pantheon, Chicago, made a big splurge with the production and did record breaking business.

Among the host of first-run houses which have booked "The Turn in the Road" are Kunsky's Majestic Theatre in Detroit; the State-Lake in Chicago; the 81st Street Theatre in New York; the Strand Theatre in Newark; Moore's Rialto, in Washington, and at Quinn's Theatre in Los Angeles. The Lubliner & Trinz circuit and Ascher Brothers have booked the attraction solidly.

Martin Johnson's "Cannibals of the South Seas" is doing very good business. Chicago, like Los Angeles, Boston, Minneapolis, and every other city where the picture has been handled in a big fashion has been captivated by the Cannibals.

During the past week the Randolph Theatre, where the picture opened for an indefinite run, its first booking in the Windy City, all house records were left far in the wake. Much credit is due to the owners of the Randolf, Jones, Linick and Schaffer, for the success in putting over the "Cannibals." The advertising campaign which the triumvirate arranged was most unusual. Chicago was plastered by 124 twenty-four foot stands, and an effective lobby display was arranged. South Sea atmosphere patterned after the pictures pervaded the lobby. Everywhere there were palms. Savages peered from every wall. The wicked Nagapate, the "Chief of the Cannibals," met everybody entering the theatre and on all sides there were pictures of scenes shown in the films.

A May Allison Picture Released April 7.

THE first of Metro's quartet of offerings for the month of April is "The Island of Intrigue," released April 7. The photodrama is a screen adaptation of Isabel Ostrander's novel of the same name. It is a story of love, romance and intrigue and has been deftly converted to the silent drama by June Mathis and A. S. Le Vino, of the Metro staff. Henry Otto directed the productions.

The cast is a strong one, and includes Jack Mower, as leading man; Frederick Vroom, Mrs. Lucille Ward, Gordon Marr, Lillian West, Hector V. Sarno, Tom Kennedy, Chance Ward, Edward Alexander and others.

"Sawdust Doll" Is Best Baby Marie Osborne Film

THE heavy advance bookings of "The Sawdust Doll," the Pathe program feature, starring Baby Marie Osborne, which will be released April 20, are attributed to the little star's recent series of personal appearances on her way to the Pacific Coast.

"The Sawdust Doll" is one of the best stories in which Baby Marie has yet appeared, for here again Agnes C. Johnston, Mary Pickford's scenario writer, has shaped a charming and appealing tale of child life.

This appeal to both the young and old is the strong merit of the picture, which has been pronounced a perfect "heart story" and is interpreted by a specially selected cast, including Claire DeBrey, Jack Connolly, William Quinn and the frolicsome pickaninny, Little Sambo.

Signs for 1919 Output of Exhibitors Mutual.

The Chicago exchange of Exhibitors Mutual has just closed the biggest deal of the year by signing up the new State-Lake Theatre, controlled by the Orpheum Circuit, for the remainder of 1919. The State-Lake, which seats nearly 3,000 persons, opened two weeks ago, and as its picture feature staged "What Every Woman Wants," the Jesse D. Hampton five-reel picture featuring Grace Darmond. The following week, "The Turn in the Road," produced by the Brentwood Film Corporation and purchased by Robertson Cole for release through Exhibitors Mutual, was the leading photoplay attraction at the State-Lake.

Select Announces List of Star Series for April

SELECT announces three Star Series attractions for distribution during the month of April, including Marion Davies in "Getting Mary Married," Constance Talmadge in "The Veiled Adventure," in which she will be presented by Lewis J. Selznick, and Alice Brady's "Red Head."

Marion Davies' picture for April, "Getting Mary Married," is an original story written especially for the star by John Emerson and Anita Loos. It is an Allan Dwan production, having been directed and supervised especially by him. The production is a high class comedy with a strong dramatic theme, dealing with the life of a young girl who is left to the mercies of arrogant and grasping relatives. Miss Davies' support includes Norman Kerry, her leading man; Matt Moore, Frederick Burton, Amelia Summerville, Constance Beaumar and Elmar Grandin.

"The Veiled Adventure" will be Constance Talmadge's Picture for April. Walter Edwards directed it and Harrison Ford is Miss Talmadge's leading man. The story is by Julia Crawford Ivers, who also wrote the scenario, and concerns the experiences of a young woman who delights in showing other people the error of their ways. The story is brimful of comedy, in which there is more than sufficient drama to make it a most interesting attraction.

"Red Head," in which Alice Brady will be seen, is a story by Albert Payson Dowst. It was adopted from a leading magazine for the screen by Charles Maigne, who also directed the production. Miss Brady will be supported by Conrad Nagel, who is also leading man in her stage play, "Forever After." The story of "Red Head" concerns the adventures of a dance hall entertainer who succeeds in tricking a wealthy man to marry her, but in the end they grow to have a real love affair with each other.

Universal Film in Demand in Foreign Lands.

THAT Universal productions are enjoying wide distribution in South America, Europe and the Orient is brought out in the announcement of the Universal's export department. In South America, Europe, in China, India, Straits Settlements, Philippine Islands and in Australia, "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin," is being rapidly booked by theatremen. In Buenos Ayres, Argentina, and at Valparaiso, Chile, the production recently played several weeks to big business. In Paris, at the Gaumont Palace, the picture began a third week's showing.

Universal serials are much in demand in South America and the Orient. Universal Special Attractions are very popular in all foreign countries.

Lanagan Is a Professional Bad Man.

One of the important players in "The Prodigal Liar," the new William Desmond production which was made by Jesse D. Hampton and which will be distributed by Exhibitors' Mutual is Frank Lanagan.

In this production Lanagan has the role of "Steve Logan," a bad man, whose imprisonment forms the foundation of the Desmond story. Lanagan's achievements in this particular division of film work has brought him no little fame.

"Lion's Den" Next Vehicle for Lytell.

"The Lion's Den," by Frederick Orin Bartlett, has been purchased by Metro and is announced by Richard A. Rowland, Metro president, as the next screen vehicle for Bert Lytell. Bartlett's story appeared in a popular weekly magazine and was made into a scenario by George D. Baker, who is also to direct Lytell in the new production.

First Rothapfel Program Is Nearing Completion

SAMUEL L. ROTHAPFEL has nearly completed the first Rothapfel Unia Program. The comedy number is finished. Many of the musical numbers have been arranged and one specialty in the musical phase of the program, a paraphrase of "The Elegie," by Maussenet accompanying a picturization of it, is said to be one of the most novel numbers ever seen in connection with a motion picture theatre's program. E. Lloyd Sheldon did the scenario. It is titled "His Final Hour."

The comedy was written by George V. Hobart, who wrote the script from a suggestion as offered by Mr. Rothapfel. The working title is "Wild Flowers," subject to change. In the cast are seen Helen Weir, Yvonne Shelton, Templar Saxe, Walter McEwan, A. J. Herbert and Eugene Acker.

Announcement of the feature number on the program, a screen version of a play by E. Lloyd Sheldon, has not been made. Mr. Rothapfel, who is personally supervising this production, has completed the first two reels and the working title only is known.

The magazine number of the first program has been assembled and contains many interesting subjects, including scenes taken by Sergt. Owens, U. S. Marine Corps, exclusively for Mr. Rothapfel. These scenes show the veterans of the battle of Chateau-Thierry and the famous trench scene with Sergt. Dan Daly in person, said to be the most decorated hero of the war. This magazine number is entirely away from the conventional news reel and is novel in every respect.

It is expected that the first program in its completed form with music accompaniment and all, will be ready for a trade showing about the first week in May.

Story of "The Red Glove" in Book Form.

Douglas Grant's novel of Western adventure, from which "The Red Glove" serial starring Marie Walcamp, has been adapted by Universal, is soon to make its appearance on bookstands throughout the country. Grosset & Dunlap have published "The Red Glove" story in book form, illustrating the narrative with scenes from the film play. The book will contain the complete story related by the screen in eighteen episodes.

The publishers have arranged to cooperate with exhibitors booking the serial and have asked booksellers in all parts of the country to display the new volumes in their show windows as often as possible, decorating their displays with photographs from the film.

New Pathe Serial Released April 20.

Adventure, thrills, mystery and romance, the four big elements of the successful fiction story, have been skilfully and grippingly blended in the coming Pathe serial, "The Tiger's Trail," starring Ruth Roland, which will be released on April 20.

In the chief supporting role opposite Miss Roland is George Larkin. The principal heavy role is played by Mark Strong. The cast is completed with Harry G. Moody, George Field, Frederick L. Kohler and Easter Walters.

The serial was written by Arthur B. Reeve and Charles A. Logue. The scenario is by Gilson Willets.

Marion Davies Busy on New Picture.

Marion Davies, with a large company, is busily at work in the Paragon Studios, Fort Lee, which, it is understood, C. F. Zittel has leased for a short time. Allan Dwan again is Miss Davies' director, Norman Kerry her leading man and Matt Moore and Dorothy Green figure prominently in the cast. Much secrecy is being maintained about the story.

Biff! Bang! Bing! And "You'd Foil Me, Would You?" Hisses Ruth Roland.
The Pathe star has a super-punch in her new serial, "The Tiger's Trail."

Five Metro Stars Working on Summer Productions

SIGNS that portend a summer of unexampled activity are abundant at the Metro studios in Hollywood, where, for the first time since Metro's cross-continent trek from New York to California, the capacity of the plant is being put to a rigorous test. Five Metro stars —Bert Lytell, Viola Dana, Hale Hamilton, May Allison and Emmy Wehlen—are at work simultaneously on new productions.

Comedy is the predominant note in the productions. With one exception the pictures are light in theme. Miss Dana, Miss Allison, Miss Wehlen and Hale Hamilton are doing what are frankly wholesome comedies. Bert Lytell is completing another of his "Boston Blackie" crook stories, which is dramatic in theme, although lightened by comedy relief.

"Blackie's Redemption" is the title of the new Lytell vehicle. It is based upon two of Jack Boyle's magazine stories, "Boston Blackie's Mary" and "Fred, the Count." Finis Fox, of the Metro scenario staff, made the screen adaptation, and John Ince, of the Ince family, is directing the star.

Emmy Wehlen, who recently arrived on the Pacific Coast, has plunged with a vim into her new picture, "The Amateur Adventuress." Henry Otto is directing the picture, which is being made from the scenario by Luther A. Reed, of the Metro staff, based upon Thomas Bigelow's magazine story. The story has to do with the adventures of a young girl employed as a stenographer in a Welfare Home, and who seeks romance.

Under the direction of Edwin Carewe, Viola Dana is nearing the completion of "Madelon of the Redwoods." This also is a comedy of the breezy type and is pervaded with the wholesome atmosphere of the West. It is a screen version of "Madelin," the early novel from the pen of Mary E. Wilkins (Mrs. Freeman).

"His Father's Wife" is the working title of the new picture upon which May Allison started work. It is a farce and is an original from the pen of E. V. Durling. Charles Swickard was re-engaged by Metro to direct Miss Allison.

Hale Hamilton's latest starring vehicle, which he is rapidly completing, is "After His Own Heart." This also is a comedy, made into a scenario by A. S. Le Vino from Ben Ames Williams' four-part novelette. Naomi Childers is Hamilton's leading woman, and the supporting cast includes Herbert Prior and William V. Mong.

"Bolshevism on Trial" Is Not a Propaganda Picture

IN "BOLSHEVISM ON TRIAL," Select's special attraction, there is portrayed in compelling manner a suggestion of the perils that confront America in the event that this nation should be dominated by a Bolshevistic leader. It is a story which holds from beginning to end.

Nevertheless, the production is not propaganda. It is not a preachment. It is not "made to order." It is not inspired or projected by any person or group of persons as a moulder of public opinion. The United States Government had no hand in the production of this drama. It was made by the Mayflower Photoplay Corporation and is based on Thomas Dixon's novel, "Comrades." "Bolshevism on Trial" is purely fiction, but based on realities that can and may happen in any community in this country. It is a photodrama whose theme and dominating interest happen to be the most widely discussed topic of the civilized world today. It is an entertainment of the sort that grips and thrills, which amuses and terrifies, and which never at any moment fails to entertain.

Shirley Mason in "The Rescuing Angel."

Shirley Mason's next picture for Paramount, scheduled for release April 6, will be "The Rescuing Angel," an adaptation of the play of the same name by Clare Kummer, which had a record-breaking run in New York.

Miss Mason is said to be at her best in the depiction of the heroine of the story, a young girl who, in order to save her father from impending financial ruin, marries a man she doesn't know she loves. The picture starts out with this situation, and then takes a new and surprising twist.

In the leading male role is Forrest Stanley.

Famous Players Announces Cast for "Secret Service"

IT IS now possible to announce the completed cast of "Secret Service," the big Famous Players-Lasky special production directed by Hugh Ford, and adapted by Beulah Marie Dix from William Gillette's stage drama.

Captain Robert Warwick, who recently returned from France, where he served on General Pershing's staff, is cast for the role created by Mr. Gillette—Lewis Dumont. "Kid McCoy," whose real name is Norman Selby, and who is one of the best known scrappers of the square circle, with many victories under the Marquis of Queensbury rules to his credit, will be seen as Lieutenant Foray.

Wanda Hawley, one of the most delightful of the younger picture actresses, seen in many of C. B. De Mille's Artcraft specials and in support of William S. Hart, Bryant Washburn and others, plays Edith Varney.

Shirley Mason will be Caroline Mitford, the ingenue lead; Theodore Roberts will be seen as General Randolph; Casson Ferguson, a clever juvenile, is Wilfred Varney; Edythe Chapman is Mrs. Varney; Robert Caine is Henry Dumont; Irving Cummings is Mr. Arrelford, and Lillian Leighton, Raymond Hatton, Guy Oliver, Fannie Midgeley, Clarence Geldart and others also appear in important characterizations.

Settings of the most perfect character will grace the play which, it should be understood, is not a war play, simply having the Civil War as a background. There are no battle scenes. The drama centers about a situation at Richmond when the Southern capital was beseiged by the Federal army. Joseph Boyle is assistant director and William Marshall is cameraman.

Sells Entire Stock of Simplexes.

The Boston Motion Picture Supply Company, southern New England distributors for Simplex, report a banner week's business ending with last Saturday, according to reports received at the Simplex factory.

Cecil Wood is engaged as special representative for this concern, and many Simplex orders followed in his wake upon his return from a two weeks' trip around the southern part of the territory.

The demand for Simplex projectors around this section was so great during the past week that the complete stock of machines was cleaned out, and negotiations were made for motor truck transportation to bring another shipment of machines over the road in order to take care of the numerous installations which were required.

Fast, Furious and Frozen Fun in Lloyd's Next.

A "faultlessly frosted feature de luxe" may not express much to the chap who takes his laughs in a whole-souled fashion and loves "pep" for the seasoning; but Harold Lloyd is always de luxe in the new 52-a-year Rolin series, released by Pathe, and the "faultelessly frosted" is merely Hal Roach's pictorial fashion of telling that "A Sammy in Siberia" is a masterpiece in snow and ice. It is, indeed, a remarkable bit of hilarious nonsense, staged with an attention to detail, location and interior setting usually given to pretentious multi-reel features.

"Man of Might" Goes Big in Canada.

Vitagraph serials have, during the past year, played to remarkable business throughout Canada, but nothing approaching the big success of "The Man of Might" in the Dominion was expected.

Vitagraph's four Canadian branch offices have been fairly swamped with business on the big outdoor thriller, and every previous Vitagraph serial record across the border has gone to smash.

A Big Help to the Cameraman.
The pair of 'em, Fatty Arbuckle and Molly Malone in the Paramount comedy, "The Bank Clerk."

Makes Special Picture for Australia.

Harry C. Musgrove, general director of the Australasian Films, Ltd., and Lieutenant Phil Gell, his personal representative, who control about 500 theatres in Australia, spent the entire day at the Norma Talmadge Studio Saturday, March 29, and posed with Miss Talmadge in several hundred feet of film which they will take back with them to Australia and flash on the screen in all their theatres. "Norma Talmadge," said Lieutenant Gell, "is so rapidly gaining in popularity in Australia that we are receiving thousands of requests weekly for more of her pictures. While in New York, Mr. Musgrove and I have arranged with Joseph M. Schenck to blaze a big publicity campaign in Australia and New Zealand for the Norma Talmadge pictures. By arrangement with Beulah Livingstone, publicity director for the Norma Talmadge Film Corporation, we are to have a bi-monthly news sheet on the activities of the Norma Talmadge Studio sent direct to all our most important exhibitors in addition to the publicity service which we ourselves distribute. While in New York, Mr. Musgrove has ordered several hundred new photographs of Miss Talmadge, a number of large framed photographs for lobby display, several hundred of the attractive front page picture in colors of Miss Talmadge which appeared in the New York Tribune on March 2d, besides electrotype cuts, 24 sheets, etc."

Fox Books Latest Hayakawa Picture.

Sessue Hayakawa's next picture, "The Courageous Coward," is going to play nearly a dozen William Fox houses throughout Greater New York. Following a screening last week, the Fox management booked the production for nearly thirty days, the feature to play the Bedford, Ridgewood, Comedy, Folly, Academy of Music, Audubon, Crotona, Japanese Gardens, Nemo and Washington. The dates for the showings have been assigned, but an additional twenty days booking has been arranged for seven other Fox theatres, the playing dates to be selected later.

Hayawaka will get away from the Orient in this picture, the entire setting of which is in the United States. Tom Geraghty is author of this story, which was put into screen form by Frances Guihan.

The plot has to do with Suki Iota, a Japanese born in the United States, but who cherishes Oriental ideals, and Rei Oaki, his little Japanese sweetheart.

Midnight Romance Sells on Record of Predecessor

BOOKING "A Midnight Romance" after the run of "Virtuous Wives" is the easiest task Lee L. Goldberg, secretary of the Big Feature Rights Corporation of Louisville, Ky., has had in his motion picture experience. Contracts that have been closed thus far are:

Strand, Louisville, one week; Signal Amusement Company, Chattanooga, one week; Crescent Amusement Company, Nashville, one week; Majestic Amusement Company, Memphis, one week; Ada Meade Theatre, Lexington, Ky., three days; Lyric Theatre Covington, Ky., two days; Princess Theatre, Hopkinsville, Ky., two days; Dixie Theatre, Mayfield, Ky., two days; Dixie Theatre, Paris, Tenn., one day.

Manager Frank H. Dowler, Jr., of the Signal Amusement Company, Chattanooga, who ran "Virtuous Wives" first in Kentucky and Tennessee, has done the same thing with "A Midnight Romance." He put it on for the week of March 16 while its premiere in Louisville will be the week of April 6th.

I. Libson, supervising head of the Strand here, has instructed Local Manager Arthur H. Fitz to arrange for the presentation of "A Midnight Romance" in the same effective style as marked "Virtuous Wives."

Tony Sudekum is making similar arrangements for the Knickerbocker in Nashville the week of April 28. He will make special use of Anita Stewart's song "A Midnight Romance" for advertising purposes.

Two Lovers for Shirley Mason.

Not one but two lovers has Shirley Mason in her new Paramount picture, "The Rescuing Angel," which is released April 6. The story, originally a play, was written by Clare Kummer, with a scenario by Edith Kennedy.

This comedy is full of human interest, and supplies the star with a vivacious role and affords excellent opportunities for every one else in the cast. Forrest Stanley is the leading man and one of the suitors, the other is portrayed by Arthur Carew. Which one of the two the heroine chose is a problem that must be answered by the picture itself.

Others in the cast are John Steppling, James Neill, Carol Edwards, Edythe Chapman, T. D. Crittenden and J. Parks Jones.

Second Prizma Series Available.

Prizma Natural Color Pictures makes an announcement that on April 15 there will be available to the exhibitors the second series of its natural color pictures of the following subjects: "Model Girls," "Trout," "Kiddies," "China," "Birds and Flowers," and "Alaskan Revelations."

The success attained by these natural color pictures which are being distributed by the World Film Corporation has won unstinted praise wherever exhibited. The new series, covering a wide range of subjects, give natural color photography an opportunity to show to what wonderful length this new element in the industry can go.

Realistic Apache Den in "Stronger Vow."

An Apache den is the scene of many thrilling incidents in Geraldine Farrar's newest Goldwyn picture, "The Stronger Vow," released April 27. Hugo Ballin, Goldwyn's art director, has again won the commendation of the diva for the Parisian outlaws' meeting place.

The set represents a large basement room in the Montmartre quarter of Paris, serving as a meeting place for a band of exiled Spanish anarchists, of which Pedro Toral (Tom Santschi) is the leader.

"Captain Kidd, Jr.," Is Mary Pickford's Latest.

The title of Mary Pickford's new Artcraft picture, "Captain Kidd, Jr.," which is released April 6, arouses memories of the famous buccaneers of the days of the Spanish Main. Really the story doesn't have anything to do with pirates, save that a very old book dealing with the lives of these gentry is supposed to be the receptacle of the secret of certain buried treasure. The picture is from the play—which was a real stage success—written by Rida Johnson Young. The screen adaptation is by Frances Marion.

Moore Is a Policeman in "One of the Finest"

TOM MOORE'S identification with everyday young men is further established in his new Goldwyn picture now nearing completion at the California studios. It is "One of the Finest," by S. J. Clarkson Miller, and as might be supposed from the title Tom Moore plays the part of a traffic policeman. He is directed by Harry Beaumont.

The play is a domestic comedy-drama and the problems, vicissitudes and adventures of Larry Hayes might easily be those of any man in his position.

Cleverly devised to exploit Tom Moore at his best, the play is replete with delightful human touches, many of them occurring in the home of the policeman, in which the star has a most engaging side partner, little "Peaches" Jackson, one of the favorite child actresses of the screen. All the little intimacies of home life are beautifully portrayed.

Sharply contrasted with this part of the play is the typical society life of the girl who resents Larry Hayes' enforcement of the speed laws, and has him "broke." The scenes bringing about this meeting were photographed in San Francisco.

Tom Moore has an ideal foil in Seena Owen. Molly McConnell again mothers him as she did in "Go West, Young Man," and the cast also includes Edward Sturgis and Hal Conley, not forgetting "Peaches."

"A Yankee Princess" Is a Big Bet.

Vitagraph has just communicated through its branch offices with its exhibitors all over, and has advised them that its coming Bessie Love picture, "A Yankee Princess," is a big bet.

The production was recently screened at the home office, and word was immediately sent to all of the Vitagraph branches that Bessie Love, by her work in "A Yankee Princess," has come through with the biggest picture of her career.

Select Starts Posting "Bolshevism on Trial"

SELECT Pictures has given a contract for a metropolitan billposting campaign on "Bolshevism on Trial," which will plaster New York and Brooklyn with twenty-four sheet stands announcing this timely subject.

Posting is to start in New York on April 15 and in Brooklyn on May 1, Manhattan being given the earlier date because of the fact that play-dates in that borough usually run slightly ahead of those in Brooklyn.

For the stand advertising this subject Select has chosen to depict one of the most dramatic moments in the entire six reels. It is the scene where Wolff, the Bolshevistic leader, inflamed by long suppressed desires, has seized upon Barbara, whose youthful beauty and idealistic enthusiasm he has used as a bait to lure capital into his scheme. The sketch on the poster shows the scene in Wolff's bedroom, with Wolff struggling with Barbara in his arms, at the moment when young Norman succeeds in breaking through barred doors in order to effect a rescue.

Another striking poster from which Select expects to get excellent results is a one-sheet which has employed the head and grasping clawed hand which have been used in Select's red and black trade paper insert advertising. This drawing has been said to embody the spirit of Bolshevism, which is seeking and grasping in all its dealings.

There is a six-sheet which shows the Bolshevistic leader plotting with a number of women who are dressed mostly in full tights, and the paper bears the descriptive caption, "The women readily consent to become a lure for Bolshevism."

A three-sheet contains a thrilling fight scene, and the other three-sheet makes use of an anti-Bolshevism cartoon recently published in the New York Herald, through courtesy of which daily the design is employed.

All of the paper is captioned, being in this respect different from Select's usual posters which generally are quieter in tone and bear no legends.

Announces Cast for "Third Degree."

The Vitagraph production of the Charles Klein drama, "The Third Degree," which is scheduled for release in May, boasts an excellent cast. Alice Joyce is starred, and plays the part of Annie Sands. The part of Howard Jeffries, Jr., is played by Gladden James. Mr. Jeffries, Sr., is played by Anders Randolf. Mrs. Jeffries is played by (Mrs. DeWolf) Hedda Hopper. Rogers Lytton plays the part of Captain Clinton, and Herbert Evans, George Backus, J. P. Wade and Mr. McGuire are among the other notables in the production.

Tom Terriss is the director.

Four Mutt and Jeff Cartoons in April.

The increasing demand throughout the country for short subjects is reflected in the growth in popularity of the Mutt and Jeff Animated Cartoons, according to the exhibitors' service bureau of the Fox Film Corporation. Most of the leading theatres of the country are using Bud Fisher's comedy characters.

Four Mutt and Jeff cartoons will be released in April. They are "Mutt, the Mutt Trainer," "Subbing for Tom Mix," "Pigtails and Peaches" and "Seeing Things."

Kunsky Books "From Headquarters."

Word comes this week that Vitagraph's Anita Stewart production, "From Headquarters," has been booked by the John H. Kunsky Amusement Enterprises for first-run in Detroit.

W. P. Nichols, of the Canadian Film Service, Ltd., of Vancouver, has also booked the picture for all of his houses, and among other bookings on "From Headquarters" recorded in the last few days are the Jefferson Theatre, of Dallas, and the Regent, of Battle Creek, Mich.

Argus Units for New England.

The Star Amusement Theatre, 7 Tremont Row, Boston and the Orpheum Theatre, Malden Square, Malden, Mass., have recently purchased from the Lewis Electrical Supply Co. and installed Argus Mazda Projector Units for their respective theatres.

"Palestine Pilgrimage" Released April 6.

"A Palestine Pilgrimage" is the title of the Outdoor for release April 6. Scenes in the Bethlehem market place, with picturesque types of the present inhabitants of the Holy Land; the Sea of Gallilee, the City of Tiberias and the Ancient Ruins of Baalbek make this Outdoor one of absorbing interest.

Big Demand for "The Iron Test" Posters.

Vitagraph's sales promotion department reports that the sales of posters and lobby displays in connection with "The Iron Text" has necessitated the reprinting of a number of editions.

The gross amount of advertising of all sorts on "The Iron Test" is larger than the amount taken on any of Vitagraph's serials for the same length of time after release.

Judging from All the Bells in These Scenes from "Virtuous Men," It Must Be a Ringing Attraction.
There is the bellboy on the left, while on the right the alarm bell, and the alarmingly attractive belle add to the purpose of the S-L feature with E. K. Lincoln.

Does Matt Moore Point Out to Marion Davies the Gravity of the Situation?

Nope, for Marion says, "What a long finger our Matt has!" Showing that "Getting Mary Married," as done by Select, is a handful.

Co-operative Plan of the Four Star Pleases Thomas

AUGUSTUS THOMAS, dean of American playwrights, author of "As a Man Thinks," a remarkable social analysis which has just been done into pictures under Mr. Thomas' personal supervision by Producer Harry Raver for Four Star Pictures, is enthusiastic over the results of the Four Star co-operative plan under which author, producer, director and star are featured as co-equal elements in the work.

"I have had a considerable amount of experience with picture production," said Mr. Thomas, "and I may say that in all my associations I never knew the work of the studio to run so smoothly nor with so satisfactory a result as in the production of 'As a Man Thinks.'

"George Irving, director of the concern, knew what he wanted, and when the others found out what that was they gave him just what he asked for. Leah Baird went smiling through her part, and so did everybody else. That's one good result of a high-grade cast. Everybody in the picture is a professional of standing.

"I am at work now on the plot of a new story to be produced by Four Star. The work is well along, and I expect casting will begin within a week or two. For the present I do not care to discuss the plot. As to 'As a Man Thinks,' I hope Mr. Raver's and my own faith in the excellence of the production will find general indorsement. All I can say about it is that in its picture version it justifies all my expectations, and for the rest let the public decide."

Popular Novel Next Vehicle for Morey.

Harry T. Morey, under the direction of Paul Scardon, is well along with the production of his next feature release. This picture is adapted from one of the popular novels of the season, selected because it gives Vitagraph's big virile star a role that measures up to his physical and dramatic stature. It is pure romance, swift moving, and with a powerful mystery element, says the announcement.

Rothacker Cameraman in Land of Sphynx.

"An Eyefull of Egypt," showing the Bedouins "at home" on the Sahara Desert in their moments of relaxation from their pastime of robbing caravans and sandbagging travelers, is an interesting Outdoor picture produced by Rothacker and released by Exhibitors Mutual.

The camel is the Bedouins' desert "flivver," and he is shown breaking all speed laws on the desert boulevard. "Old Flowing Robe," the "Eva Tanguay of the Sahara," is seen in a graphic interpretation of the Arab dance.

This Outdoor concludes with a trip up the historic Nile River. An Egyptian sunset brings to a conclusion one of the most attractive of the Outdoor series.

"Beating the Odds" Next Morey Release.

Vitagraph's next Harry T. Morey release is "Beating the Odds," and is adapted from Irving R. Allen's novel, "The Money Maker." Supporting Mr. Morey is a cast which includes Betty Blythe, Jean Paige, Eulalie Jenson, Charles Stevenson, George Majeroni, Robert Gaillard, Robert Mowbray and Frank Norcross. The production is under the direction of Paul Scardon.

"Beating the Odds" is said to be different in its theme from the Morey pictures which have gone before. It is a story of a man who, by utter lack of scruple, rises to great wealth.

The story gives Mr. Morey a splendid opportunity for his virile type of characterization.

Barrymore in a Strictly Dramatic Role.

John Barrymore appears in the first strictly dramatic role of his photoplay career in his new Paramount picture, "The Test of Honor", which is scheduled for release April 6. The picture is founded on E. Phillips Oppenheim's novel, "The Malefactor," the screen adaptation being the work of Eve Unsell. Mr. Barrymore portrays the role of Martin Wingrave.

Love, tragedy, remorse, revenge—all these dramatic elements form, as it were, a crucible through which the character of Martin Wingrave has to pass on the way to ultimate regeneration. Mr. Barrymore's leading woman is Marcia Manon.

Keenan Pictures Liked in Canada.

Ernest Ouimet, president and general manager of Specialty Film Import, Ltd., of Montreal, and Mrs. Ouimet and two sons, and Mrs. E. Thibadeau, who are passing the winter in Southern California, were recently among Frank Keenan's visitors at the Robert Brunton studios, Los Angeles.

"The Keenan productions are popular in Canada," Mr. Ouimet said. "Our playgoers are partial to the gripping, intense drama—a logical story of an interesting phase of life and its emotions and passions."

"Something to Do" Is a Lively Washburn Comedy

BRYANT WASHBURN'S newest Paramount picture, "Something to Do," which is released April 13, is a picture of the speedy variety. The story is by Maxmilian Foster.

Mr. Washburn has a role which gives him an opportunity to show that he can handle wide-awake characters with the same ease with which he portrayed the sleepy sort in his previous productions.

Ann Little, who has played leading woman for three different men stars during the past few months, proves by her work in this picture that no matter what the type of character of the lead she supports she can render a perfect portrayal of her part. In this picture she portrays the role of Janet Remwick, a social secretary.

The role of Peter Remwick, her father, who has been placed in an insane asylum by the girl's scheming aunt, is ably played by Robert Brower.

Charles Gerrard is cast as Thompson, the hero's deceitful valet, who was posing around in high society as a nobleman, while Adele Farrington as the scheming Mrs. Parkin contributes a capital comedy portrayal.

Charles Ogle as an asylum keeper and James Mason are other well known Paramount players whose names are a guarantee of the merit of their work.

Donald Crisp directed the picture, and it was photographed by Charles E. Campbell. Will M. Ritchey wrote the scenario.

"Amateur Liar" Is Drews' April Release.

"The Amateur Liar," the story of a husband's first fib, is the Paramount-Drew release for April 6. The V. B. K. Film Corporation presents this comedy which was picturized and produced by Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew. It was written by Albert Payson Terhune. Laughable incidents include a false Spanish Influenza scare which leads Mr. Drew as "Henry" to a hot mustard foot bath. All audiences will appreciate the timely incidents which were received with enthusiasm at the Rivoli Theatre, New York, where the comedy was featured during the week of March 30.

Peggy Hyland Begins "Cowardice Court."

Another popular book is being made into a William Fox play. This is "Cowardice Court," by George Barr McCutcheon. Peggy Hyland is the star of the picture, which will be released in the William Fox Excel Pictures group.

The story is full of romance, thrills, good-humor and exciting situations. The picture is being made at Hollywood under the direction of William C. Dowlan, a new Fox director.

In the cast supporting Miss Hyland are Jack Livingston, Arthur Hoyt, Katherine Adams and Burton Law. The scenario was written by Joseph Anthony Roach.

Polo Working on Fourth Western Drama.

Having finished "Cold Steel," which was directed by George Holt, Eddie Polo has begun work on the fourth of a series of special two-reel Western dramas entitled "Buck Lawson Rides Alone." Jacques Jaccard is directing Mr. Polo in this vehicle. Under the direction of Jack Ford, Pete Morrison and Helen Gibson have begun work on a new Western drama bearing the working title of "Out Wyoming Way."

Sells Six Simplexes in One Day.

The Hollis-Smith-Morton Company, Simplex distributors in Pittsburgh, report that on March 22 six Simplex projectors were disposed of, making this a red-letter day at their establishment. This concern has been engaged in the supply business for many years.

Desertward Goes Madge for "Leave It to Susan"

AT present Madge Kennedy is "lost" in the Mojave Desert—lost with her associates concerned in making her new Goldwyn Picture, "Leave It to Susan." It was written by Rex Taylor, who set about to provide Miss Kennedy with a role entirely opposite to the one she assumed in Hugo Ballin's comedy and unlike any of her others as well. Clarence G. Badger again is her director.

The locale of the new picture places the star in the midst of the desert's wastes. First of all she is seen as the daughter of a capitalist, who, with his family, journeys West on business. An amusing accident leaves Susan behind when the train resumes its trip after an interruption. Susan is deserted with only her dog clasped in her arms. The desert stretches all around her. The people she afterward encounters, the seemingly desperate situations in which she becomes involved, and the big surprise which comes to the girl promise to make "Leave It to Susan" a comedy-drama rich in laughter and unexpectedness.

Varied and thoroughly human types surround the star—players of established reputation including Alfred Hollingsworth, George Kunkel, Anna Hernandez and Walter Hiers, not to mention a corps of real cowboys and a leading man new to her in the person of Wallace MacDonald.

ORPHEUM THEATRE, FLINT, MICH.

Petrova's Stage Tour Boosts Her Films.

Y., recently, "The Panther Woman" was shown in a picture theatre on the next block, and the noted star had the unique experience of competing in person with herself on the screen.

New Serial Has Snow Background.

Still pictures on the first seven episodes of "Perils of Thunder Mountain," the new Vitagraph serial in which Antonio Moreno and Carol Holloway will be starred, have arrived in New York, and no further testimony is necessary regarding the snow that abounds in the serial.

Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, and Cyrus Townsend Brady are the authors of the serial, as they have been of all of Vitagraph's past chapter-plays, and they have designed this particular thriller for a snow background. The outdoor thrills that have been so big a factor in Vitagraph's previous serials will be done this time on snow-covered mountains.

R. N. Bradbury and William Baumann are directing the production.

Issue Press Book on Brockwell Film.

One of the most comprehensive press books ever issued by the exhibitors' bureau of the Fox Film Corporation has been published for the exploitation of "Pitfalls of a Big City," featuring Gladys Brockwell.

Because of the theme of the picture—it is a story of the underworld and a girl's ambition to go straight—unusual advertising and publicity opportunities are afforded.

The art advertisements are unusually effective. They are line-cuts extended to make striking displays even in the most obscure positions on a newspaper's page. Mats on these art advertisements are furnished free.

Gladys Brockwell in Strong Crook Story.

"Pitfalls of a Big City," announced as the current Gladys Brockwell feature, is declared to be the greatest picture of Miss Brockwell's career. It is a crook story, with its scenes laid in the underworld of a typical big city, and it relates the struggles of a girl who has reformed to stay reformed. Persons who have seen the picture at private screenings declare it is remarkable for its strong human appeal, its powerful situations and the logical development of a girl's character.

Mix Popularity Grows Each Successive Release

THE release last week of Tom Mix's fifth Fox victory picture, "Fighting for Gold," centered attention on the great strides which this Western star has made in public esteem this season. Mix ranks as one of the most popular stars making his type of picture, and the high standard of each of his successive productions has brought him in a peculiar position in the eyes of exhibitors.

Already, it is said, reports are coming in that "Fighting for Gold" will prove an even bigger success than "Hell Roarin' Reform," Mix's last picture. It has more thrills and the stunts that Mix performs never have been done by anybody.

"One of the remarkable things about Mix," said a Fox official, "is that each of his pictures seems better than the one that preceded it. It is rare that a film star can ring the bell on every picture, and the better the stars and the bigger their reputations the more noticeable is any falling off in merit. Mix has been uniformly excellent from his first picture, and his reputation is based on good solid achievement.

"It is worthy of note also that Mix is a box office attraction who appeals not only to men, but to women. The romance and love interest woven into his plays make them assured successes with women film fans.

"Plans are being formulated now that will give Tom Mix even greater scope for the exercise of his talents. Just what these plans are it is not possible to state at this time, but exhibitors who think that Tom Mix is the livest drawing card in the market will find their conviction amply justified."

Washington Likes "Made In America."

Great interest is being shown by patrons of Loew's Palace Theatre in Washington in "Made in America," the Ashlay Miller patriotic series distributed by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation. Many people who missed the opening episodes have been so interested in the making of the American soldier, as depicted in the series, that they have inquired where they could see the first reels. Exhibitors throughout the country booking the film, which was produced with the co-operation of the Government, have expressed similar satisfaction.

We Have with Us Alice Joyce and Maurice Costello in "The Cambric Mask."
This production sees Costello, old-time Vitagraph favorite, on his home screen once more.

Amusing Plot Forms Basis of New Hamilton Comedy

IT'S a case of trading hearts in Hale Hamilton's "After His Own Heart," now under production at the Metro studios in Hollywood. In the picture, Thomas Wentworth Duncan (played by Hale Hamilton) bargains with his heart for a price. It is wanted by a rich old fellow who thinks if he had a youthful heart it would restore his juvenile spryness. Thomas Wentworth Duncan is all ready to submit to an operation for the removal of his cardiac organ, when something happens.

Just what happens is the basis of the roaring comedy plot of this picture made into a scenario from the four-part magazine story of Ben Ames Williams by A. S. LeVino, of the Metro scenario staff.

Harry L. Franklin is directing the piece. Naomi Childers is Hamilton's leading woman, and the cast also includes Herbert Pryor, Harry Carter and Frank Hayes.

Helen Weir Casted for Rothapfel Comedy.

Helen Weir, who will be remembered for her portrayal of "Jennie" opposite David Warfield in "The Music Master," has a prominent role in Samuel L. The mastery of boxing which made Corbett champion boxer of the world is very evident in the opening chapters.

It Got in Earle Williams' Blood.

That Earle Williams, the Vitagraph star, has been bitten by the serial thriller germ is evident in "The Usurper." In the early part of this picture he plays the part of a ranchman, and he calmly saves his leading woman, Louise Lovely, from the perilous side of a cliff by throwing a lariat over her and pulling her up the side of the precipice to safety.

This Western atmosphere serves but as a prologue to the story, the main action of which takes place in the homes of aristocracy.

"The Usurper" was directed by James Young.

Boosts "Our Teddy" with Mail Campaign.

J. L. Parks, manager of the Seelye Theatre, Abilene, Kan., supplemented his newspaper advertisements for "Our Teddy," the McClure authorized Roosevelt picture, by mailing personal letters about the film to prominent people in Abilene and vicinity. The letter emphasizing the fact that this picture portrays the life of Roosevelt in "an interesting and graphic manner," and that, by Colonel Roosevelt's direction, the royalties are to be donated to the Red Cross. It was found a most effective means of interesting the people with influence in the community in the Roosevelt picture.

Blue Coat for "Big Bill" Russell.

"Brass Buttons" is the fifth picture in the series of William Russell Productions made for the American Film Company, Inc. Russell has a breezy, active role in the part of a wealthy New Yorker who dons a cop's uniform in order to scrape acquaintance with a pretty girl, glimpsed on Fifth avenue and followed to her home.

The picture is down for release March 30. Eileen Percy is the fair charmer and Henry King the director.

"The Silver Girl" To Be Released by Pathe April 8

EDWARD PEPLE, author of the Broadway success, "The Silver Girl," has declared that the screen version, starring Frank Keenan, released April 8 by Pathe as an Extra Selected Star Photoplay, is the best adaptation of all of his stage productions thus far given to the screen. Technical reviewers have pronounced it a big production in craftsmanship and in emotional appeal.

Mr. Keenan, himself, who has to his credit a long succession of master-portraits of the stage and the screen, says he considers Jefferson Hunter, the Nevada miner, the biggest of all his creations.

It is an unusual love story, full of dramatic intensity and quiet suspense; and the big climax grips the beholder.

The story deals with the love of a man well on in years and a friendless girl. After years of unrelenting toil in the waste places of Nevada, Hunter finds himself a millionaire. Unwillingly bringing his young wife into the swirl of New York life, he almost loses his silver girl. But with eyes opened at last, the wife sees clearly the snares and pitfalls of society and decides that the best place is by her husband's side in Nevada.

The story is interpreted by a specially selected cast which includes as Mr. Keenan's principal support, Catherine Adams.

Notable Cast for Farrar in "The Stronger Vow"

A NOTABLE cast surrounds Geraldine Farrar in "The Stronger Vow," her newest Goldwyn picture, set for release April 27. As in her previous Goldwyn productions, Milton Sills is the diva's leading man.

Tom Santschi is once more seen in a part commensurate with his ability. He has the part of the villain.

John Davidson is making his first appearance as a Goldwyn player in a role admirably fitted to his talents.

An important role in the picture is in the capable hands of Hassard Short.

Starts Work on "The Dark Star."

Marion Davies has begun work in the Paragon studio on "The Dark Star," a screen version of the novel by Robert W. Chambers. Allan Dwan is the director. The cast includes Herman Kerry, Matt Moore, Dorothy Green, Fred Hearn, George Cooper, Arthur Earle, Ward Crane.

Select Next Subject for Emmy Wehlen.

Emmy Wehlen, Metro's star, began her first picture at the new Metro studios in Hollywood on Friday, March 7. Her new starring vehicle is "The Amateur Adventuress," which appeared in a monthly magazine as a short story from the pen of Thomas Edgelow, and was made into a scenario by Luther A. Reed of the Metro scenario staff. It is a breezy comedy romance, peopled with interesting types of humanity. Henry Otto is directing the production.

First Christie Special Announced for April 20

THE first of the Christie two-reel special comedies, "Sally's Blighted Career," has been completed, and will be released April 20, bookings to be made through the independent exchanges handling the Christie one-reel comedies.

In addition to bringing Fay Tincher back to screen comedy, this production introduces a special cast, including Molly Malone, Patricia Palmer, Harry Depp, Marjorie Payne, Helen Darling and others.

In this first special, Mr. Christie has attempted to define his idea of screen comedy by producing features in two reels and presenting pictures of real people in humorous but not exaggerated situations, letting the plot thread its way into fact farce, with now and then an incident which in motion pictures is termed "hokum."

The scenario of "Sally's Blighted Career" was written by W. Scott Darling from Walter Graham's original story. Mr. Christie was assisted in cutting and titling by Mr. Darling, who has been added to the Christie forces.

The story of "Sally's Blighted Career" presents Fay Tincher as a country girl who at a choir festival is kidded by traveling show people into believing that she has a grand opera career. The twist to the story of the ambitious girl going to the city and getting into the chorus comes when she proves to be a "boob," gets ejected from the theatre and is brought back to the cows and chickens far from Broadway.

In presenting the first two-reel special, the Christie firm has prepared many forms of exhibitors' aids. Among these are art lithographs from drawings done by E. G. Klein, a Los Angeles artist; music scores, which will give for the first time synchronized musical accompaniments for the showing of the comedy, and a house organ issued monthly, a large part of which will be devoted to illustrative material which can be used in advertising the showing of the Christie specials.

Pioneer Offers "Virtuous Sinners."

Announcement is made by the Pioneer Film Corporation that it has secured the dramatic production, "Virtuous Sinners." Flynn, and features Wanda Hawley, supported by Norman Kerry and a competent cast.

Edouarde to Direct at Premiere of S-L Picture

He will compose an original musical setting for the presentation of "Virtuous Men," to be held at the Fulton Theatre on Sunday evening, April 6. In collaboration with Ralph Ince, who directed the picture, Edouarde will carry out many unique ideas in the music. A symphony orchestra composed of twenty pieces has been engaged for the occasion. In addition to playing for the picture these artists will render a specially selected overture. Mr. Edouarde, himself, will conduct the orchestra.

Exhibitors throughout the country will be enabled to take advantage of this original musical setting, as it will be supplied in modified form for use in connection with the picture.

personal appearances at a number of moving picture theatres in nearby territory, including the Savoy, at Newark; Amsterdam Opera House, Amsterdam, N. Y., and United States Theatre, Paterson, N. J., in the order named. He also contemplates appearing in a number of other houses as soon as necessary arrangements are made.

"Beyond the Law" is being handled in New York territory by the recently formed Aywon Film Corporation, of which Nathan Hirsh, formerly of the Pioneer Film Corporation, is president and general manager.

In New Jersey and upper New York State, Nathan Hirsh says the bookings on "Beyond the Law" and "Once to Every Man" are being made rapidly, the attractions proving excellent from the box office, as well as the entertainment, point of view.

Domestic territory is selling fast on the Security series of features which the Aywon Company is releasing, and buyers for foreign markets have signed contracts covering the entire foreign rights.

First Texas Guinan Is Completed by Frohman

ADVICES from the West Coast studio of the Frohman Amusement Corporation announce the first of the two-reel Texas Guinan subjects, "South of Santa Fe," has been completed, and the second, "The She Wolf," is well on its way.

"South of Santa Fe" was written especially for Miss Guinan, and is said to embrace a new departure from the commonly accepted character of Western dramas. The picture is on the theme that in the West a woman can be the equal of any man, and her life is along the same lines as those of the opposite sex; and, living next to nature, she encounters the same difficulties, yet maintains the exclusiveness and the delicacy of her sex.

In order to maintain the standard set and in keeping with published statements that the Texas Guinan two-reel Westerns will be special features, William L. Sherrill, president of the Frohman Amusement Company, has been at Los Angeles to personally supervise the inauguration of his West Coast company and to oversee the making of the first two productions.

"Virtuous Men" Is Said to Be a Real Melodrama

IN substantiation of their assertion that "Virtuous Men" is one of the biggest melodramas of the screen, Arthur H. Sawyer and Herbert Lubin point out some of the dramatic moments in the play. Particular stress is laid on the situations in which E. K. Lincoln, Clara Joel and Robert W. Cummings figure.

Mr. Sawyer says, "In one of these scenes Lincoln, in the role of Bob Stokes, is lured to the apartment of Marcia Fontaine, interpreted by Clara Joe. Here he finds himself trapped through the cunning of Brummon, acted by Cummings. Facing death with his back against the wall, Lincoln has to fight his way through. This situation is tense, finishing with a dramatic climax entirely unlooked for. In another scene, Lincoln holds at bay an enraged mob of workers. Forceful in action, and charged with dramatic possibilities, these are but two of the melodramatic situations which occur in 'Virtuous Men.'

"Director Ralph Ince succeeded in having E. K. Lincoln and his supporting cast enact these scenes so as to make them natural and realistic, avoiding the staginess some times found in screen melodramas. Ince has kept all of these situations logical, infusing that peculiar something which differentiates the real from the make believe."

Bromberg Buys Neal Hart Rights.

A. C. Bromberg, vice-president of the Southeastern Picture Corporation, of Atlanta, closed a deal this week with Arrow Film Corporation whereby he acquires the rights for several Southern states to the Western feature, "When the Desert Smiled," starring Neal Hart.

Zion Film Advances Date on Showing of "Khavah"

COINCIDENT with the announcement last week that a private showing of the first Sholom Aleichem picture, "Khavah," direction of Charles E. Davenport, would be given about April 15, prominent exhibitors and state rights buyers interested in the production prevailed upon the officials of the Zion Films, Inc., for an earlier showing. They declare that the booking possibilities of the picture would be greatly enhanced if it were possible to release the film in time for the Jewish Easter holidays.

In accordance with this suggestion, Director Davenport is rushing work on the assembling and cutting of the picture. Nat Dorfman, a local newspaperman, will edit the film and write the titles.

"Khavah" is a story of Jewish life in Russia, and is said to tell a simple humane narrative that grips, and to be replete with dramatic and humorous moments characteristic of Sholom Aleichem, who has been called the Jewish Mark Twain. Alice Hastings is the star of the picture, and is supported by Giacomo Masuroff and Alex Tenenholtz.

Ivan Abramson on Trip Closes Many Big Deals

WHAT started out to be in the nature of a vacation trip for Ivan Abramson, director general of the Graphic Film Corporation, is announced as having developed into one of the most successful trips ever made by a film man.

On March 6, Mr. Abramson left New York, and on his first stop, Philadelphia, sold to the Superior Film Exchange rights to "Ashes of Love" and "The Echo of Youth" for eastern Pennsylvania and southern New Jersey. Proceeding to Pittsburgh, he closed with Mark Schoenfield for the same productions for western Pennsylvania and West Virginia, and on his next stop, Chicago, made a contract with Frank Zambreno, of Unity Photoplays, for rights on "When Men Betray" and "The Echo of Youth" for Illinois, Indiana and southern Wisconsin.

Mr. Abramson next went to St. Louis, where he sold "When Men Betray" to the Grand Central Film Company for Missouri, and from there he went to Minneapolis and closed with the First National Exhibitors' Exchange of the Northwest for the same production for Minnesota, North and South Dakota and southern Wisconsin.

"The White Heather" Has Unique Underwater Scenes

THERE are said to be a number of unique features to Maurice Tourneur's latest picture, "The White Heather," not the least of which are the scenes taken at the bottom of the ocean, and which provide the big punch of the melodrama. These scenes were taken by Mr. Tourneur off San Pedro Harbor by means of the invention of the Williamson brothers, which makes sub-sea photography possible. This invention, utilized so successfully in "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea" and "The Submarine Eye," has been still further developed by the Williamsons and utilized off the California coast. The results are said to be startling.

"The White Heather" is said to be the first instance of a motion picture being actually directed on the ocean floor. Mr. Tourneur donned a deep-sea diver's suit and directed his players at the bottom of the sea by means of signals.

Not only is "The White Heather" said to possess greater punch than Mr. Tourneur's melodramatic screen hit of last season, "Sporting Life," but it possesses greater and broader appeal, and to tell a story not only of interest to men, but to women as well. It lies far from the world of sports, the romance being one of the Scotch highlands and the sea. It is a story of contrasts revolving between the Scotch nobility and the London underworld. There are scenes of natural beauty among the sheep herders of the uplands in contrast to the grim studies of night life in the London streets.

Mr. Tourneur, in following his theory of obtaining a well balanced cast rather than a star, has surrounded himself with an able company, including little Ben Alexander, the boy whose excellent screen work in "Hearts of the World" and "The Turn of the Road" is well known.

Mr. Tourneur is announced as having discovered a pretty and able actress in Mabel Ballin, and the other members of the cast include H. E. Herbert, Jack Gilbert, Ralph Graves and Spottiswood Aitken.

The releasing arrangements for "The White Heather" will shortly be announced by Mr. Tourneur's New York representatives, Hiller and Wilk, Inc.

Sawyer and Lubin announce that over 1,500 requests have been received for tickets. Pew, president of the organization, and J. Leonard Mason, business manager. Many notables of the film industry and the theatrical profession have also signified their intention to be present.

Under the direction of Thomas Auburn an original stage setting has been designed into which the opening scenes of the production will be skilfully merged. In order that every one of the spectators may see this picture the seating arrangements have been revised so as to give a perfect view of the screen from all parts of the house.

Unique Ideas Introduced in "Virtuous Men" Titles

SPECIAL care has been taken to embellish the story of "Virtuous Men" with subtitles of an unusual nature. Arthur H. Sawyer and Herbert Lubin have endeavored, both as regards illustrations and wording, to inject original ideas. An unusual main title introducing Director Ralph Ince, E. K. Lincoln, the star, and certain members of the cast has been prepared from original crayon drawings made under the supervision of Ernest Stern.

Throughout the picture illustrated subtitles have been introduced only where they interpret the action or to serve the purposes of decoration. They have all been executed by poster and magazine artists. The pictorial backgrounds are said to have been skilfully merged with the continuity of the story.

The wording of the subtitles is the work of Bert Ennis and Arthur H. Sawyer, and are announced to have been written so as to arouse and hold the interest; and the dramatic elements to have been lightened by the use of comedy titles written in colloquial style. A style of hand-lettering new to screen productions will be introduced. It is said the lettering is very artistic.

Blumenthal Sails to Book Serial.

Ben Blumenthal, president of the Export & Import Film Company, visited Oliver Films, Inc., recently just before sailing for Europe to conclude the negotiations for the sale abroad of "The Carter Case," a Craig Kennedy serial. He is enthusiastic over the reception of this release throughout the world.

Foreign buyers are said to be contracting for "The Carter Case" at prices which surpass those thus far obtained for serial production, and, on the strength of "The Carter Case," are contracting for future Oliver Films productions which, it is contemplated, will be released in May and September. The prices paid by the foreign buyers are announced as on a par with "The Carter Case" prices.

"The Carter Case" Booked Heavily Around New York

FOLLOWING the successful launching of "The Carter Case," a Craig Kennedy serial in which Herbert Rawlinson and Margaret March appear as costars in the film version by Arthur B. Reeve and John W. Grey of the former's well known scientific detective stories, exchange men report bookings of this episode photoplay by a large number of exhibitors in their respective territories, bearing out their judgment of the production as a box office attraction.

In Greater New York sixty-nine theatres have already acquired "The Carter Case" as a regular weekly feature on their bills. Approximately the same number of houses have booked the serial in the smaller towns throughout the state, while even heavier bookings are reported by the other exchanges in the towns within their respective territories.

Advance bookings in the New England States are said to indicate an extra heavy number of bookings in that territory. In view of the fact that no trade showing has as yet taken place there, Mr. Samuel Grand has arranged to hold a specially arranged presentation at the Fenway Theatre in Boston on April 1, and to which New England exhibitors have been invited. Mr. Grand looks forward to record breaking bookings as a result of his private exhibition.

Heavy sales of "The Carter Case" in foreign countries has also been made, which would indicate the universal appeal of this scientific detective photoplay and the world-wide renown of "Craig Kennedy." The serial has been sold for the following South American countries: Uruguay, Paraguay, Argentina, Chile, Cuba, Porto Rico and San Domingo. The Far Eastern countries have closed deals which will bring "The Carter Case" into British India, the Dutch East Indies, the Straits Settlements, China, Japan and the Philippine Islands. In Europe the United Kingdom was first to contract bookings, while continental countries are about to sign up.

A large number of theatres in Greater New York and New York State and northern New Jersey are already showing the serial. The bookings were made by the Pioneer Film Exchange, which is located at 130 West 46th street, New York.

Beautiful Girls in Billy West Film.

The Bulls Eye Film Corporation announces that in the forthcoming Billy West comedy entitled "Flirts," which will be released in the near future, the comedian is surrounded by one of the most attractive bevies of beautiful girls ever seen in a motion picture. The studio at Hollywood is said to have been besieged by beautiful girls when it was announced that this type was desired in large quantities, and the resulting picture is said to show the pick of the flock of the California film colony. Milton L. Cohen, president of Bulls Eye, also claims that aside from the attractive girls it is one of the very best pictures in which Billy West has appeared.

First Territorial Feature, "The Prodigal Wife"

THE Territorial Sales Corporation has purchased from Screencraft Pictures, "The Prodigal Wife," for the United States and Canada. This is the first big feature to be bought by Territorial Sales, and a number of others will follow shortly. At present this company is preparing to place on the state rights market the first three of the new series of Jester comedies.

"The Prodigal Wife" was produced from "Flaming Ramparts," a story by Edith Barnard Delano. Mary Boland and Lucy Cotton are the featured players. The plot deals with the rebirth of a woman's soul through love.

Some territory has already been sold, but the following districts are still open: Ohio, Kentucky, Michigan, Missouri, Kansas, Nebraska, Iowa, Oklahoma, Minnesota, Wisconsin, North and South Dakota, Maryland, Delaware, District of Columbia, Colorado, New Mexico, Utah, Wyoming, Idaho, Alaska, Washington, Oregon, Montana, Virginia and North Carolina, and the entire Canadian territory.

In the cast of "The Prodigal Wife," in addition to Lucy Cotton and Mary Boland, are Raymond Bloomer, Alfred Keppler, Harris Gordon, Vincent Coleman and Mrs. Stuart Robson.

Frank Reicher, who directed "The Prodigal Wife," well known as an actor and stage director, graduated into the screen world following his staging of Sothern and Marlowe plays. He was for a long time with Famous Players, for whom he directed many productions. Blanche Sweet pictures were made under his supervision. Subsequently, Mr. Reicher was for some time with Metro forces.

Territorial Sales expect to begin selling operations next week, having received a number of applications for franchises on the Jester comedies. None will be disposed of, however, until after next week.

A full line of advertising and exploitation material is now being arranged on the Jesters, which it is said will be the most complete ever issued on any series of comedies.

Frohman Picture Does Not Violate Anti-Fight Laws

ACCORDING to a statement from the Frohman Amusement Corporation, a condition recently arose that for a time threatened to prevent the showing of "Once to Every Man" in certain sections of the country. However, this matter has been settled, and the production may be shown throughout the United States.

Several states have laws against the showing of motion pictures of prize fights, and the question arose as to whether such scenes, when occurring in photoplays of the nature of the Frohman production, violated the statutes. The attorney generals of these states have been consulted by the Frohman Amusement Corporation, which now advises that its contention that fictional photoplays embracing a prize fight do not come within the provisions of the statute and are not a violation of it has been upheld in each instance.

MR. ROSENBERG, president of the De Luxe Feature Film Company, Seattle, who is at present in New York on a business trip, announces he has secured rights to "Mickey" for twelve states—Washington, Oregon, Idaho, Montana, Minnesota, North Dakota and South Dakota, also Mississippi, Louisiana, Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas.

The northwestern states are being handled by Mr. Rosenberg from his Seattle office, and he reports heavy bookings and excellent business in all sections. Arrangements have been concluded by which the five southern states will be handled from Sol L. Lesser's Chicago office, at 1203 City Hall Square Building, Chicago.

Mr. Rosenberg also reports the purchase of territory on "Yankee Doodle in Berlin," the Mack Sennett feature comedy handled by Hiram Abrams, for Washington, Oregon, Idaho and Montana. This deal does not affect Sol Lesser's arrangement for the United States and Canadian rights on this film, which covers all the remainder of the territory; Mr. Rosenberg having secured his territory before the Lesser deal was made.

During his stay in this city, which will be for several days, Mr. Rosenberg is busily engaged in viewing films and expects to secure additional attractions for his territory.

Sidelights and Reflections

NEIGHBOR MASON, of the Exhibitors' Trade Review, having devoted nearly a column on the editorial page of that enterprising journal to answering the article which appeared in this department taking exception to some of the points in his "The Public vs. The Critics" editorial, a reply to Mr. Mason's answer will be published in our next issue. The matter under discussion seems of real importance to the entire industry and an exchange of ideas may prove of value. At any rate, the reply overflowed this column.

A star, a press agent, an interviewer and the conductor of this department sat in a pleasant room, overlooking Central Park the other day and gave their views as to how the public regarded a picture in which the star did not have the best part. The discussion was brought about by a lady who is accustomed to seeing her name in electric lights in front of the moving picture houses throughout the land, frankly admitting that her leading man's part in a story she is to do, is better than hers.

"But," she added, "I'm sure the public doesn't mind, if they are interested in the picture; and it is much better to have the star's part secondary if changing it will weaken the story."

The interviewer agreed with the star and the press agent was sure that both ladies were right.

As this opinion did not entirely coincide with the writer's views, as expressed in this column last week he said so, and the showmanship angle was applied to the matter. Further argument brought out the following conditions as having a bearing on the subject:

The public would unquestionably rather see the star in a secondary part in a good story than to see her in a star part in a weak story.

But: Showmanship demands that she have a star part in a good story and is not overshadowed by her leading man. The difficulty of obtaining such stories was admitted; also the necessity for the exhibitor to make the best of the best pictures he is able to book. But it was also admitted that the exhibitor always seeks to capitalize the star's name and reputation for his own profit, and plays her up strong in all his advertising; that the public are led to believe the star has the best part in the picture; that she will appear to better advantage if she have the best part and it will make the public all the more eager to see her in her next picture.

To put it concisely: The better the story, the better the star and the better the star's part, the bigger the exhibitor's bankroll. WEITZEL.

"Fighting for Gold"

Tom Mix in Fox Film Pictures Man Whom Nothing Can Daunt.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

A LOVE story in a western background is told by the new Fox film, "Fighting for Gold," five parts, with a rough and ready vigor that will very likely hit the mood of the spectator acceptably. The hero, played by Tom Mix, is both dauntless and generous. He calls himself a roughneck, but was once a gentleman and never forgets it. Teddy Sampson makes a pleasing heroine for him to win. The backgrounds are interesting, and there are plenty of incidents such as a dash down a hillside so steep that a bear had to negotiate it head-over-heels, and a gallop by the hero after a runaway horse with the heroine in a wagon. It is not a markedly dramatic picture, but holds well all the way.

Story by William Macleod Raine.

Directed by Edward J. LeSaint.

The Story.

Jack Kilmeny, son of an English gentleman, has taken with his partner, Curley Brandon, a valuable claim. A rapacious mining company covets the mine. One day while Curley is drunk, Jack stands off four men sent to kill him and seize his property.

The proprietor of the company is an English lord, and he comes with some friends, among whom is Moya, a pretty young girl, to visit his holdings. While the party is at lunch by the roadside, the horses run away and the girl in the wagon is in danger. Jack on a hill-top sees this and after a wild gallop rescues her by snatching her out of the wagon.

A few days later while a rodeo is in progress, Jack's partner lets himself be persuaded by a woman to waylay and rob a man. He is dressed in Jack's coat, has his horse, and is taken for Jack. In the meantime Jack has had another meeting with the girl who discovers that he is her third cousin and invites him to dinner. The sheriff comes for him. To escape being handcuffed, he makes an exciting get-away.

Jack finds Curley, gets the money, comes back to the sheriff and gives himself up, but is permitted to go to his claim that has been jumped by two ruffians. The girl also goes to the claim for help and is captured. Jack breaks in and there's a fight. He is saved by Curley who is then mortally wounded. The sheriff comes and Curley confesses. Jack and Moya are left alone with each other.

"The Scar"

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

IN this five-reel picture, entitled "The Scar," Kitty Gordon appears as a full-fledged courtesan, who runs the gamut of several love affairs with different men, one of whom she sends to prison by perjuring herself on the witness stand, and another to death from drowning after he had lost his fortune in her gaming house. Cora herself, the character portrayed by Miss Gordon, loses her mind at the last and is confined in an asylum as the story closes.

The subject is one of the erotic, emotional sort, as will be seen from the above. But it is one that will carry strong entertainment value to certain spectators, who have a liking for highly-seasoned love stories. The role of the courtesan is ably portrayed and must be regarded as an improvement over the vampire characterizations of the recent past, since there are none of the prolonged, passionate love scenes that robbed many such subjects of any semblance of reality. The development of this picture is in the narrative style, rather than the dramatic, but Cora is made to seem real.

Irving Cummings plays the part of George Reynolds, one of Cora's lovers, in pleasing fashion. The role is one that carries quite as much interest as that of the star herself.

The Story.

Cora is a Spanish adventuress living in Latin America, who regards men as playthings. She has just broken off an affair with a Spaniard named Valdez, when George Reynolds comes into her life. Reynolds saves her from the last desperate efforts of Valdez to hold her affections, but in doing so the hero finds himself facing a challenge for a duel. The duel is fought, with Reynolds emerging as the victor, and he proceeds to take Cora with him to the United States.

He establishes Cora in a snug home, where he visits her frequently. But Cora soon tires of this and seeks another, the man in this case being Caryl Haskill, a friend of the hero. Reynolds becomes suspicious and in a struggle with Cora a revolver is accidentally discharged, severely wounding her.

Cora testifies on the witness stand that Reynolds had attempted to kill her, and he is sent to prison for a term of not less than five years. She carries her revenge further and visits the prison gang, at road work, and taunts him openly.

Years pass and Cora opens a gambling house in New York. Here Caryl Haskill loses his fortune and then drowns himself, after she has cast him off. Reynolds reappears, after his release from prison. He marries a young girl and later meets Cora, who again attempts unsuccessfully to ruin him. She herself loses her mind and is confined in an asylum.

THAT the new Metro attraction, "The Parisian Tigress," will interest and delight is sure. The story has decided freshness and holds even though the weakness of its construction keeps it from being deeply emotional. For instance, we don't know that Jeanne is really the daughter of the count till her "brother" who is a crafty liar says so with his dying breath.

The entertainment is greatly heightened by skilful direction. Herbert Blache has put on some tremendously realistic scenes of Paris slums and has made his high life atmosphere distinguished and convincing. The Story.

Count de Suchet, years before, had lost his baby daughter and tells a friend of the tragedy. Jeanne, called "the Tigress," is an Apache and her rough brother makes her dance in slum dives for money. One night he compels her to dance a great deal against her will and ends by agreeing to make her act friendly to a dissipated stranger. She tries to escape and after upsetting tables and chairs, darts away.

The brother follows her through the streets. The count's friend is opening a door and she slips in. She hides. Next morning the brother, who has marked the house, appears to claim her. The friend conceives the idea of palming her off as the count's daughter, and the plan is carried out, though the girl is reluctant. In the count's beautiful country place, Jeanne falls in love with a young neighbor. The count's false friend tells her she must marry him to repay him for making her rich.

The count is dying. The brother comes for more money and the count's sister overhears the conversation. Jeanne sends the brother away, but he slips back and breaks into a jewel safe. A box falls and discloses a photograph of the count's wife that he recognizes as Jeanne's real mother. The butler hears the noise and in the struggle the Apache is killed. The count's sister, the doctor, the false friend and others come into the scene and the dying Apache confesses and proves that Jeanne is really the count's child. The closing scenes round off the romance with the young neighbor.

"Three Men and a Girl"

Paramount Presents Marguerite Clark in a Fantasy of Girlish Caprice.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

LITTLE more than a vehicle for dainty Marguerite Clark, "Three Men and a Girl" attempts to burlesque an old fable or nursery story of the little girl and three bears, and it ranks with those Paramount productions intended to entertain women and children. With only material enough for two or three reels it becomes somewhat attenuated in five, especially by the use of a large number of narrative subtitles. The personality of Miss Clark helps greatly, but that charming quality might easily be emphasized by a story of more varied action and vivacity. In this one there is a tendency to repetition of scene, incident and subtitle not particularly enlivening to mature minds. Under the title, "The Three Bears," there was a stage play produced at the Empre Theatre of New York by Edward Childs Carpenter, from which the Paramount Fantasy is derived by Eve Unsell. The director, Marshall Neilan, has secured some pretty backgrounds, but the photography is hardly up to the high Paramount standard, and the product may be valued accordingly.

The Story.

Sylvia Weston is a capricious young lady who answers at the altar "I do NOT," and thereupon runs away from a rich bridegroom she has promised to marry. She runs away in bridal costume to a bungalow she owns on "Loon Lake" only to find it occupied by three woman haters, each with a grudge against the gentler sex. They expel her and her old nurse, compelling the women to live in a cabin and draw a line, a staked rope, over which the ladies may not pass. One by one the three bears fall in love with the little girl bride, the two older ones, supposing her unhappily married, propose to adopt her and provide her with some clothes other than her bridal costume and bathing suit, all she has, but the younger one is the wiser one and wins the girl in the end.

Feature Marguerite Clark as Sylvia Weston and Richard Barthelmas as Christopher Kent.

Advertising Angles: Play up Miss Clark from every angle. Build up on this with a brisk synopsis of the story or use "One is trying to dodge a married woman. The other two were disappointed in love. All three hated women until they found Marguerite Clark asleep on the sofa in their Hermitage—after she had eaten their supper. What do you suppose happened? You can find out, etc." Get at least one of the six-sheets and use more if you can.

"What Am I Bid?"

Six-Reel Universal Special Presents Mae Murray in Pleasing Mountain Romance.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

SPECTATORS of this six-reel Universal Special subject, entitled "What Am I Bid?", will find many further evidences of advancement in the screen work of Mae Murray. Her impersonation of Betty Yarnell, an uncouth but fascinating flower of the moutain country, is one of the best things she has done. Her grasp of the character is firm and sure, though there are a few places where she has a tendency to overplay the role, bringing it dangerously near to burlesque. But she makes a living, suffering human being out of the girl and the story of her struggles is one of strong interest.

The production is literally filled with picturesque scenic effects, splendidly photographed. These settings were chosen with fine discrimination and add much to the enjoyment of the number. There is, however, a certain padded effect at times, giving an impression that the story might better have been told in five reels. The plot, while it has certain conventional elements, is on the whole an original one and contains many situations that are fresh and different. It has so much to offer that is new that the production is sure to make friends wherever shown.

Directed by Robert Z. Leonard.

The Story.

Bety Yarnell is the daughter of an ex-schoolmaster who has wrecked his life by drink. The girl is practically an outcast, living on the edge of the village with her worthless father. The latter has no ambition in life but to get more whiskey.

A stranger, named Ralph McGibbon, comes to the community. He sees Betty and becomes interested in her, principally because he learns that the bartender, Abner Grimp, wants her. Ralph saves the girl from Grimp and wins the latter's hatred as a result. Grimp, in the course of a hand-to-hand struggle, wounds Ralph severely and Betty saves the hero from death in a dramatic manner. She then nurses him slowly back to health in her cabin. Her father in the meantime, who had agreed to sell the girl to Grimp for whiskey, dies from heart failure.

Betty is more an outcast than ever, since she has lost the last shreds of her reputation in nursing Ralph. The latter's father and sweetheart come from the East and implore Ralph to leave, but the heir has learned the meaning of true love and remains near Betty. He finally claims her as his wife when the town folk are trying to sell her off as a dependent orphan, as was the custom in the community.

Advertising Angles: Start off with the curiosity angle and begin your advertising with "Girl for sale" either in newspaper work or posted paper. Then enlarge on this by advertising that a girl will be sold at your house on a certain date, running from this into your straight newspaper work, starting off your first advertisment with the same "Girl for sale," and explaining just how it comes to happen. Offer the larger side angles, and of course play up the star, but the girl for sale idea will prove your best selling point, so stick to that. Make as much use as you can of the three and six sheets with the question mark.

"The Sheriff's Son"

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

THE general character of this Paramount-Ince story is that of the Western melodrama of adventure, chase and rescue, in which Charles Ray, as "the Sheriff's son," Royal Beaudry, has his physical courage put to the test and overcomes the timidity of inexperience under trying circumstances. A hand-to-hand fight with three ruffians, out to humiliate and "do" him, is the most spirited of his conflicts with a gang bent on making the son pay the penalty of his father's severity with lawbreakers. The values of the picture are those of the Western melodrama and of Ray's own popularity, its purpose to show that fear may be overcome when a man's back is up against the wall, or even in resentment of injustice. Ray responds to the limit of his opportunities, as his support does to the roles accorded them. "The Sheriff's Son" is adapted by J. W. Hawks from a story by William McLeod Raine. The capable direction is that of Victor L. Shertzinger.

In pursuit of an old pal of his father's, who has been kidnaped, Royal Beaudry, the sheriff's son, enters dangerous territory under an assumed name. His true identity is quickly discovered by Beulah Rutherford by means of his hat initials, and she arouses the suspicions of the Rutherford gang, of which her father is the leader, declaring that the newcomer is a spy. Soon after wondering if her father's crowd is engaged in criminal acts, leads her to regret her betrayal and to assist Royal to escape after he has been badly wounded by the Rutherford crowd. In this escape, however, he rescues his father's old pal, and one helps the other out of danger. The girl Beulah, however, still believes the young man to be a coward. She chances to see him later on, when his courage is tried to the utmost. He wins a desperate fight, and then rescues her from an old prospect hole into which she has fallen. Beulah realizes at last that Royal is brave at heart, and that she loves him.

THE secrets of the millinery business are exposed in "Marie, Ltd.," a Select picture that has Alice Brady as the star. Like the character she is playing in her stage success, which promises to run a whole season in New York, the heroine of the picture is an innocent young girl who knows very little about the realities of life. Her experiences with the men in the story are not new plot material, but considerable novel incident is introduced by the revelation of how certain fashionable hat shops overcharge the unfortunate male beings who foot the female customer's bills. There is a strong undercurrent of serious interest in the story, but the motives are none too skilfully put together. The characters bob in and out too quickly and many of the situations are insufficiently developed. Alice Brady's performance of Drina Hilliard, the daughter of the fashionable milliner, goes a long way toward making the picture fairly interesting. Her support is excellent.

Drina is still further surprised when she learns that her mother wants her to marry Colonel Lambert, an old rounder who is paying the bills of a show girl named Zelie. The colonel has a daughter who is in love with Blair Carson, a wealthy young chap who traveled east on the same train with Drina and drove off a train robber like a true hero. Blair and Drina become attached to each other, but events are shuffled about so that a serious misunderstanding occurs and Blair pays attention to Zelie while Drina accepts the attention of the colonel. There are a number of scenes of Broadway night life and the two couples meet frequently at the cabarets. production is rich in picture values. The story through intelligent and sympathetic scenarization and continuity by Gertrude H. Bergen has retained the deep human appeal so characteristic of O. Henry. It has also kept the freshness of incident, language and conclusion in which it is safe to say no one surpasses the author. The part of Peter Kenwitz, philosopher of the slums, portrayed by Frederick Buckley is a big part of the production, and the contribution of the watchmaker to the value of the picture is justly never lost sight of. Through his quaint language O. Henry conveys his great yet portable ideas on human life and endeavor.

Corinne Griffith is not only appealing as the unhappy drudge, but her portrayal of the principal role from start to finish is a revelation of ever shifting light. She has created a new characterization in the part of Mary Boyne whose life was one of the ripples made on the pool of life when the great financier Kinsolving cast his pebble therein. The picture shows fine coordination of author, scenarist, star, support, and director.

Septimus Kinsolving, financier, takes a flier in wheat during a shortage in the crop, corners the flour market, forces up the price of bread and breaks many bakers. This is the start of "The Unknown Quantity." Thomas Boyne's failure weakens his mind. His daughter, Mary, after seeing him placed by the police in an asylum, takes up the work of a common drudge to support herself and her brother. The latter, who has been consorting with criminals, is "planted" with stolen jewelry to assure the freedom of the real thief who had murdered their possessor. The brother is placed on trial for murder. Dan Kinsolving, returning from England, seeks out Peter Kenwitz and learns of these three consequences of his father's financiering. He seeks "the unknown quantity," that which will restore the wronged father, daughter, and son to their proper place and happiness. Make them realize that you have something worth while. Hook up to the success of the earlier O. ## "The Amateur Liar"

A Two-Reel Paramount Comedy With Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

THE story of a husband who foolishly attempted to lie to his wife without time to prepare a good one, "The Amateur Liar" is the latest Paramount-Drew comedy. The husband is late in keeping a lunch engagement, being detained by a lady not particularly high in social favor at the time. In order to dispel any possible suspicions his wife might entertain, he tells of helping out an old pal of his recently involved in business disaster. The pal happens in at the same lunch place exhibiting no signs of sorrow, but to the contrary shows that he is in high spirits. The wife chances to get a word in private with the old pal and is amused to find that her husband has told a lie out of whole cloth. She thereafter leads him on into one falsehood after another, each to explain the other, until he is in a tangle from which there is only one way out, the gordian knot of confession. He owns up and all is forgiven. The story's chief commercial value lies in the popularity of Mr. and Mrs. Drew and their capable utilization of very limited opportunity.

"Hearts Asleep"

Bessie Barriscale Gives Intelligent Performance in Attractive Five-Reeler for Exhibitors Mutual.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

THERE should be no argument as to the box office value of the Exhibitors Mutual five-reeler "Hearts Asleep" in which Bessie Barriscale is featured. The play which has been staged with good effect presents a fascinating tale of a slavey who fell into luck, which never fails to attract lovers of romance and adventure. Bessie Barriscale does exceptionally good work in the earlier moments of the picture. Her portrayal of the little scrub girl, helpless and stolid of expression, carries conviction; and perhaps it is not her fault that the same girl five years later assumes an improbable amount of polish in her new surroundings.

The scenes in the crooks' den are unusually good, and Anna Dodge, Henry Woodward, and in fact all associated in these scenes are deserving of special note. The basic idea of the story intended to exploit the theories of the man who looked on humanity as one big family, is worthy of a wider development. The confining of the thought to the welfare of one individual weakens its force. The dramatic values of the picture are fairly strong; and by means of the crook element it has been possible to inject considerable suspense into the action.

Cast.

Nancy.....Bessie Barriscale
Virginia Calvert.....Vola Vale
John Lewis.....Frank Whitson
Randolph Lee.....George Fisher
Gentleman Chi.....Henry Woodward
Andrew Calvert.....Tom Guise
Mother Hawkins.....Anna Dodge

Story by M. B. Havey.
Directed by Howard Hickman.

The Story.

In "Hearts Asleep" a little waif who has been picked up in the street by Mother Hawkins, a "fence" for a crook gang, makes her miserable living by doing scrub work for a certain family in whose hearts pride of birth stands uppermost. A friend of the family, John Lewis, whose ideas are progressive and philanthropic, is appealed to by Nancy when Gentleman Chi, a friend of Mother Hawkins, tries to make her a thief. Seeing a chance to try out his favorite theory that good environment and opportunity are more powerful in the development of fine men and women than blooded ancestry, he adopts Nancy, sends her to school, and later presents her to his friends, a full-fledged lady. At a house party to which Gentleman Chi is also invited, Nancy takes the blame for a theft which she knows her chum, a society girl, has committed for love of Gentleman Chi and at his instigation. This brings about the climax of the plot where Lewis's theory makes good, and also the blossoming of a romance between guardian and ward.

Publicity Points.

Honesty proved the best policy to the scrub girl who found wealth and happiness waiting for her around the corner.

Blue blood sometimes produces "scrubby" men and women while a scrub woman may be a lady in disguise.

Seeking to Prove His Pet Theory That Environment Makes the Thoroughbred Wealthy Bachelor Is Ensnared by Cupid.

Advertising Angles: Feature the star and link the story up to her, telling that she is a little girl of the underworld who wanted to go straight and who preferred scrubbing to stealing. Use the situation where Nancy faces Gentleman Chi and seeks to expose him without incriminating herself; but seek to get interest in the story because it is played by Miss Barriscale.

"Whitewashed Walls"

William Desmond Featured in Burlesque of Latin American Politics.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

AS the result of a visit to certain Latin American republics, Ethel and James Dorrance wrote a comedy which is a travesty on tragically amusing happenings which were noted by them. This comedy, "Whitewashed Walls," which was published in one of the Frank A. Munsey publications has been adapted to the screen for the Exhibitors Mutual with William Desmond in the role of the fun-loving American architect and sculptor. The comedy as written by the Dorrances affords many situations richly adapted to burlesque, but it is a question whether this version places sufficient emphasis on the various details of the plot to give the comedy the keen edge that will penetrate the average bump of humor. As the writer sees it, it falls slightly short of that subtlety of interpretation required to put across any attempt at burlesque. William Desmond, Jay Dwiggins, Fritzi Brunette, and Walter Perry are noticeable in the cast for their good work. The Central American atmosphere of the story has been well sustained.

His failure to show proper respect to the governor and other high dignitaries affords amusing situations, and leads him to strike one of the officials on the head with a decanter. The sweetheart of the official persuades him to pretend death, and a fake funeral is staged, after which he hides himself with the hope that the occurrence may at a later date bring him promotion. When the American is about to be stood up with his back to the whitewashed wall and shot, he reminds the conceited governor that if he is killed he will have no one to finish the sculptoring on the palace. At each attempt to pull off the execution he finds some other reason why he is necessary to the governor's peace of mind.

Finally he persuades the governor to allow him to make a statue of him to be placed in a niche of the palace. In the meantime a friend passes a revolver through the prison window to the American, and at the last attempt to execute him he pulls the revolver and makes the governor step into his place. This ruse proves successful, and he gains the official's consent to his marriage with his pretty niece.

"Pettigrew's Girl"

Paramount Presents Ethel Clayton In A Heart-Warming And Finely Handled Story.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

MODERN, up-to-date, containing a definite purpose, and set forth clearly and artistically, "Pettigrew's Girl" not only affords talented Ethel Clayton abundant opportunity, but constitutes a valuable addition to the Paramount program. It will please Americans to a certainty, and stir true-hearted people wherever shown. Good for any exhibitor's patronage, whether high or low, because it powerfully appeals to our national sensibilities, and to the finest idealism of national service. Our duty to one another, and to our country for the common good is the motive felt quite as well as seen in a very simple, and direct love story, the romantic attachment of a private without wealth, without kin, without pull of any kind, for a New York stage beauty at the height of her popularity.

Sympathy is strongly enlisted for the common, ordinary soldier doing his part in the general crusade, in simple unaffected American fashion. The handling of the Paramount subject is flawless and the interpretation of Ethel Clayton, Monte Blue and others of the cast is of the highest order, the whole constituting a gem in the field of motion picture production.

Cast.

Daisy Heath.....Ethel Clayton
Private William Pettigrew....Monte Blue
Private Jiggers Botley.....James Mason
Hugh Varick.....Charles Gerard
Piggy.....Clara Whipple

Story by Dana Burnet.
Scenario by Will M. Ritchey.
Directed by George Melford.

The Story.

In "Pettigrew's Girl" the hero is the most lonesome man in his company. No mail comes for him, but he takes simple pleasure in watching the others, and they show him letters, pictures and presents they receive from home, particularly from their best girls. On his leave of absence in New York he buys the photograph of a stage beauty, Daisy Heath, and he secures the front seat for her performance, nearly queering her act at a time she is trying to hook a young golf-playing millionaire. Pettigrew waits for her at the stage door, obtains a personal indorsement of her photograph and so amuses her that she accepts an invitation to join him in a "sody water." Quite unknown to himself he starts a flame in her heart.

In the course of time she visits his camp to sing for the soldiers and happens upon him at a most unfortunate moment when he is being punished for a fight he has had, though he is too modest to let her know it was for her sake. Deeply touched by the simple sincerity of his devotion, her love growing as her character expands, she discards the young millionaire when Pettigrew goes abroad to do his duty. Thereafter she lives like millions of others in anxious hope that her plain soldier boy will return. He does return. She is in war-workers costume herself when she sees him in the Fifth Avenue parade. She joins him, marches along with him arm in arm, her story forever united to his own.

Advertising Angles: Play up the star and work on the story angle. In telling the story be emphatic in your statements that this is not a war story but a story of today, a story of the girl who waited. There is a strong appeal in the angle of the man who wanted a girl and the girl who waited. Play it up attractively, but always with the personal rather than the soldier angle. In telling it tell that it is the story of a musical comedy star who waited for a soldier rather than that it is the story of a soldier who loved an actress. Throw the main angle to the star.

"A Regular Fellow"

Five-Part Triangle Comedy Shows Taylor Holmes in Mad Pursuit of a Beautiful Girl.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

THE comedy-romance, "A Regular Fellow," in which Triangle presents Taylor Holmes in the role of a woman hater who is converted in the twinkling of an eye into a madly romantic lover, is likely to be a favorite with the laughter loving public. The star's slight inclination to burlesque the role of Dalion Pemberton seems to be a happy thought which helps considerably in putting the comedy across. Christy Cabanne, the director, has not wasted much film in idle exploitation, but has made every inch of it count in comic incident, the hero pursuing the girl of his fancy in the face of obstacles of varying intensity. A cleverly woven plot, in which a crook theme runs parallel with the story proper, merges successfully with the latter as the play approaches its climax.

The Story.

A young man who despises women, and takes a great deal of trouble in nursing his hate, suddenly comes face to face with a pretty woman whose beauty and charm cause him to fall head over heels in love with her. The young lady is of the modest, well-bred sort, and hedges successfully each time the young man tries to get acquainted. In desperation he attempts to follow her on the boat bound from Buenos Aires to New York. Finding that he has left home without either pocket book or check book, difficulties, which he bucks with remarkable persistency, pile up continuously. Finally he manages, in spite of his silk-hatted immaculateness, to get into the hold of the ship with the coal. His discovery by the ship's crew ends in his being presented with pail and mop and put to work. He leaves the boat through one of the portholes and lands in jail for his trouble. His escape with a couple of fellow prisoners forces him to push the "buzzer" on the front door of a wealthy mansion. At this point of the story a double conspiracy to rob the house is uncovered It turns out to be the home of the girl he loves, and the hero proves himself a "regular fellow" when he overcomes a superior number in a good stiff fight at the head of the stairway. He is recognized by the girl, and finds he has been "running after the girl that he was running away from." The girl mentioned in his aunt's will as the one he should marry is none other than the girl he has accidentally fallen in love with.

Get after some catchlines such as "Went to South America first class and came back in the coal bunkers." "He thought he was a woman hater until he found the right woman." ## "Fit to Win"

Six-Reel Picture Released by Public Health Films Is Frank Revelation of Sexual Immorality and Its Consequences.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

IS "Fit to Win" fit to be shown is the first question that an exhibitor wants answered about this six-reel picture. It was made originally for use in the army as a warning to the soldiers of the dangers of sexual immorality and shows with absolute frankness the price a man pays for breaking the physical and moral law.

It does not belong in a family theatre to be shown to a mixed audience of men and women.

Under proper conditions its exhibition is bound to benefit the general health of the country. It gives the facts about its subject in a way that cannot be misunderstood. A spade is called a spade.

There is no attempt to disguise any ugly truths under scientific terms. Any false ideas that a young man may have about the seriousness of venereal disease are corrected by showing victims of wrongdoing in different stages of their suffering and explaining the difficulty of effecting a cure.

"Fit to Win" has a well constructed story—the story of five young chaps who enlist and are sent to one of the training camps. Four of them, on "leave" one night, spend a part of the time with immoral women. As a consequence when the company is sent to France, three of the boys are left behind, being physically unfit for duty. Billy Hale,

"Good Gracious Annabelle"

Paramount Presents Billie Burke in Delightful Characterization.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

AS Annabelle, the demure and whimsical heroine of "Good Gracious Annabelle," the attractive star of the screen version of the Kummer stage play fits as neatly into the part as she does into the numerous fetching gowns she wears. And trust Billie Burke when it comes to frocks and fashions. Although so much of the humor of the original was in the dialogue, enough witty remarks have been retained in the subtitles to help the picture greatly. The amusing situations are all there and several new ones have been added. There is an air of good breeding about the story and the persons in it, and the Paramount production does this feature full justice. Classed as a society comedy it lives up to its name. The spectator who wants anything approaching red-blooded drama will get but a brief taste in the opening scenes. Events move along smoothly and Billie Burke is so charmingly irresponsible about spending her friend's money and forgetting to mention she has a husband somewhere that most onlookers will be satisfied to take her and the picture at a good entertainment valuation and no questions asked about the probability of things. With Clare Kummer and Billie Burke for billboard value and a fine comedy charmingly presented for the solid attraction, "Good Gracious Annabelle" should be one of Paramount's big cards.

Annabelle lives extravagantly on a quarterly allowance she spends monthly, until she is tricked out of two very important shares of mining stock given to her by a miner who compelled her to marry him and immediately set her free when she cried herself into personal liberty. During a struggle for possession of her stock certificates she takes a violent fancy to a mysterious young millionaire. She tells him she is resorting to all the tricks she plays simply to save her husband, whose interests are threatened. The mysterious millionaire turns out to be that husband, and this time he wins his wife through love.

Advertising Angles: Use plenty of paper to advertise Miss Burke personally, and make a liberal lobby display of paper and photographs. Emphasize the fact that this is a highly successful play, done into film. Frame up snappy phrases for your newspaper work such as "She didn't know her husband when she flirted with him." "Hired out as a cook to escape divorce noteriety." Snipe the title before you commence other advertising, and reproduce it on cards. Make it familiar to your patrons before you commence to talk.

"The Intrusion of Isabel"

Five-Reel American-Pathe Subject Features Mary Miles Minter in Splendid Comedy.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THIS five-reel American-Pathe production, entitled "The Intrusion of Isabel," strikes this particular reviewer as being one of the best examples of straight comedy he has seen on the screen. It is not to be confused with the farcical, uproarious sort of concoction so often presented, but belongs in the category of polite comedy, a very different thing and one more difficult to make successful.

The plot conception of the author, Joseph Franklin Poland, is one that Pinero himself might not be ashamed to father, except that it is far more juvenile in character than that of the Pinero plays. It deals with the adventures of an unsophisticated brother and sister, reared in luxury in the South, but thrown upon their own resources in the city. Mary Miles Minter and J. Parks Jones are fine types for these ingenuous babes-in-the metropolis and they are supported by a thoroughly competent and agreeable cast.

The situations developed in this story pique the interest tremendously, yet at the same time reflect an admirable delicacy of feeling. The tone of the comedy is of the very best.

"The Tiger's Trail"

New Astra-Pathe Serial Moves Off with Some Dashing Melodramatic Episodes.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THE first two installments of this new Astra-Pathe serial, "The Tiger's Trail," in three and two reels respectively, introduce Ruth Roland as the pretty heroine. She will be remembered as the leading feminine figure in "Hands Up!" a serial which the new one somewhat resembles. In the supporting cast are George Larkin, who also played in the final episodes of "Hands Up!", Mark Strong, George Field, Easter Walters, Harry G. Moody and Frederick L. Kohler.

The plot, which is one filled with melodramatic episodes, rapid horseback riding and the frequent conflicts of cowboys and outlaws, has several leads of special interest. It brings into play a stolen "Tiger" idol, which once belonged to the Tiger Worshippers, who appear in the story. Then there is the mysterious "Pact of Three," which vitally concerns the heroine, since her father was one of the signers. The paper signed in this pact is torn into three parts and the efforts of the heroine and the various men of opposing interest, is to gain possession of all three parts of the paper in order to locate the desired treasure. The situation is one that develops a more or less conventional chain of events, but one that promises to be alive in movement and full of exciting incidents to all concerned.

The Story.

Grim Gordon is in possession of the Tiger Idol, stolen from the Tiger Worshippers on an East Indian Island, which he and Peter Strong and Colonel Boyd visited years before. The two latter men were killed, but Belle Boyd, daughter of Colonel Boyd, is living and has part of the "Pact of Three," which had been torn in three pieces, and contains the location of certain treasure discovered on the expedition.

The scene is laid near some pitchblende mines, owned by Gordon, among the employes being a number of Hindus and Tiger Worshippers. Belle Boyd, who is Gordon's ward, is attacked by a gang of outlaws, under leadership of "Bull" Shotwell, on her arrival from an Eastern school, but her life is saved by Jack Randall, a mining engineer. The latter is employed by Gordon, but assists the heroine in outwitting the evil forces which center about her, in the efforts made to obtain her part of the torn pact. She is thrown into a cage with a live Bengal tiger, by the Tiger Worshippers, and made

"Your Wife and Mine"

Tyrad Melodrama with Eve Darrington in Leading Role and in Six Reels.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

THE best thing that can be said for "Your Wife and Mine," a new Tyrad picture in six reels, is that it is full of sure-fire melodramatic incidents. The production and acting are passable. The picture will appeal almost wholly to middle-class theatregoers. There are some good things in it that have nothing to do with the story, such, for instance, as a sensational dance and an acrobatic troop doing stunts. The backgrounds are in France or northern Italy and the players are Latin and full of hand gesticulations. The well-photographed scenes are full of interest.

The story has the quality we usually associate with serial pictures full of sensations and with no great deal of dramatic continuity between the episodes. Such a picture aims at excitement rather than plausibility to make the action seem convincing.

The Story.

The hero and heroine of "Your Wife and Mine" are English aristocrats and are enjoying a protracted honeymoon in southern France. In England we see the man's cousin, who has thought himself the heir to title and estate, discovering that a child has been born to the young pair. He and his sister scheme to get rid of this impediment to their inheritance.

They come on a visit to the honeymooners. The villainess sees the wife talking to her unknown acrobatic brother and persuades the husband that she is not true. The husband, in despair, goes on his yacht and orders the captain to put to sea. The villains have had a time-bomb put in the hold. The baby is stolen. The acrobatic brother hears of the bomb. Wireless warns the husband, and the yacht is brought back. The villainess is captured and forced to tell where the child is hidden. The husband has been stabbed and is in bed. The villain goes to destroy the child and finds the mother there alone. The acrobats are hurrying after him. The child is again stolen, the mothed tied to a bed post and the house set on fire. The acrobats come and the brother climbs to the room, frees the mother, who jumps from the window. The villain leaves the child on the railroad track, but is rescued by the dog just as the train rushes past. The villain commits suicide and the happy ending is near.

"The Exquisite Thief"

R. H. Cochrane Presents Priscilla Dean in Strong Six-Reel Universal Subject.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THE Universal production in six reels, entitled "The Exquisite Thief," might without exaggeration be called a "super-crook" story. It certainly excels other recent Universal features of the kind in almost every respect, moving as it does from the sparkle and glitter of high social life to the dark corners of the underworld with a pleasing authority. It even penetrates a pretty woodland section, where the two leading crooks, after threatening each other with guns and questioning each other's loyalty in every possible way, finally decide to forsake the life they have been leading and "go straight."

The love story in this is really a very pretty one and has some touching moments, despite the fact that the whole conception is far removed from real life. The subject as a whole is one of those highly artificial tales that sometimes succeed in gripping the interest with an intensity unlooked for.

Priscilla Dean goes right ahead improving her work in each feature. She is described as "dazzling" in one of the opening subtitles, and her performance in lifting the jewelry of an entire dinner party in the first reel certainly deserves the word. This reel at once marks the subject as an unusually good one. The support is excellent throughout.

Cast.

Blue-Jean Billie.....Priscilla Dean
Sergeant Woods.....J. Milton Ross
Shaver Michael.....Sam DeGrosse
Algernon Smyth, "English Harry,"
Thurston Hall
Muriel De Vanderholt.....Jean Calhoun

The Story.

Blue-Jean Billie, in "The Exquisite Thief," is a prosperous young woman crook who lives somewhat apart from the denizens of the underworld, and with her pal, Shaver Michael, has pulled off many successful robberies in high society.

Billie gains admission to the Vanderholt dinner, at which the engagement of their daughter is announced to Lord Harry Chesterton. While the dinner is in progress Billie gags and handcuffs a special officer and makes a wholesale robbery of the guests. She flees in an auto, and none succeed in tracing her but Lord Chesterton. Billie makes a prisoner of the latter, but a police raid follows, and she is forced to flee.

Once more Lord Chesterton succeeds in following her and again she makes him prisoner. But she learns to trust him and finally to love him. A special officer and Shaver Michael appear on the scene and this leads to numerous exciting complications, but the end is a happy one for all concerned.

A Correction

IN a recent issue of the Motion Picture News—Mr. E. K. Gillett, the editor of the Equipment Department, had an article devoted to the prevailing custom of elaborating in detail the beauties of a new theatre, but neglecting to tell of that most vital equipment—the apparatus used in the projection room—with Mr. Gillett we heartily agreed for he said in part * * * "The installation of an organ costing from $3,000 to $20,000 is made without a thought, or at least the price is considered a natural charge. No serious objection is made to it." * * *

And in making his final point, he says * * * "And yet if it were not for the projecting machine and the wonderful results which it produces—the architect, the organ manufacturer—and all the other equipment manufacturers—would be looking for other fields to sell their wares. The projector is the heart of every house and the one excuse in the last analysis for its existence."

IN A MORE RECENT EDITION OF THE NEWS, IN THE SAME DEPARTMENT, WE READ A STRIKING STORY DESCRIBING IN DETAIL WITH WORDS AND PICTURES THE BEAUTIES OF THE MURAL DECORATIONS—THE SPLENDOR OF THE FURNISHINGS AND THE GLORIES OF THE LIGHTING EFFECTS AT TOM MOORE'S NEW RIALTO THEATRE AT WASHINGTON. BUT THE ARTICLE GOES NO FURTHER—NOT A WORD ABOUT THE "HEART OF THE THEATRE"—THE PROJECTION ROOM—BUT ONLY THOSE THINGS WERE FEATURED THAT ARE PLEASING TO THE EYE.

SO NOW WE'RE PAYING FOR THIS SPACE IN ORDER THAT THE READER MAY KNOW THAT TOM MOORE—"AN EXHIBITOR OF NATIONAL PROMINENCE AND ONE OF THE KEENEST JUDGES OF PICTURE VALUES IN AMERICA" AND OPERATING THE STRAND, GARDEN AND PLAZA THEATRES IN THE CAPITOL CITY, HAS USED DURING HIS VAST EXPERIENCE EVERY MAKE OF PROJECTOR AND DECIDED, WHEN THE RIALTO WAS BUILT, THAT NO MATTER HOW LOVELY THE EXTERIOR, HOW BEAUTIFUL THE FURNISHINGS—THE RIALTO WOULD NEVER BE BETTER THAN THE PROJECTION MAINTAINED AND HE INSTALLED THREE SIMPLEX PROJECTORS.

THUS—MR. MOORE HAS NOT ONLY FURNISHED BEAUTY FOR THE EYES OF HIS PATRONS, BUT HAS FURNISHED PROTECTION AS WELL.

AT HER VERY BEST

In "TWO WOMEN," the matchless screen personality of this daintiest of stars will live long in the memory of all who see this powerful super-production.

As one of the "TWO WOMEN," she is a being of witchery, of magnetism, of radiant and seductive charm.

"TWO WOMEN"

The Story by James Oliver Curwood

is one of power, of gripping drama---much of it staged in the great outdoors, yet its scenes occasionally flashing back to the seething, moiling city.

Edited by George Randolph Chester

"TWO WOMEN" is a sensational picture, a spectacular picture, an unusual picture. But its basic elements—love—hate—jealousy—passion—revenge—have been the basic elements of the greatest successes in the history of showmanship that crowd the theatres and cram the box-office drawer.

ROTHAPFEL UNIT PROGRAMME

A TESTIMONIAL TO
SAMUEL L. ROTHAPFEL

THE Rothapfel Unit Programme has already been placed in twenty-four of the leading one-week-stand theatres in the largest Cities of the United States, all for presentation beginning May 25th.

Special representatives will have covered every territory by the end of next week and we can now promise to announce the securing of contracts for more than forty-five opening-week-runs in first class theatres by that time.

By arranging a Rothapfel week to take place in forty-five of America's leading theatres at the same time, backed by a national advertising campaign of gigantic proportions, we are doing things on perhaps the largest scale ever attempted in the history of the theatrical business. The Rothapfel Unit Programme is the first complete performance to be presented in forty-five theatres at the same time.

EXHIBITORS OF AMERICA

WHEN Mr. Rothapfel and I,—both being Exhibitors—created the Unit Programme, we were confident that the Exhibitors of America would back our judgment regarding the great value of an entertainment of this character:

The fact that we have booked twenty-four leading theatres in two weeks, and that we will undoubtedly arrange for at least forty-five presentations of the first Unit Programme for a full week's run beginning May 25th, should be conclusive evidence of the popularity of the plan.

Following the playing of these week stands will come the bookings for one, two, three and four day showings. The regular "Independent" salesmen, working through the Film Clearing House Exchanges, take up the work of closing these contracts immediately.

The novel manner in which the Rothapfel Unit Programme will be presented in the high class theatres running it for the opening week, and the up-to-date methods used in advertising it, not only to Exhibitors but to the patrons of the theatres as well, is bound to make this programme a tremendous success from the very start.

If you have not sent in your application for the Rothapfel Unit Programme, do so at once.

The Magdalene is in your town and every thinking and unthinking man and woman in the community comes face to face with her every day, almost every hour.

The Magdalene is a problem that has existed since the world began — a bigger problem today than ever before in human history.

The Magdalene of this day and time is the central figure in a motion picture drama that strikes at the sympathies and the heart.

Goldwyn has produced on the screen, for first release every where at Easter time, a tremendous drama of compassion; a story that draws a spark from the most deadened sympathies.

A master of the theatre, one of the painstaking, thinking, creative leaders has directed this splendid production.

First run theatres will get an even added value by presenting "The Eternal Magdalene" first Easter week, beginning April 20.

A story of the theatre. A picture of romance and envy behind the curtain that makes life back-stage mysterious and fascinating.

A cast that includes lovely Mary Thurman and Betty Schade; Alec B. ## WEEKLY

There is no other educational screen attraction of this character so ample in its scope, so thorough in its detail, so painstaking in its portrayal of personal and industrial drama, so faithful in its efforts to show the fine things in the life and affairs of the American people.

The Ford Educational Weekly is guarded carefully against the intrusion of the wrong kind of matter. Its editor and the powerful man who gives the Weekly his name are jealous of its reputation and its prestige

The more than 4,000 theatres that, under Goldwyn Distribution, present the Ford Educational Weekly rightly consider it as the greatest educational feature of the screen.

This accounts for the fact that it has "the greatest circulation in the world."

SUNDAY BILL PASSED IN NEW YORK

Both Senate and Assembly Act Favorably on Donohue Act to Permit Picture Exhibitions to Open at 2:00 P. M. in Communities Where Local Government Gives Sanction

Governor to Hold Hearing.

Albany, April 9.

AT the request, it is said, of the opposing forces to the Sunday motion picture bill, Governor Alfred E. Smith today announced that he would hold a hearing on the bill which has passed both houses and which now awaits the Governor's action. It is understood that while the Governor is more or less well acquainted with the arguments advanced by both sides both at the public hearing a few weeks ago as well as in the Senate and Assembly, he is desirous of personally hearing both sides of the issue before taking final action.

The hearing will be held in the Executive Chamber next Wednesday afternoon between 3 and 5 o'clock, each side being given an hour. Members of the New York State Exhibitors' League, still in the city, stated this afternoon that while it was still undecided, in all probability the motion picture interests would be represented by not over two speakers, the names of which were not as yet ready to be made public.

On the same day Governor Smith also will hold a public hearing on the Sunday baseball bill, which has also passed both the Senate and Assembly and which awaits the Governor's signature before becoming a law. GRANT.

Albany, April 8.

BY a vote of 84 to 58, the Sunday motion picture bill passed the Assembly at 4:30 o'clock this afternoon and was greeted by a burst of applause. No one measure considered before the Assembly in weeks caused greater interest than the vote of today. Party lines were forgotten for the time being as the matter was threshed out on the Assembly floor before a crowd of men and women behind the rail and along the sides of the chamber. Of the two women members of the Assembly, Mrs. Sammis voted against the measure, and Mrs. Lilly in favor. The bill now goes to the governor.

Today's victory really dates back for two or three years and is the outcome of a campaign that was started in the legislature during Governor Whitman's time and which has now apparently come to a successful conclusion. Today's result, signaling as it does a victory for the exhibitors, revealed the accomplishment of an organized effort on the part of the exhibitors from New York to Buffalo. Sidney Cohen, president of the New York State Exhibitors' League, and others who have been actively interested in securing favorable sentiment for the bill in practically every section of the state, were present when the vote was taken.

Obstructionists Attempt Delay.

With the Assembly paving its action of today by passing the Sunday baseball bill at midnight by a vote of 80 to 60, word spread throughout the capitol today that there would be a show-down on the movie bill some time during the afternoon. The first attempt to put the measure to the vote brought about an attempt on the part of Assemblyman Slacer to further delay matters through the introduction of amendments which would permit Sunday motion picture shows, but only after the films had been censored by a local body and involving considerable red tape.

No sooner had Assemblyman Slacer made his attempt through adroit means of delaying matters than Assemblyman Donohue, leader of the minority and father of the bill, was on his feet asking Mr. Slacer why he should place obstacles in the action which was demanded on the important measure.

Every member of the Assembly, or practically so, was in his seat when the discussion got under way and as it progressed waxed fast and furious. There was no mincing of matters. A spade was called a spade. Republicans, Democrats and Socialists were heard for or against the bill.

Every Member in His Seat.

In his opening remarks, Assemblyman Slacer said that he opposed the bill and that the petitions which had been circulated in its favor and which, sent on to Albany, contained thousands of names, presented but the one side. The speaker said his colleagues should look upon the bill from its moral standpoint, and that as New York was today the leading state of this country, other states would follow the example of today's action on the Assembly floor. Mr. Slacer brought about criticism later when he injected the labor situation into the controversy, stating that labor and its representatives could not consistently favor the bill when it meant seven days a week work.

After Assemblyman Slacer had referred to the moral issue, Assemblyman Fertig broke in and asked:

"How can seeing a moving picture on Sunday affect one's morals adversely?"

Chauffeurs' and Golf Clubs Cited.

Assemblyman Slacer's road became a bit thorny as he was interrupted time and time again. Assemblyman Steinberg, pointing across the Assembly chamber, asked Mr. Slacer when he had ever stood up for labor and why should he distinguish between the chauffeur, who, driving the wealthy man to the golf club on Sunday, enjoying the scenery, and the poor man who sees scenery on a screen.

"You do not represent the people of your district if you vote against this measure," said Assemblyman Steinberg to Mr. Slacer. "You are acting in your individual capacity and not as a representative of the tens of thousands who deem it a right to say for themselves through their common council or municipal governing body whether or not they should have the pleasure and enjoyment of Sunday motion picture shows in their respective communities."

After Assemblyman Davis had spoken for a few minutes against the bill, Assemblyman Fertig was given the floor. He went on to say that action against the bill, to the idea of New Yorkers was narrow minded and bigoted and that Jews, Protestants, Catholics, believers and unbelievers, found recreation in Sunday motion picture shows.

"Times have changed," said Assemblyman Fertig. "There was a time when our forefathers spent their Sundays reading books. Then came magazines and newspapers with pictures. Then came the stereopticon and the slides, and now we have the movies, and I want to say to the men and women of this body that the motion picture of today is one of the greatest elements of education in our civilization."

Socialist Member Aids Bill.

Assemblyman Smith was followed by Assemblyman Classen, a Socialist, who spoke for perhaps fifteen or twenty minutes and who undoubtedly made friends for the bill by his remarks.

"The motion picture is not secondary to the press in molding opinion," said Assemblyman Classen. "It occupies today the first position in this respect."

The speaker said that the motion picture was the most perfect weapon against the spread of the Bolsheviki movement. Addressing his remarks to Assemblyman Slacer, he became facetious and said that Mr. Slacer was right in that Sunday motion pictures would perhaps entail work on the part of some, but that there were many in the Assembly, to his belief, who were in favor of six days of rest and one day of work if one was to judge from the empty seats in the chamber during the months of January and February.

The bill in its summing up was handled by Minority Leader Donohue for the Democrats and Majority Leader Adler for the Republicans. At 4:20 the bill went to a vote. Scores of Assemblymen, probably as interested in the outcome as on any bill so far introduced at the present session, closely followed the v ting step by step and as the announcement was made that the measure had been carried by 84 to 58, the chamber broke forth into applause that required Speaker Sweet to use his gavel in restoring order.

Governor Expected to Sign.

It is said, and the rumor is apparently a well founded one, that Governor Alfred E. Smith will sign the bill in the near future. The bill is a local option one and permits Sunday motion pictures to open in any community after 2 o'clock providing there is no local ordinance against it, or where there is a local ordinance, it can be changed by a vote of the aldermen or governing body, as representative of the municipality.

In some cities, notably Watertown, there is already a movement apparent on the part of the churches to meet the measure half way should the common council of that city decide to open the movies there. Two or three of the churches have signified their intention of getting motion picture machines and giving pictures free on Sunday evenings.

Other Bills to the Discard.

Rev. O. R. Miller, who has strenuously fought the bill from its inception, was not present today, or if he was he kept himself well in the background. In view of the fact that the Legislature will probably adjourn within the next two weeks, there appears little or no likelihood of any attempt on the part of either Mr. Miller or his associates to press the censorship bill. A bill to tax motion pictures on a film footage is likewise dormant, and unless the unexpected happens this bill, like the one demanding censorship for New York State, will die in committee within the next few days. # JERSEY LISTENS TO SUNDAY ARGUMENT

W. W. Irwin Heads Delegation Defending Sabbath Shows at Hearing Held in Trenton This Week

THE local option Sunday bill introduced in the New Jersey legislature by Assemblyman Hyland was discussed before the Senate Codes Committee in Trenton on Monday, April 7. Those opposing it were led by the Rev. Dr. F. W. Johnson, of the Lord's Day Alliance of New Jersey, while the advocates of it were headed by Dr. Charles Hespe, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of New Jersey. Dr. Hespe, after his introductory remarks, called upon W. W. Irwin as the first speaker for the bill.

Mr. Irwin said he spoke as an American citizen and pleaded for the adoption of the bill as rational and national. Motion pictures on Sunday had been furnished by the government to the boys in the trenches, as a wholesome recreation and means of promoting and sustaining the morale of the army; they would serve the same purpose in this period of reconstruction. Motion pictures had served to promote patriotism here and abroad during the war, in which thousands had died for freedom and democracy.

He regretted the motion picture interests were speaking first as he was unable to frame in his imagination any sufficient reason for opposition to Sunday motion pictures. They had done much to bring about prohibition and had always worked in accord with the churches, irrespective of creed. Sunday pictures are a question of recreation, education and necessity. Mr. Irwin quoted from the late Colonel Roosevelt referring to the strenuousness of life and the need of recreation on the Lord's Day.

Presents Atlantic City Resolutions.

He then asked the privilege of reading into the records of the hearing the preambles adopted at Atlantic City by the committee on reconstruction at the Chambers of Commerce convention, referring to the great work done during the war by the motion picture industry. In these preambles were mentioned the generous use of screens and the gift of thousands of feet of film, without charge, for showing to the public in the propaganda of liberty loans, Red Cross and every other phase of work carried on by the government.

Senator James Hammond, chairman of the Codes Committee, asked Mr. Irwin if this work was done on Sunday. Mr. Irwin replied: "Yes."

Senator Hammond then asked if the moving picture people intended to continue showing these films free on Sundays. Mr. Irwin said: "Yes, for the forthcoming Victory Loan drive."

Senator Hammond said he inferred that all pictures were to be free of charge on Sunday (with some sarcasm) to carry out a great philanthropic purpose.

In conclusion Mr. Irwin said he was in favor of the bill in its present form. If the few who oppose it are afraid to submit this question to the will of the people, they are possessed by such a spirit of intolerance that they would, had they lived in the bigoted days, participated in the killing of people for witchcraft.

Mayor of Newark Speaks.

Mayor Charles P. Gillan of Newark said: "Speaking for Newark I am in favor legalizing Sunday afternoon and evening pictures. Legislators owe an obligation to the great problems of larger cities.

"In Newark we have a large percentage of churchgoers who are tenement dwellers and they face different conditions of living. They go to church in the morning, in the afternoon, not having libraries and other house luxuries and pastimes, they become morbid and restless. They must have some kind of recreation of the right sort.

"What more reasonable and enjoyable than the movies? Healthy citizens must have healthy minds and bodies. The poor can't play golf, they can't support clubs or automobiles and we must give them something proper to take the place of these more expensive enjoyments. The problem of recreation should be seriously considered."

Some one in the audience asked Mayor Gillan if Newark didn't have Sunday movies. Mayor Gillan answered:

"They do."

"Then why do you ask for what you have already got?"

"Because," quickly retorted Mayor Gillan, "some narrow minded person might close us up if this bill is not made a law."

N. P. Allifas, president of the International Machinists Association of Washington, stated that the members of the State Federation of Labor are in favor of free press, free speech and free public gatherings, particularly the Sunday movies. "Sunday pictures and newspapers," said he, "are similar and both are essential. I do not believe in commercializing Sunday.

On Commercialized Religion.

"Religion to a certain extent is commercialized. Years ago we had lay preachers, those who worked all week and preached free on Sunday, but today things are greatly improved. We must pay for talent and privileges; we are all willing to pay for them. The consequence is we have educated preachers, better sermons and better churches and we appreciate them and are willing to pay for them.

"Some one has said there should be no charge for Sunday movies. We might say that street cars should be free for Sunday church goers. If we started out on that presumption we would not get very far on our way. I would be willing to pay an admission to the public parks where they furnish good music and other recreations."

"The mayor of Perth Amboy," said Arthur H. Quinn of the State Federation of Labor, "wishes me to convey his approval of the bill." Personally Mr. Quinn stated that he spoke in favor of the bill and the people he represented.

"I believe Perth Amboy would cast a two-thirds vote in favor of it. I know what it is to be physically exhausted on Sunday after my week of toil, and I have longed for a moving picture show for recreation, but I was unable to find one in God forsaken Camden."

BAY STATE SUNDAY SHOWS THREATENED

New Bill in Legislature Goes to a Sub-Committee and League Fears Outcome—Horstman Talks About London

THE committee on mercantile affairs of the Massachusetts legislature has turned over to a sub-committee the drafting of a bill to prevent Sunday pictures in Massachusetts. This is taken as meaning adverse action to the motion picture interests in the matter of Sunday shows.

A meeting to determine the best method for fighting the bill was held by the Exhibitors' League of Massachusetts and Rhode Island at its headquarters on Broadway, Boston. The alarm had subsided somewhat by the time of the meeting and after an informal discussion the members voted a motion of confidence in its committee handling the situation at the State House.

The committee fighting the bill consists of Ernest Horstmann, treasurer of the national league of exhibitors; R. W. Drown of the Olympia Theatre, Cambridge, and Harry Campbell, manager of the New England Fox exchange.

Horstmann Ate Cheese Sandwiches.

Mr. Horstmann was called upon to tell some of his experiences on his recent trip to London. He said that England has the worst class of motion picture houses in the world. He said the lowest class of houses in this country are better than the high-priced picture theatres in London.

"I attended a theatre in Piccadilly," he said, "to see a motion picture. It was the five-reeler, "Peggy," featuring Billy Burke. The show started at 4:30 p. m. and the first and second reels came on with but five minutes between them. I might add that I paid 12 cents for a program. When the second act ended I thought the lantern must have gone completely out of commission. The crowd was not excited. Tea was served with cheese sandwiches and everyone had a fine chat for not less than 45 minutes. Then the house was again darkened and the third reel was shown, after which we again were served with cheese sandwiches and I was asked if I would like anything to drink.

When the picture finally ended it was 9:30 p.m. The music was something awful. And for all this they charged a crown, 60 cents admission.

Paid $2 for Seat in "Nigger Heaven."

"I then went to see a play that was showing in a London theatre. The ballet was far superior to that seen on our American stage, but again there was that terrible jarring music that would almost drive an American from a theatre. Here I paid $2 for a seat and my ticket entitled me to what we term in this country a seat in 'nigger heaven.'

"Any man who has money to invest and wishes to make it show tremendous returns should go to London and start a motion picture house upon American standards. I am sure he would reap a bonanza."

Mr. Drown asked the speaker if Londoners with their set ways would attend an American motion picture show.

Open and Closed Exchanges.

"I am absolutely positive they would," replied Mr. Horstmann.

He said the motion picture exchanges were a degree worse than the theatres themselves. He said the theatres might be termed in American slang to be bad but the exchanges were rotten. "They have as many as five sessions a day," he said. "The exchange opens at 9, closes at 10, opens at 12 and closes at 2, opens at 3 and closes at 4, and finally opens at 5:30 for one hour. Something like a kindergarten in this country."

"The trend of both exchanges and theatres is to use American films which seem very popular with the English people. If someone would show the Londoners a real live motion picture house they would certainly flock to it," said Mr. Horstmann.

Elizabeth Is Anxious to Have Sunday Referendum

IF House Bill 291, introduced by Assemblyman Hyland of Essex county, becomes a law, Elizabeth, N. J., will probably lead the Jersey cities in a referendum upon the question of Sunday shows. It is evident that the people of the state desire a referendum upon the Sunday question and the legislators will no doubt heed the people's desires.

Mayor Mravlag, of Elizabeth, is a staunch advocate of the Sunday shows. It was upon his permission last month, that a considerable number of the Elizabeth exhibitors opened their places. They are now under indictment for alleged violation of the Sunday law. The mayor is quoted by the Newark Sunday Call as having said at a recent dinner: "I can see no difference in going to a well-conducted movie on Sunday than in going in an auto to a country club and pushing a little ball from one hole to another." So Elizabethans are anxiously waiting for the passage of the Hyland bill to start their referendum.

Reid Joins News Reviewers.

Simone Returns to America a Hero from French Fields

SERGEANT PETER C. E. SIMONE, who was for five years in the Universal Eastern laboratories, leaving there to join the colors, recently returned to America after fifteen months of smashing trench fighting against the Hun. Charles Simone, his father, manager of the George Kleine and General Film exchanges in Albany, is justly proud of the record of his soldier son.

Sergeant Simone is at present at the Fox Hill general hospital on Staten Island with an injured thigh, a wound received while leading a platoon during the offensive at Chateau-Thierry. On July 18 Simone was placed in command of a picked platoon of 68 men. On July 20 he was leading a completely new outfit. At 4 o'clock in the afternoon the American infantry swept over the ridge of a hill after fighting for it like lions all day. Suddenly machine gun fire enfiladed the Yankee line from a farmhouse. The nest of Boche had to be wiped out. Sergeant Simone with a few of his pals rushed the obstacle but when within twenty yards of the house a bullet from one of the clattering machine guns pierced his right groin and shattered his thigh.

Simone Found Unconscious.

Reinforcements came to the Germans and the crest of the hill changed hands again and again. Sergeant Simone, although seriously wounded and much trampled upon, tied his leg with his cartridge belt, and covered his face with his steel hat. At midnight he was picked up unconscious and rushed to a first aid station in the American lines. In the base hospital at Bordeaux he fought still another battle for recovery and won.

As corporal of L Company of the 101st Infantry Simone won a big name for successful trench raids and patrols against the Boche. His daring was responsible for a large number of prisoners and the cleaning out of many deadly machine gun nests. It was his fighting zeal and determination to put the Hun on his back that won him a sergeant's chevrons and the command of a platoon in the line.

Victory Loan Films for Fourth Reserve District

TWO-SCORE of first release films on widely diversified subjects are available for the use of Victory Loan organizations in the Fourth Federal Reserve District. W. E. Lusk, district moving picture chairman, has just announced that these pictures are to be released beginning April 13. Because of the heavy demand it is desirable that bookings be scheduled as early as possible.

H. E. Buxbaum is chairman of the Pittsburgh shipping district and Victory Loan organizations in this area may secure films through him at the Famous Players' in Pittsburgh. None of these films are to be released to professional exhibitors on a commercial basis. They will be shown exclusively under the auspices of Victory Loan committees in churches, schoolhouses, public halls or anywhere a screen may be hung and current procured for a projection machine.

ALONE HE FIGHTS FOR SUNDAY SHOWS

R. T. Vallee of Sherbrooke Combats Single-Handed Persistent Opposition to Picture Entertainment

R. T. VALLEE, manager of the Casino Theatre, Sherbrooke, Quebec, is putting up a strenuous fight against those who are opposed to Sunday picture shows. Mr. Vallee is playing a single handed role in his struggle to remain open on Sundays, and he is continuing to do so although he has been called upon to pay a number of rather heavy fines.

The leader of the purist forces is said to be Alderman J. K. Edwards. Mr. Vallee has pointed out, however, that he is not paying the fines, but the people who support the Sunday performances. As a result of the courts cases, Mr. Vallee raised the admission price for the Sunday shows, but the people still continue to patronize these performances heavily.

In a letter to Alderman Edwards, Manager Vallee declared that it was no worse for him to operate his theatre on Sundays than for the exhibitors of Montreal, Hull, Lachine, St. Johns and other places of Quebec to do so. He advised the alderman that there were Sunday shows in many foreign countries.

Asks Why They Pick on Him.

Incidentally, Manager Vallee asked why he had been singled out for attention in this respect when other places of amusement in Sherbrooke were unmolested. The local poolrooms, bowling alleys, ice cream parlors, clubs, news stands and other places were wide open all day Sunday, but yet Alderman Edwards was conducting a campaign against the Casino Theatre.

If the fines continued, Mr. Vallee intimated that he would be compelled to make another raise in Sunday admission prices to cover the additional "expense," but that he would not close his theatre until he was shown that the agitation against him was sincere, and that the operation of a theatre on Sunday was a vice. He announced that he would, if necessary, give Sunday shows free of all charge, but he would not close his theatre until the legislature adopts a measure which would make it a legal offence in Quebec for all theatres to give Sunday performances.

Ohio Film Men Gather to Aid Sunday Picture Bill

EXHIBITORS and exchangemen from all over Ohio gathered in the state capital, Columbus, the week of April 7, to boost for the Sunday movie bill, known as the Banker Bill, to legalize the showing of moving pictures on Sundays by local option elections.

The vote on the bill was scheduled for that week end and the Ohio State Screen League did all in its power to put it over.

The league, organized for this purpose only, will no doubt be made permanent, because of other unfavorable legislation, which politicians and agitators have been attempting to foster in Ohio.

At present it is maintaining headquarters at Rooms 200 and 201, 71 East State Street, Cleveland, with a paid secretary, Gus Miller, in charge.

The officers of the league are H. H. Lustig, president, Cleveland; Fred Desberg, secretary-treasurer, Cleveland; Max Stearn, Columbus; John W. Weinig Cincinnati; J. Bernard Gardnier, Toledo; Harry W. Kress and C. W. Kline, Akron, directors.

Fail to Put Rorke Bill on Calendar.

At Harrisburg, Pa., on April 1, by a vote of 130 to 20 an attempt to override the action of the House judiciary special committee and place upon the calendar the Rorke bill, permitting paid movies and musical entertainments on Sunday evenings, was defeated. The bill was reported negatively the previous week. The vote in committee was 18 against the measure and 6 for it.

Representative Rorke started trouble when he moved to place the bill on the calendar. It is said that the sponsor knew his efforts would be unsuccessful, but that he desired to put members of the House on record. Rorke attacked the opponents of the bill as "narrow men from narrow counties."

New Victory Loan as Thank Offering for Achievement

OFFICIALLY, the forthcoming loan has been designated as the Victory Liberty Loan. The title is comprehensive and brings to mind not only the victory American youths made possible, but the cause for which some seventy thousand of them died. Legally it will be a loan, but our contributions will be in the nature of a thank offering for the victory and for peace.

We suffered comparatively little during the war, less than any of the belligerents except Japan. We have been assured of peace and tranquility for ourselves and our children. Hence we have reason to be thankful.

Self-interest alone would dictate investment in the Victory Notes, but whatever the motive that induces the subscription, subscribers will have the personal satisfaction that they are among the number of their countrymen who are practical, loyal, thankful Americans.

Cannibals Johnsons Filmed Start Revolt in Malekula

SOME skeptics throughout the country have scoffed at the statement that Martin Johnson and his wife, Osa, had risked their lives in photographing the natives of Malekula in the South Seas, and in obtaining the other pictures which make up "Cannibals of the South Seas," released by Robertson-Cole Company through Exhibitors Mutual.

These persons, who have been few and far between, inasmuch as the character of the pictures are enough to convince the most unbel eving of the dangers which attended the Johnson's expedition, are referred to the New York Tribune of March 29. That issue of one of New York's leading dailies contains a cable despatch from Sydney, Australia, telling of an uprising in Male'ula, where dwells the Big Numbers tribe, the worst cannibals in the world.

Several white traders had been captured by the cannibals, of whom Chief Nagapate, the "handsomest, cruelest savage in the world" is leader, as related by the Johnsons. Two of the traders were put to death while another escaped, and carried the news to the Government seat. Immediately word was communicated to an Australian warship which patrols the New Hebrides, which soon set about to chastise the cannibals.

FORUM BRINGS HEALTH TO INDUSTRY

In Melting Pot of Exhibitors' Opinion on First National's Advertising Policy Are Stirred Up Ideas Relative to Other Problems Solution of Which Will Mean Advancement of the Photoplay

THE melting pot of opinion seethes on. The contributions of picture showmen on the question of restricted as opposed to unrestricted advertising as raised by William Sievers' article in the March 22 issue of the Moving Picture World, continue to demonstrate that the exhibitors of the country are a wideawake body of men.

The decision of First National to limit its advertising to five trade publications has brought to the Moving Picture World's melting pot of opinion, a wealth of ideas and problems outside the immediate realm of advertising. The exhibitors are telling their stories and their troubles frankly, and these are running unedited in our columns. Producers, exchange managers, salesmen are all wound up in these exhibitor discussions and each group would do well to consider the opinions of these guardians of the box office register.

In no other business does an understanding of human psychology and an appreciation of the local situation figure more largely than in the business of salesmanship. These letters from exhibitors would refresh many a salesman and exchange manager on the fundamentals of selling.

One thing certain from the discussion by the exhibitors is their absolute interest in the advancement of the screen. The same idea is manifested in the expressions of the producers. Yet the direct road from the luxurious home office to the little window where the dimes and quarters are laid down seems to be untraveled. "Give us consistent values in pictures" is the big plea of the exhibitor, "and we will do the rest. We can put them over."

Which shows that the discussion aroused by First National's decision has brought in healthy ideas on more questions than that of the fittest advertising. The World, therefore, in herewith presenting the final installment of showman opinion, feels satisfied that it has co-operated in a movement bringing health to the industry.

By George A. Bleich

Of the Empress, Queen and Grand, of Owensboro, Ky.

THE policy of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit with regard to advertising comes like a fresh wind that blows away the fogs and the mists that have hung over the field of the moving picture journals. This miasmatic atmosphere surrounds the mushroomlike growths of trade pournals that spring up for the sake of such an existence as they can eke out (and they are about as healthy as toadstools for the motion picture business). There is also that funguslike growth, the motion picture department, that is added to some publication devoted primarily to some entirely different field of entertainment or amusement.

It may be proof of the good nature and the generous disposition of the motion picture interests that they have permitted this state of things to exist, but it is certainly not a proof of the best business judgment. It is indeed high time that the distributors awaken to the waste and stop this useless expenditure, and I am glad First National is leading the way.

No publication is entitled to advertising unless it has justified its existence by real service in its field. The trade papers that give this service are included in the list selected by the First National. The others are camp followers and should be treated as such.

Duplication Is Wasteful.

Among the great lessons the war has taught the American people there is none more important than the lesson of conservation. Anything wasteful is a crime. Duplication of advertising is wasteful to a degree, and the film people have been in this respect the most prodigal wasters of any business in the world.

After you have advertised in the five leading trade journals whose names you mention the field is covered. You could not deliver your message more thoroughly.

Where He Looks for Facts.

When I am after information about photoplays I turn to the Moving Picture World, the Motion Picture News and the papers that devote themselves to motion pictures; papers that I know are above any interest save that of zealously and accurately promoting the best interests of motion pictures. I do not turn to papers that have merely tacked on a picture department. When I read the five representative trade papers I have given all the time I can to this duty, and have covered the field. Furthermore, why should I read the same advertisements in a score of papers?

I am sure practically all the exhibitors in the United States feel the same way.

In approving the First National's

By Charles A. McElravy

General Manager, Majestic Amusement Company, Memphis, Tenn.

CHARLES A. McELRAVY is the general manager for the Majestic Amusement Co., of Memphis, Tenn., of which C. F. Bridges and R. C. Tarlton are the principal stock holders.

Messrs. Bridges and Tarlton were among the pioneer exhibitors in the South, but as their interests became varied and large they needed the services of a capable man as general manager. For this important office they selected Charles A. McElravy. When it is considered that Mr. McElravy has to supervise forces of six different theatres, it does not take a particularly wise man to figure out that he is a busy individual. However, he is not too busy to take an active interest in the progress of the motion picture industry and to express his views on matters pertaining to the trade in general.

Mr. McElravy is president of the Tennessee Exhibitors' League and also holds offices in the Masonic and Shrine lodges of Memphis.

IN the old days, when men were allowed to have many wives, a middle-aged man had one wife who was old and one who was young. Each loved him very much, but desired to see him look like herself. Now the man's hair was turning grey, which the young wife did not like, as it made him look too old. So every night she would comb his hair and pick out the white ones. But the older wife saw her husband turning grey with great pleasure, for she did not like to be mistaken for his mother. So every morning she would arrange his hair and pick out as many of the black ones as she could. The consequence was the man soon found himself entirely bald.

The moral of this little tale, to be found in Aesop's fables, is, "Yield to all and you will soon have nothing to yield."

If Aesop's fables had been penned in 1919, the topic might have been the motion picture advertiser or producer. The situations are identical. Just as the poor husband of the fable had all his hair plucked out by his two wives, each of whom wanted to profit at his expense, so it is with the motion picture producer today.

Producer Getting Bald as in Aesop.

The husband in the modern version as I am applying it, is the producer with his annual budget of thousands of dollars for advertising. The wives, far more numerous than the wives of the fable, are the publications allied with the industry. At the present rate at which the superfluous wives of the motion picture trade are plucking the financial hairs from the budget of the producers. It will not be long ere the industry is as bald as the proverbial billiard ball.

But the modern day situation is not a fable by any means. It is a hard, cold, calculating proposition of dollars and cents that today confronts the trade and requires earnest thought, keen discernment and whetted business acumen. It is not a matter nor a time for experimentations nor for unbusinesslike methods.

The mushroom growth of the motion picture magazine, booklet, pamphlet, supplement and what-not, has given rise to a serious situation. It is a matter to be seriously reckoned with in all its various phases, if the industry is not to be smothered to death with little more satisfaction than knowing that it fell an easy prey.

Motion picture publications fill the air, swamp the mails, stifle the exhibitor and harass the jaintor, yet they continue to exist in a more or less haphazard manner, fulfilling a haphazard mission. No industry today is more over-burdened with surplus of publications than the film industry, and these surplus publications represent nothing more or less than a sink hole for the useless waste of perfectly good advertising appropriations, which might well be diverted to a better use.

No Time to Peruse All.

To cover a field properly is good business judgment. An advertiser must exercise care, must weigh and balance, if he is to derive the most profitable results from his exploitations. Common sense, in a workaday world where time is limited, points to the fact that no exhibitor has time for more than one or two good publications which cover his field completely and satisfactorily. Such magazines he considers a business necessity. The wide-awake exhibitor has not the time nor the inclination to peruse a half dozen or more magazines much less has he time to ramble through divers pages of sundry advertising devoted to other matters, in search for what he wants to know.

Modern common sense dictates the policy, or one of a similar nature, which has been adopted by The First National Exhibitors' Circuit, an able presentation of which is being carried on in the Moving Picture World. In my opinion, funds disbursed to exploitation in more than five publications, is sheer and prodigal wastage of money. There can be no benefits derived from duplication of advertising and a field cannot be extended by duplication.

The Waste Basket Is First Aid.

An exhibitor, I find, limits his search for information pertaining to his business to a few standard magazines, devoted exclusively to his trade. The waste basket is his first aid in taking other superfluous publications off his hands, and it appears to me that the producer who confines his advertising to a few reputable magazines of the trade and drives home his punch in the strongest way possible in these, has the right idea of getting results.

Charles A. McElravy

General Manager, Majestic Amusement Company, Memphis, Tennessee.

It is a well known fact that no man can keep a good thing entirely to himself. Imitators will spring up on all sides when the news leaks out that he has a good thing. The remarkable growth of the motion picture industry in the past decade, has brought about just such a situation. Instead of one reputable and standard magazine devoted exclusively to the trade—or even three or four good publications—we find a plethora of small fry, all clamoring for something from the trade.

Concentration Key to Success.

Some proceed along legitimate lines, others are not so scrupulous and do not hesitate to employ the more or less to be feared hammer, if things are not coming their way. It is disconcerting that the small producers are easy victims, but the exnortations and threats of the useless publishers fall upon deaf ears when the large producers are involved.

Concentration, as has oft been proved, is the sesame to success. Concentration has given the world its inventions, its skyscrapers, and has given civilization its victory. With this example before it, why then does not the motion picture industry concentrate when the matter of proper exploitation is involved?

Three Essential Qualifications.

To every one connected with the trade, it is a self-evident fact that advertising is the sole means of the producer reaching the exhibitor and the exhibitor reaching the patron. Therefore, to cover the field and cover it well, is good business sense. There is no sense in killing the same bird twice.

To me the qualifications essential in a publication to make it productive of results, are: first, its ability to command the time and attention of the exhibitor; second, the assurance that its editorial and news policy is clean and reliable enough to compel respect and instill faith; and third, that its scope and circulation are sufficient to make it a necessity in an exhibitor's business. If these essentials are fulfilled, the field is covered. Only the fit should survive, and I honestly believe I voice the sentiments of every live exhibitor in the business.

Manager Loew's Stillman Theatre, Cleveland.

I AM fully in accord with Mr. Sievers, of St. Louis, regarding the First National policy making its trade announcements through five representative magazines devoted to the interest of producer and exhibitor.

I myself subscribe to four magazines. Two of these I read very carefully, both advertising announcements and news. The other two I simply glance through.

It is the desire of every up-to-date exhibitor to keep in touch with all that is pertinent to the industry of the business in which he is vitally interested, yet at the same time he cannot devote his entire time to the reading of publications when as a matter of fact it is simply a duplication of stuff which he has seen in a previous one. There are other duties that an exhibitor must perform which require his time.

TRADE journals whose news columns are censored by the advertising department and publications outside of our industry, but which conduct motion picture pages, will never recover from the straight-from-the-shoulder punch delivered by William Sievers in his article in Moving Picture World, March 22. It was a complete knock-out which sounded the death knell for such publications.

From every viewpoint, the First National Exhibitors Circuit is correct in the policy it has adopted for trade journal advertising. There is nothing that can be added to it. I believe every exhibitor in the United States and Canada—and eventually all of the producing and distributing companies—will endorse the First National's move. It is a strike for additional liberty in our business.

Going to Take All Five Now.

And right here let me add one thing. The article by Mr. Sievers has convinced me that I ought to have every one of the "big five" in my office. I must admit that I have not been a subscriber to all of them—have not had time to read more than two. But I am going to get all five—for they are the best reference an exhibitor can possibly have and the only accurate guide in the selection of pictures.

And now—let's start that weeding out!

Ridge Avenue Theatre, Philadelphia.

DUPLICATION in advertising is one of the extravagant wastes of money that confronts the motion picture industry today and the sooner the elimination of non-productive publications is begun the better it will be for all concerned. The First National's trade journal advertising policy as viewed by Mr. Sievers in last week's issue of Moving Picture World met with my approval in every way. His assertion that two journals seem to be enough for any exhibitor to read, is to my way of thinking, as I only read two each week. The others that find their way to my office either go to the waste paper basket or are taken by some of the employes. With journals that cover the field, East, North, West and South, there is no need of bothering with any others. The five journals that cover this territory should prove more than enough to carry the news to exhibitors.

I have been connected with the motion picture industry for the past sixteen years and am familiar with both the distributing and exhibiting ends of the trade. In all this time I have seen the birth of innumerable trade papers which seemed to be born over night. It has gotten to a point now that every mail brings a bunch of journals which are of no value whatever, yet they all carry large advertisements of the different producers and distributors. I say cut some of them out and relieve us of the trouble of casting them to the waste basket.

By A. J. Fischer

Mammoth Theatre, Philadelphia.

THE restriction of its trade journal advertising by First National Exhibitors' Circuit to the five mediums which are published solely in the interest of the motion picture business is an excellent idea and practical in every way. After reading the views expressed by Mr. Sievers in the March 22 issue of the Moving Picture World I want to say as an exhibitor that they are the opinions of myself and many theatre owners I know.

Favors Conservative Policy.

I firmly believe that the First National's policy, which calls for the elimination of all trade journal advertising in any but the five that are known as being wholly in behalf of our business is a conservation policy that should have been adopted long ago. Why should the producers and distributors advertise in every picayune journal in the country when there is no return for their outlay of money? Many of these journals devote only a small amount of space to the motion pictures, but they seem to think that they should get all the cream of the advertising. This is all wrong and should be cut out at once. If these publications desire to hold what few motion picture fans they have they must continue to publish the news of the movie world regardless of the advertising.

Depends Upon the Favorites.

I receive many trade journals each week, but I have my favorite two which give me all the information I desire about new features to be released. With a selection of five, which cover the country at large, I feel assured that the First National or any other concern will cover the field thoroughly and reach the real exhibitors.

By Joseph L. Griffin

Proprietor of Raphael Theatre, Washington, D. C.

THROUGH your columns I want to address the following to First National Exhibitors' Circuit: We are deeply interested in your policy for regulating and limiting your trade journal advertising. The country is being flooded with a class of so-called trade magazines, papers and what not that are utterly useless from a publicity standpoint to the great and growing moving picture business. Many of these publications, are without circulation or influence. Their methods of obtaining business are of the blackjacking order.

In your elimination policy we suggest that there be a standardization of the publications to be adopted, and we feel that the proposed elimination will work to that end. There must be a standard of honesty of the future. Promiscuous advertising in publications of small circulation and unscrupulous methods is little less than vicious extravagance.

Demands Honest Criticism.

The moving picture theatres have become in most cases public educators. Many of the high-class films are sermons and teach a moral while giving the public a form of entertainment that has grown to be immensely popular. Therefore, the journals that are devoted to the films and the men who make them must be of a high order. Honesty of criticism is demanded.

Concentrate on a few of the really good publications and you can control their honesty and fair play. Scatter your advertising broadcast and you will be putting a heavy deficit in the loss column of your ledger with results that are nil.

Industry Must Not Be Cheapened.

The motion picture industry has grown to such splendid proportions that it must be represented in a few high-class trade journals, but it must not be cheapened by promiscuous publicity in uninfluential publications of the fly-up-the-creek" variety. Other great interests have narrowed their advertising to a few representative trade papers and magazines, and the wisdom of their policy has been demonstrated.

The proposed policy of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit is surely a long stride in the right direction. With other theatre proprietors we will watch with interest further strides. The tendency of certain unscrupulous publishers to exploit to any length the motion picture industry can be regulated only by careful elimination, we believe.

By Fred C. Seegart

Manager of Regent, Milwaukee.

I AM heartily in favor of the new policy of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit in regard to advertising. The use of five trade journals as the medium for advertising thoroughly covers the field so far as motion picture theatres are concerned. It does not give the public any information about the features, however, and for that reason I have a suggestion to make.

As the general policy of advertising now stands, the cost of it all is ultimately met by the exhibitors. The advertising does not do much good, I admit, but still it helps bring the star before the public notice, and that is what the exhibitor needs. Now if the advertising is cut down I think it only fair that the price of the production should be lowered, or money furnished the exhibitor that he may advertise it locally. After all, the motion picture theatres make the star, so it works both ways. The star is made more valuable to the company through the co-operation of the exhibitors, and the company should be willing to help to some extent.

Should Help Local Exploitation.

Some theatres find billboards a profitable way of exploiting a picture, other localities find dodgers, and half sheets better, and the majority of course, find the newspaper advertising pays best. If the star is not brought before the public notice in any other manner, the company should be willing to stand part of the expense locally.

Unfair criticisms in trade journals do not worry me. I don't bite on them any more. I have found entirely too often that my views of a feature and theirs do not agree, and for that reason I take them as they come, and pay no attention to them.

In my opinion, people want the star and the story, and they don't care where they see the ad—but the point is, they must see it some place, and if the company doesn't bring it out, the exhibitor must—and it is up to the company and the exhibitor to co-operate.

I have played a number of First National pictures, after they were played in the downtown theatres.

By Ray Stinnett

Manager, Jefferson Theatre, Dallas, Texas.

VAUDEVILLE theatre managers throughout the United States would be "tickled to death" if the motion picture companies would restrict the advertising and exploitation of their features to five of the leading trade journals.

I am strong for the First National Exhibitors' Circuit trade journal advertising policy. It is what would make music for the managers of houses that have to worry with variety shows as well as the silent drama. I have no doubt but that every theatre manager who has to not only book his own motion pictures, but attend to the million things that might go wrong with a vaudeville show, would feel like having a celebration providing some action was taken which would result in a facilitation of booking—I mean a clearing out of some of the literature which I haven't got time to read and which I think few other managers with their eyes on their shows have time to "monkey" with.

Only One Chance in the Photoplay.

We must be careful in deciding upon what motion pictures we book. With the vaudevilie end of our program we've got five chances to hit home. We know good and well that some of those five acts are going to be good enough to create public sentiment for the show. With the picture it's different. It's usually five or six reels long, and if one reel or one scene is displeasing we've got to suffer for it. Accordingly I take great pains in the selection of the special features to be presented at this theatre, and when I say that my greatest worry in the selection of the picture is the unwieldy mass of trade journal advertising that I have to cull to get to what I am looking for I am speaking the gospel.

The Picture Stands Alone.

We have another vaudeville and picture house operating in Beaumont. The same thing is true there. The trouble comes when we have to select our picture in looking through a pile of your motion picture trade journals. I'm mighty glad the Moving Picture World has started a discussion on this important proposition. It is high time somebody was taking an interest in it before a goodly number of our theatre managers have to be taken off and away to a home for the silly. It would drive a manager insane to have to contend with all the near trade journals in addition to keeping peace among the various vaudeville acts on his bill and seeing that his heating apparatus is all right in winter and his cooling machine is all right in the summer time.

Pitchers and Pictures.

Saving from Top to Bottom.

But one of the most vital features of the First National's trade journal advertising policy is that it promises to be a saving for the company advertising the pictures and consequently a saving for the exhibitors. From this I would conclude that the price of a picture show for the public will not increase, but is likely to decrease. This, I think, is an important feature and probably the most laudable angle to the proposition. Aside from this it is sound business policy to curtail extravagance whenever possible, and I don't believe a man can be found who will be foolish enough to ratify a policy of apropriating advertising any and everywhere it can be placed. This, in my opinion, is a ridiculous folly.

I am confident that vaudeville theatre managers would not feel the least bit hurt if motion picture exhibitors objected to advertising and exploitation of motion picture releases in publications which catered more to the variety stage and circuses and carnivals. I never book a special feature from any journal except one of the recognized motion picture trade publications.

Favors the Specialist.

Like all other vaudeville theatre managers, when I want to book a motion picture I read the ads in a motion picture trade journal, just as when I want to buy a pair of shoes I go to a shoe store and not to a department store. Why? Because the shoe store specializes in shoes. The department store specializes in having everything that can be worn without reference to any special quality of anything. And this is true with all due respect to the wonderful convenience and use to which department stores are put.

I read all the theatre magazines regarding the legitimate stage. I wouldn't and couldn't keep up with the times if I didn't. But a collection of miscellaneous theatre items is the last thing in the world I'm looking for when I am trying to book my feature picture for a week's run. What I want then is a publication that I know is dependable, that I can rely on to the extreme and one in which the news items and editorial comments are unbiased and that I may read and may rest assured is absolutely true. That's what a manager looks for when he wants to read a trade journal. And I don't need five motion picture trade journals. I read only two of them and I don't know of anybody who reads any more except the various magazines' proofreaders.

Only Proofreaders Surpass Him.

When I want to book a picture I haven't time to look through five of the trade journals. My job won't stand for that much time to be wasted. I've got to be hitting the ball every minute. I imagine, however, that there are lots of exhibitors who have time to read five trade journals and for them this number would probably be all right. Five, it must be understood, is a great relief from the auspicious number that now finds its way to my office. It must be fifty-five or it looks like that many. It would be a good idea to show some of the slower exhibitors just how much good time can be saved by restricting the ads to only five of the magazines. And think how much printer's ink and white paper would be conserved. Is conservation still patriotic?

An abundance of worthless and so-called advertising has fastened itself on the motion picture interests of the country and it must go if the motion picture industry is to continue to grow and prosper.

By S. A. Hayman

Manager, Lyda Theatre, Grand Island, Neb.

ELIMINATION of duplicate advertising, as proposed by the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, looks to me like a sane and sound move. They ought to be able to save considerable money by cutting out advertising in magazines which rarely reach the attention of an exhibitor, and I have a suggestion which I make further along in the letter, how the money could be put to a much better use than in this indiscriminate advertising.

Are five trade journals enough to carry advertising for a big distributor like the First National? Indeed, they are enough and more, too, so far as I am able to judge. Perhaps I glance over five trade journals in a week. Never any more than that. I don't take time to read articles on picture services which I do not handle, but I do read anything I find concerning distributors whose pictures are shown at my theatre.

Exhibitor the One to Reach.

Then what is the use of those distributors advertising in magazines issued for the laity or for followers of the "legit," if they wish to reach me? I am presuming that my personal opinion is the only one I can give which will interest you and so I speak of myself so boldly. I never see any but a certain few trade journals. I did take Billboard, but quit it, because it didn't benefit me. The only magazines of interest to me are those devoted exclusively to the motion picture industry as laid out for the exhibitor.

Now about the idea I suggested in the first part of the letter. If the First National would eliminate advertising in all but five trade journals, and put the money thus saved into newspaper advertising, they would do the exhibitor much more good. For instance, take my case. If a portion of the money saved by the First National were put into newspaper ads in my territory when one of their features was coming to this city it would help me far more than by putting the same money into a magazine ad.

By A. T. Sparrow

Proprietor Empire Theatre, Washington, D. C.

IN some ways the policy of the First National Exhibitors Circuit is right, but I think a concern of its wealth and growing power should give the square deal to all publications which devote space to the moving picture industry, or to one which is recognized as the leader.

Exhibitors, many of them, buy their favorite magazine at the news stands. Only two of the five journals in which the First National has chosen to place their ads are on sale in Washington, whereas the magazines described as having a moving picture section in the back are sold by all stands of any size.

Advertise in All Trade Journals.

An ad in one of the publications of the variety just mentioned does not only reach the exhibitors but many of the most ardent "movie fans" also. This prepares a soft bed for the showman; the write up is good, for the amateur when the film is run at his house, if critics give it much publicity in the form of what they call "inside dope."

If it is not decided to advertise in all I would suggest that the advertisements be limited to one of the movie trade journals—the recognized best. This would fully eliminate wasted advertising. If this idea was adopted by the First National and several other large companies other trade publications with the exception of probably one or two would soon become obscure.

By C. Edgar Momand

Manager of Garden Theatre, Flint, Mich.

AS an exhibitor of motion pictures and interested to an exhibitor's extent in all of the product of the industry, I would go on record right now as advocating most rigorously a policy of conservation with regard to advertising on the part of First National and all other distributing agencies, as it is set forth in your issue of March 22.

As an exhibitor of motion pictures I receive a great deal of stuff through the mails that is never read, and the advertising pages of the trade papers are seldom perused. I do not have the time or inclination to read all that matter. I consult the reading pages and the departments of the trade paper which most vitally concern my business. I keep abreast (I think I do) of the best productions, and those I am most liable to present to my public.

But the multiplicity of advertising I never see.

Wants Distinctive Productions.

First of all, the exhibitors want productions that are in themselves distinctive. He does not have to be sold that kind of production. It will sell itself, on its merit. But he must also have every aid from the releasing company in order that he may offer his ware to the public and elicit their ready response with their dimes that he may heed the call of the exchange for its bit.

In the long run the exhibitor pays for all the wasted postage, duplicated and useless advertising of the producer as well as the exchange. It all serves to make the exhibitor's overhead just that much more. The exhibitor must get it all from the public. And sometimes it's a hard row to hoe. What the exhibitor needs most is 100 per cent. pictures and then some good, whole-hearted co-operation and advertising aids in the way of good cuts and mats to help him support the producer.

Feel the pulse of the exhibitors and I think you will be able to diagnose to the heart-beat just which publications will best serve their interests, and you will likewise have a better understanding of just the requisites necessary to give Mr. Exhibitor better co-operation in marketing motion pictures.

By D. Morris

Franklin Theatre, Philadelphia.

IN selecting five of the most influential motion picture trade journals in which to place their advertising I think the First National has hit upon an idea that should meet with the approval of exhibitors all over the country. Why should we be bothered with an avalanche of trade journals in every mail, when possibly two would be a sufficiency to tell us everything we want to know concerning releases and other news pertaining to the picture.

Five trade journals of reputation will surely cover the field thoroughly. Two is enough for me, and any others that come to me are cast aside without a glance. It seems to be a useless waste of money to place advertisements in all these publications just because they devote a little space to motion pictures. Exhibitors and other interested in motion pictures read the journal that devotes its entire space to the industry.

The exhibitor and people who go to see the movies should be the gainer by such an enforced policy, in that better pictures and other benefits would be the ultimate result.

TO FORM NEW NATIONAL ORGANIZATION

Motion Picture Exhibitors of America, Inc., Name of New Body—Will Be Made Up of State Leagues

A NUMBER of representative exhibitors met at the Hotel Astor, New York, on April 3, 4, and 5 to discuss the organization of a national association of exhibitors in handling the national affairs of their branch of the industry. Peter J. Schaefer, elected president of the National Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America at Boston last August, presided at this executive session.

The main point accomplished was the abandonment of both the Exhibitors' League of America and the American Exhibitors' Association, the outcome of the split at the Chicago convention of 1917. It was decided to form an entirely new exhibitors body to be known as the Motion Picture Exhibitors of America, Inc.

Association To Be Independent.

This amalgamation is to be independent of all national and local city leagues. It will be made up exclusively of state exhibitor leagues. The executive committee of the M. P. E. A. is to meet periodically, or annually, each state having one representative, or substitute, if the principal is unable to attend, to discuss national affairs.

The new organization will recognize no national conventions or promiscuous gatherings or expositions of the industry, only as they individually feel disposed. This decision automatically eliminates the proposed St. Louis Exposition Convention.

Number of Delegates Uncertain.

The only point which has not been clearly settled and unanimously agreed upon is the number of delegates each state will have at the annual executive meeting—whether it would not be unfair to have only one from New York and Illinois to represent a much larger number of exhibitors than there are in Maryland and Arizona. It is the opinion of some exhibitors that representation should be upon the same basis as Congressional and Senatorial representation.

Many other matters were brought up but the above are the principal ones.

Appoint Temporary Officers.

Temporary officers were appointed until the convening of the members at a general meeting to be called June 17, at St. Louis.

The temporary officers are Peter J. Schaefer, president; Marcus Loew, vice-president; Frank Rembush, secretary, and Ernest Horstmann, treasurer.

Among those present were: Peter J. Schaefer, Chicago; W. H. Linton, Utica; J. M. Mosher, Buffalo; L. F. Blumenthal, Jersey City; Alfred Black, Rockland, Me.; Ernest Horstmann, Boston; Daniel Chamberlain, Minneapolis; Frank J. Rembush, Indianapolis; William Fait, Jr., Utica; Dr. Charles Hespe, New Jersey; J. Chittenberger, Indianapolis, and Hector M. E. Pasemzoglu, St. Louis.

Yokel Made Vice-President of Briggs.

Alex Yokel has been elected vice-president and secretary of Briggs Pictures, Inc. This company is manufacturing one reel comedies based on the cartoons of Briggs appearing in the New York Tribune and 125 leading American newspapers. Mr. Yokel will also act as general manager of the company.

Headquarters have been opened at 30 East Forty-second street and production is going on at the Thanhouser studios in New Rochelle. The first comedy released by this company, "A S'prise Party 'n Ever'thing," is finishing a successful week at the Strand Theatre. Managing Director Plunkett of this big Broadway house has arranged to show one of these comedies every other week for the next year.

Chaplin Brings Joy to Little French War Hero

CHARLIE CHAPLIN brought about a beautiful contrast of human emotion at his studio recently, when his contagious smile of good cheer caused the reluctant return of joy to the heart of Marcel Dupuis. Marcel is the fourteen-year-old French lad who went into action at Chateau Thierry and Pont-a-Mousson. His mother passed on in 1911 and his father fell in the battle of Verdun. As for earthly ties, grim fate made of the one-time carefree chap a bit of dodging driftwood, caught in the current of hungry hearts.

The authorities placed him in an orphan asylum where restlessness and discontent soon mastered him. One day he ran away and finally reached the front line trenches where he attached himself to the 79th French Infantry. Many stories are told of "the handy boy around the front line dressing stations," whose particular job was crawling around among the wounded giving them rum. While giving cheer and stimulant to his stricken comrades he was twice wounded.

As the ranks of his countrymen grew thin and scattered, the little man was separated from them and later attached himself to an American unit, the 143d Field Artillery. The Americans came home on the transport Matsonia with the 144th Field Artillery in which Captain Peter B. Kyne commanded Battery A. The soldiers of the 143d smuggled Marcel aboard the transport and he turned up two days later at sea, which was Christmas Day. Quoting Mr. Kyne:

"Knowing the boy would become a vagabond if returned to France, I just naturally grabbed him and brought him to California on our troop train, and his name is now Marcel Dupuis-Kyne."

It was a mighty good sight to see Mr. Chaplin and Marcel romping over the studio grounds. The wistful little fellow of sad memories was once again the happy boy.

"Father," said Marcel, whose English is quite good, "you have been so nice to me all the time, but when you bring me to play with Charlie Chaplin—oh!—I think you are wonderful."

Margaret Marsh Has Lead in "The Eternal Magdalene"

FEW players of the stage or screen have had a more interesting or a more colorful career than Margaret Marsh, who has the leading feminine role in "The Eternal Magdalene," Goldwyn's modern drama of compassion, released April 20.

By a remarkable coincidence it was Robert H. McLaughlin, author of "The Eternal Magdalene," who had much to do with her first appearance before a motion picture camera. Delighted with her performances in the stock company, Mr. McLaughlin passed the word of his "find" to his friend, D. W. Griffith, and not long after Miss Marsh was delighting picture audiences as much as she had theatregoers on the speaking stage. Through her influence a year later, her sister, Mae Marsh, the Goldwyn star, made her debut with the same organization.

When Goldwyn arranged to picturize Mr. McLaughlin's successful play, the author came from Cleveland to assist in selecting a cast for the screen version, just as he had aided Selwyn & Co., who produced "The Eternal Magdalene" for the stage. His chance meeting with Miss Marsh at the Goldwyn studios settled the question of who was to portray the role of Elizabeth Bradshaw, around whom the plot centers.

Finnegan Joins Goldwyn's Scenario Staff.

Frank X. Finnegan is the newest addition to the Goldwyn scenario staff and is responsible for the script of Pauline Frederick's present production. Mr. Finnegan, widely known as a writer of short stories for several years, abandoned New York for Hollywood three seasons ago and until recently was with Lasky.

HODKINSON CUTS OUT THE PROGRAM

Announces That, Beginning Immediately, All Past and Future Productions Will Be Marketed Independently of Each Other—Getting Ready for Prosperity Drive

BIDDING farewell to the program and star series system of picture selling, the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation has this week given telegraphic instruction to its representatives in the thirty Pathe branch offices of America that, effective at once, all productions past and future that are marketed through the Hodkinson organization are to be offered and sold to exhibitors singly on their individual values and merits. This step marks a revolutionary change in picture merchandizing.

Thomas Production Opens Ball.

Not only does the new Hodkinson order to its representatives apply to thirty or more productions in their hands during the past twelve months, but it has emphasized application to the first of the big new productions to be marketed through Hodkinson men beginning April 20. The first production to be so offered is Harry Raver's picturization of Augustus Thomas' stage success, "As a Man Thinks," starring Leah Baird and directed by George Irving. A few weeks later the first of the Zane Grey Pictures, Inc., productions, "Desert Gold," picturized from Zane Grey's drama by T. Hayes Hunter under the executive direction of Benjamin B. Hampton, will be offered on a similar sales basis.

Old timers as well as the newer generations in the picture industry will rub their eyes to see W. W. Hodkinson, who was the father of the program system, so radically depart from methods which he devised and brought into being. And they likewise will wonder at his seeming daring in beginning a series of releases in mid-April of a size and calibre that have always been held up for fall-time release.

Preparing for the Big Push.

But while adopting a new sales method the Hodkinson forces have decided to stage two sensations simultaneously. They foresee that the coming spring and summer are to be the most prosperous that exhibitors have ever known. Their reports from exhibitors in every section of the country indicate record-breaking patronage and an era of money spending by the public of every state in the Union.

Unquestionably this condition has been stimulated by the demobilization of a million and three-quarters American troops, with the promise of an equal number to come back from France in installments from now until October. These demobilized troops are being restored to American industrial payrolls at prevailing wage standards as against the limited pay that the men received as soldiers and sailors.

Therefore, the Hodkinson organization feels that this is the time to provide the exhibitor the biggest possible productions and to offer them under a sales policy that permits the buyer to purchase just what he wants without having to take on other productions and stars that he does not want at the moment.

May Be Forerunner of Others.

For months there has been a strong undercurrent in producing and distributing circles to indicate that the larger organizations contemplated some radical change in selling methods for the season that customarily begins in September. This move by W. W. Hodkinson with an assured product for the twelve months ahead, ranging from twenty-four to in excess of thirty productions of assured value, may be taken as a fair forecast of some of the changes that are to come.

No equivocations or double meanings are hidden in the Hodkinson instructions to representatives, it is announced. An exhibitor can buy four pictures or all the pictures of a star if he wants them; he can buy all the Hodkinson product if he wants it; he can buy one picture of each star if he desires. But he can buy any one production without signing up for more than that one; or any combination of units that he desires.

"Humanity" Film Finishes Big Run.

The appeal of "The Heart of Humanity" to the public has been no more clearly demonstrated than in Minneapolis where the Jewel production recently completed a record breaking six weeks' run at the Shubert Theatre. That the picture has become one of the most talked about ever shown in the Mill City is evident by the amount of comment regarding it, in the Minneapolis newspapers.

New Taxing Schedule Proposed for Louisville

IF it isn't one thing it's another, but the moving picture theatres are always let in for taxation whenever there is a deficit of any sort. Louisville on July 1 will lose about $600,000 in liquor revenue, so the City Fathers have kindly donated a license tax ordinance, now before the City Council, which will license all manufacturers, jobbers, retailers and professional men. The theatrical world especially is singled out.

Under the proposed ordinance all film exchanges will donate $100 a month to the city's treasury. Theatres seating 500 or less will donate $250 a year; theatres seating from 500 to $100, $300 a year, and those seating over 1,000 will pay $350 annually. Ticket brokers will pay $50 annually. There is so much to the ordinance that there may be a few other clauses that will affect the industry, although these are the principal ones.

Several hearings on the proposed tax ordinance have been held and retail merchants, manufacturers and jobbers are making a hard fight. However, protest appears to be futile and indications are that the ordinance will go into the city records adopted in about its present form.

Director Hogan Seriously Ill.

James Hogan, formerly connected with the Douglas Fairbanks producing staff and who assisted in the staging of many Artcraft successes, is seriously ill at the Post Graduate Hospital in New York. Mr. Hogan has many friends in the motion picture industry who will be sorry to hear of his condition and who no doubt, will be eager to send a message of good cheer to "Jimmy."

Circus Press-Men Have Right Ideas.

THERE will be little room for argument on the assertion that the motion picture is just as great a factor as the circus in centering human interest; that the appeal of press agentry may be made as direct or as seductive when applied to either class of amusement. But it would seem, glancing at the papers of this city, that the press agents of the Ringling-Barnum Combined Shows are setting a few examples for the screen publicist to follow. For instance:

The open season for old men to ring door bells and ask for children—the loan of a boy or girl as an alibi;

The clown who has saved his money, owns real estate and bonds, has his wife as his stenographer and requires a special trunk to hold his writing machine, desk, pigeon-holes and a small safe with combination;

Feeding the giraffe is now allowed because no one can get anything up to his mouth and if they should get there nobody knows what he likes to eat.

Just a few of the many stories that are planted daily by Jay Rial and his corps of publicists. With all the host of circus stars not one dead gold-fish yarn; no lost jewels; no proposals from Swiss Counts—none of the hackneyed assaults on space are turned out from the busy typewriters at Madison Square Garden.

To be sure there is system with it all. Each man is responsible for a certain number of the local dailies. Another takes care of the class papers. Still another sees about the suburban press—but they are all turning out stories that are intended solely to sell tickets.

Tickets are sold to human beings. The freaks are in the side-show.

Human interest stories sell tickets to human beings. The freaks are admitted free.

This should admit "us."

The Case Goes to the Jury.

Marion Davies has a strong company for her next picture. I can prove it, for when it sleeted and, etc., ad lib, recently, a little old last year's Ford was in the way of the company car on the road leaving over the hills and far away to the Paragon Studios.

Zowie—the company got out and moved the Ford and continued to their day's work.

Therefore Marion Davies, for her next starring production, has a strong company and I have proved it.

What the Bible Has to Say About Our Moving Pictures.

IN territories where showmen are fighting the parsons it might be well to get out the family bible and hoist 'em by their own petard. We know nothing further than what Life says; we did not personally hunt them out—these passages of scripture—as reproduced below:

"Gather the people together, men, and women, and children."—Deuteronomy, 31:12.
"Sit in darkness."—Isaiah, 42:7
"Lift up your eyes."—Isaiah, 40:26.
"Be silent in darkness."—Samuel, 2:9.
"The stars appeared."—Nehemiah, 4:21.
"All pleasant pictures!"—Isaiah, 2:16.
"A time to weep and a time to laugh."
"The shadows of the evening are stretched out."—Jeremiah, 6:4.
"The sound of the grinding is low."—Ecclesiastes, 12:4.
"Clap your hands, all ye people!"—Psalms, 47:1.—Life.

From Saturday to Monday, April 5-7, Mark Vance transferred himself from Variety to the Dramatic Mirror. Until his resignation Mark had been for many years a tireless news-gatherer and reviewer on Sime Silverman's staff and the Mirror gets a faithful and efficient helper.

Sister Mabel Condon is in New York, exercising her charm and influence to the end that Charley may be released from service to take his place in a life of civic usefulness.

Publicity Writer Hits the Pipe And Oil Is Well Down the Line

SOMEWHERE out in the wilds of Movieville, Cal., Gale Henry recently found the pot of gold at the end of the rainbow—and lost it again. It happened in this wise:

Miss Henry was engaged in making a rural comedy. In one scene she is supposed to wield a pickaxe. Her director chose a likely spot and under his watchful eye she raised the implement over her head and sank it deep into the ground. As she pulled it out to repeat the performance a stream of oil shot up twenty feet into the air.

"Gosh amighty!" shrieked the comedienne, "I've found a gusher!"

"Gusher hell," howled Director Bruno J. Becker; "you've hit a pipe line."

Eulogizing a Screen Classic.

I have but to shut my eyes, cutting ties that bound me,
And there suddenly will rise a forest, all around me,
With monkeys, lions and coiling snakes, foliage thick and palm trees;
A lovely jungle harbor after voyage over calm seas.

There I hear a cry of "Tantor" from a child of Nature;
Strong of limb, a lordly ape-man and a giant in stature,
Writhes in pain upon the ground, hangs to life so slenderly;
Through the trees a huge beast enters, lifts the wounded tenderly.

Like a helpless babe he lets it through the forest bear him
On its mighty trunk, safe-guarding that no branches tear him.
Many movie plays I've witnessed, spectacles have thrilled me;
But none have before with such admiration filled me.

Music, statues, works of scripture, all of history's pages;
These to us are things immortal, gone down through the ages;
So this, too, shall be a classic, something that the gods have sent
To the earth, and caught by Tarzan, riding on the elephant.

New York State Sets the Pace

AT last a majority of the legislators of one state have summoned sufficient gumption to vote in accordance with the wishes of the larger part of their respective constituencies. Those who oppose local option on the question of Sunday pictures do not want the majority of the citizens of any given community to have a say in the matter. If they were willing to let the majority rule they would not oppose a local option measure. Legislators have been controlled by the representatives of a minority when it came to the Sunday question, not to mention any others.

The victory of the Sunday opening forces in New York State, when they won in the Assembly by a vote of 84 to 58, is one of the most notable in the history of the industry. It is an achievement of which those responsible for it may be proud. That the action will be held up for the consideration of members of legislatures everywhere is certain. That it will have influence on their votes also is beyond question.

Now then what state will be No. 2?

The Picture Showman Has His "Say"

WE declared last week that we would present in this issue the final installment of a lengthy and, we believe, fruitful discussion of the matter of trade-paper advertising which has been maintained by picture showmen throughout the country. That is to say, we had expected this to be the last word; but "last words" are not always what they are intended to be; and there will be at least one more installment printed in our pages on what we believe is a vital issue.

The truth is we are strong for "good copy"—if it serves a helpful purpose. Well written publicity is not always good publicity from the viewpoint of a trade paper. But when we get copy such as we have been printing from the men who subscribe to trade papers and support the motion picture industry we call it not only "good copy," but immensely valuable.

Behold! the Green-Eyed Monster!

Picture showmen of the first-run class and the little fellows who can only afford to pay for runs that sometimes tragically approach the last run have contributed to the discussion. The "big fellows" in the marketing end of the industry have been furnished with some excellent reading—if they have permitted pride and jealousy to let them read with an open mind. There is the haunting suspicion that some of the producers will read—if they read at all—with eyes blinded by self-imposed bias. They will, perchance, think that because the name of a certain distributing organization is mentioned that what these showmen say is not worthy of consideration.

There are seven days in a showman's week.

But the fact must not be overlooked that in a vast majority of cases the men who discuss trade-paper advertising have other things to say — and say them — that should give pause to the mental workings of moving picture producers and distributors. Then, too, they play pictures the week 'round, and on some of these days the pictures that these showmen play may be your pictures. Certain it is that never before in the history of motion pictures have so many showmen, spread from end to end of this great country, contributed opinions to be printed on any given topic in any one publication. Surely their opinions deserve consideration and respect. As we said before, the distributor and producer is like the Congressman who is "hearing from the folks back home."

Heavy Building in Southern Illinois

SOUTHERN ILLINOIS is keeping pace with the rest of the country in the number of theatres it is building. The activities of that section as chronicled by our Chicago correspondent make good reading. Botto & Myers, in Cairo, are building a house seating 1,800 and costing $175,000. That is not all. There will be an orchestra of fourteen pieces, which is going some for Cairo.

In the 7,000-town of Murphysboro Jean Daegle is building the New Liberty, seating 1,600 and costing $125,000. A. W. Barth, in Carbondale, which has a population of 4,000, is investing $60,000 in a house that will seat 1,200. In East St. Louis Joe Erbers has had drawn plans for a house seating 1,800. In Mount Vernon, with a population of 8,000, H. H. Hicks will spend $50,000 on the New Plaza, seating 1,000.

In Herrin, a town of 7,000 population, the Marlow

Brothers conduct the New Marlow, seating 2,500, and built at a cost of $150,000. Read what the Marlows did when they contracted with Mme. Schumann Heink and charged $3 a seat.

Oldtime Melodrama on the Screen

IT has been freely admitted by the men who were interested in the once prosperous popular-price circuits of the speaking stage that the moving picture has killed old-time melodrama; but it still survives on the screen, and it is quite as rough and ready and unlike anything in real life as it ever was. Only recently a picture was shown in a projection room that is a grandson of the western dramas that were played in the best theatres of this country fifty years ago. The family resemblance is perfect. There is the same wizard of a hero, who disguises himself so cleverly with a wig and a few marks on his face that he is able to walk right up to the villains and learn all their plans without the least danger of being suspected. However, like its prototype, the picture has vigor of theme and action, and the spectator gets plenty of fights for his money.

Hodkinson Goes to Open Booking

AMONG the significant announcements of the week is that of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation that in future all productions now on its books and all that may be placed there will be issued independently of each other, that an exhibitor desiring a big subject may have it without being under any sort of obligation also to contract for one of lesser drawing power.

The action is in accord with the spirit of the times. The "special" is growing in power, and the frequency of its appearance is correspondingly increasing. The special means greater care in production, from the ground up. It means the exercise of discrimination in the selection of the story at the start. It means the elimination of the script which the responsible officials of a company cannot quite "see," but on which in an emergency they would be compelled to take a chance.

It stands to reason that the production which must travel absolutely on its own merits and unsupported by any of its better equipped neighbors will require larger initial consideration than the one which goes out supported in front and behind by huskier brothers.

Exploitation "in seriatim," as the parliamentarians say, is bound to be more expensive on the cost side than it is when done "in toto." But the process also is bound to make for greater selective care in the beginning, as we have pointed out, and for larger efficiency through all the many phases of production, which ought to insure, provided an equal amount of selling skill is contributed to the operation, a net profit away beyond the figures produced under the group booking system.

And on top of that we have the bigger and the better picture.

Confirmation by Other Producers

CONVERSATION with several producers during the week brings confirmation of the statement that the action of the Hodkinson company is in accord with the spirit of the times. One executive of a large company said there was no doubt open booking was coming sooner or later. His own concern was now considering what its plans for the fall would be. Asked as to just what particular category of exhibitors open booking most would affect he replied that naturally it would be those who were clamoring for larger pictures and who had houses sufficiently ample to justify the payment of increased rental. As to the exhibitor in the smaller towns, he continued, there always would be new productions available for these as well as the larger pictures after they had been through the routine of the first and second runs.

Another manufacturer—it was R. H. Cochrane, of the Universal—said that his company had for a long time been working under the scheme which had just been adopted by Hodkinson. He said if an exhibitor wanted to book a Dorothy Phillips subject he could get it for a price—a "reasonable" price, accurately to quote Mr. Cochrane—but if an exhibitor cared to book eight of these productions he would get them at a reduced price by reason of the lessened selling cost.

The names of three other companies readily occur to mind where the reduction or abolition of program pictures is under discussion.

P. A. Powers, Iconoclast!

SHADES of the Native Sons of the Golden West! There will be warm discussions in the particular regions where they most do congregate when to their enlarged understanding is borne in what P. A. Powers, the frank official of the Universal, has to say as to the relative merits in a picture-making way of Los Angeles and New York. P. A. declares he cannot comprehend why producers are leaving the East and going to the former city to make their productions. He points out that 75 per cent. of the pictures made on the coast are photographed under artificial lights. He adds, when asked as to the matter of sunshine, that Los Angeles has no such monopoly on that commodity as to warrant producers hauling bag and baggage out there to make pictures.

Mr. Powers points out that all that is kept in New York in the way of a force is the executive office payroll; that all the money is sent west. He says more income tax was paid by picture men and women in Los Angeles than by the combined theatrical interests in any other town in the country. He says the west coast locations are limited, and have been worked over again and again. The players, too, are all New Yorkers. On another page the World prints a photograph of Lambs gathering at the Lasky studio, which seems to confirm this latter statement. In conclusion Mr. Powers insists New York and its vicinity are the places where pictures should be taken; that the East should be the center of production as well as of the head of the business in a financial way.

And so the controversy runs. "How happy would I be with either were 'tother dear charmer away."

State Rights Market Prosperous

THAT the state rights or independent market is in excellent condition and that producers distributing through this channel are looking forward to even greater prosperity is indicated by developments of the past few weeks. Not only has there been a steady expansion of the ranks of the buyers and a corresponding increase in sales of territory, but the number of high-class film men who have adopted this method of marketing their productions continues to grow. Some of the most successful of recent attractions, from a box-office standpoint, are being distributed on a territorial basis. A glance at the sales negotiated during the current week appearing in the "Among Independent Producers'" department of this issue furnishes an excellent barometer of conditions in this field.

ATTENTION OF EDITOR LESLIE MASON

A Few Short Comments on His Reply to Our Reply Concerning His "The Public vs. the Critics" Article

THIS article is addressed to Editor Mason, of the Exhibitors' Trade Review, but the writer is of the opinion that it is of considerable importance to the exhibitors and the productors of motion pictures. It is a reply to the "retort courteous" made by Editor Mason to the animadversion of his article, "The Public vs. the Critics," which appeared in the "Sidelights and Reflections" department of this publication.

As the last sentence may be accused of having something of a literary flavor, a vice which no self-respecting trade paper should abide, a plain statement of the original point of difference is as follows: Editor Mason does not believe that the public cares anything about plot construction. Neither do we believe it. But when he says that the exhibitor needs to know nothing about the subject we are more than willing to start an argument. To save space and the reader's patience our side of the case will be presented in the form of short comments.

We do not pretend to know what portion of the exhibitors want to master all the details of showmanship, but we are positive their number must make a respectable showing, and the Moving Picture World, in accordance with its policy of helping every branch of the industry in every way within its power, will continue to pay some attention in its reviews to dramatic construction. It may also help the producer by so doing.

Plays fail on the spoken stage for want of showmanship, and moving pictures fail on the screen for the same reason.

When Editor Mason says that plays have succeeded that defied the rules of art he tells the truth; but no successful play ever defied the rules of showmanship.

The critics of the New York dailies roasted the morality plays, "Everywoman" and "Experience," for being trite, obvious and beneath the notice of anyone with a claim to a cultivated intellect; but the showmanship of their producers told them that there was a large public for such a grade of plays. "Everywoman" made a fortune and "Experience" made several of them, breaking records all over the country. The art status of these plays was nil, but their dramatic construction was perfect. Plays have succeeded that have defied some of the rules of construction, through the strength of their themes. They would have been better plays had they conformed to all the rules, which are the rules of showmanship.

The exhibitor must learn all about his business if he wants better plays. He, as well as the producer, must understand that there is no use hoping for better stories than those that have been written. The only thing to hope for and work for is a better technique; a more skillful method of constructing the old situations and old plots, which can be made to seem new by proper handling.

The stage has been learning continually during the centuries of its existence—and one of the things it has learned is how to make money out of the show business.

Stage producers understand that the public never tires of certain plots and characters, but that everything depends, so far as the play itself is concerned, on its construction.

When David Belasco put on "Daddies" and Winchell Smith produced "Lightin'" they knew that, in spite of the half concealed sneers of the critics, they have box-office successes. The public had always loved just such plays and always will. Being two wise men these managers specialize in them.

For over two years this trade paper has been pointing out that there are two forms of screen fiction: the photoplay and the photo novel. Both have a distinctive form of construction. One is drama in the technical sense; the other is told in narrative form.

The exhibitor does not care which form a moving picture follows, so long as he does business with it. But he does know the value of variety in his programs and he will be benefited when the two forms are clearly defined and properly used by the producers.

The exhibitor may be so busy trying to master all the details connected with the running of his theatre and the advertising of his program that he does not think it worth while to read anything concerning the construction of the pictures he has booked. But it is another angle of the show business and no man ever knew too much about the details of his business which helped to swell his account at the bank.

One paragraph of Editor Mason's contains this curious confession: "We don't believe in efficiency in art. Neither does the public either believe in, or want, efficiency in its entertainment."

This is more quibbling with a word. The dictionary defines efficiency as "acting, or having power to act, effectually." If an entertainment doesn't entertain, it isn't acting effectually and the public will get up and walk out on it and serve it jolly well right.

Ernest Ouimet of Montreal Visits "Flying A" Studios

LAST week the American Film Company, Inc., had the pleasure of entertaining at its Santa Barbara studios one of the most prominent of Canada's exchangemen, Ernest Ouimet, of Montreal, who was accompanied by Mrs. Ouimet and his sister-in-law, Mrs. Thibideau.

Mr. Ouimet was enthusiastic about the growing quality of the plays bearing the "Flying A" trademark, and warmly congratulated the stars, Mary Miles Minter, Margarita Fisher and William Russell, on their work. The better-picture movement, he said, is gaining in force with every passing month, and with their co-operation he is finding it possible to measure up to the standards which the fans are setting up.

Mr. Ouimet is shown at the extreme left in the photo and his wife stands beside him. The others are General Manager R. R. Nehls, Mrs. Thibideau and A. L. Thompson, manager of the American studios.

Passes Resolution Thanking Universal.

The following resolution was passed by the campaign committee on Sunday opening at its meeting Saturday, March 29, and forwarded to R. H. Cochrane, vice president of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, New York:

PRAISES WORK OF FILM MEN IN THE WAR

Lieut. Tate Back at Lasky Studios After a Year in Service—Reads the World on the Battlefield

THAT men from the various branches of the motion picture industry distinguished themselves in whatever field of war activity they were sent to is the testimony of Lieutenant Cullen B. Tate, of the Lasky Hollywood studio, who returned a short time ago from the front, after a year of active service in the Camouflage Corps. It is interesting to note that Alfred J. Chalmers, of the Moving Picture World, served in the same outfit with Lieutenant Tate, the Fortieth Engineers.

Lieutenant Tate found a place at the Lasky studio just as soon as he returned—and a better place than the original. The lieutenant, formerly one of Cecil B. De Mille's assistant directors, having risen to this position from a post in the property department, now is to be made a full-fledged assistant director.

Altough he was under fire many times, and went through many hairbreadth experiences, Tate came out without a scratch. He spent nine months at the actual front, with only eight days' vacation.

There were in Tate's company seventy-five men from the studios around Hollywood.

Proud to Be with the Industry.

"They were a great bunch, and I was proud to be identified with the industry after seeing how the men from it worked in the war," said Mr. Tate. "As a body there's a lot of glory due to the picture people. They were recruited from all branches—property men, scene painters, cameramen, stagehands, actors and directors. And they all worked together for the good of the service. No man in the industry need be ashamed of their work.

"I had one unusual experience, meeting a man I knew in the studio in a shell hole. I didn't even know he was in the army. That was Larry Peyton, who was killed about a month after I saw him. With several of the men I was working right near a shell hole, which was under a light fire. Suddenly I heard a voice that I recognized. I crawled over to the hole and there I saw Larry. He gave a shriek of joy when he saw me, and in spite of the shells jumped out of the hole and threw his arms around me. We had a great talk about life in the Lasky studio. I never saw him again after that day."

Mr. Peyton, who was one of the first Lasky men to enlist, was one of the rising young actors of the company. One of his best parts was in "Joan the Woman," where he played the brother of the heroine.

Gets a Copy of the World.

"One day I saw an M. P. reading a magazine," said Tate. "I went up closer and saw that it was the Moving Picture World. I asked him for it, and he gave it to me when he had finished. I read that magazine from cover to cover, including all the ads, and it all sounded great. Then I took it to the other picture boys in the outfit, and they devoured it, too. I kept it for about six months, carrying it everywhere with me, and I never got tired reading it. It was the most welcome thing I saw in France."

Mr. Tate had many other interesting adventures which he will narrate under pressure. He was in most of the big campaigns—he went through Cantigny, Soissons, Fismes, and Meuse-Argonne, as well as entering Germany with the Army of Occupation. He was at the Argonne when the armistice was signed.

Didn't Get Pathe Film and Asks $1,000 Damages

PHILIP Miller, who conducts the Republic Theatre at Annapolis, Md., has brought suit against Pathe, Inc., in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia to recover damages of $1,000 alleged to have been sustained by him on January 1, 1919, through the failure of the exchange to deliver to him the Pathe feature, "Infatuation."

Cullen B. Tate.

Miller tells the court that on New Year's Day it is the custom to release from duty the 2,000 cadets and other officials and persons connected with the Naval Academy. It was in an effort to secure the patronage of as many of these people as possible that Miller booked the feature. He says that he entered into contract with the company on December 28, 1918, delivery to be made "in full, ample and sufficient time so as to permit the film to be exhibited by the plaintiff in his theatre."

Fix Rental Price at $45

The rental price fixed was $45 and Miller says he advertised the production by posters and other advertising matter. He declared that after making the contract and as the time for the delivery of the film to him drew near, he made repeated requests and demands on the exchange that the film be delivered, and reminded the defendant of the necessity of delivering the film in ample time to be exhibited on New Year's Day. He further states that on each occasion he was assured that delivery would be made in time to permit him to exhibit the feature, and that despite the fact he offered to send a special messenger to Washington to secure the print on December 31, he being told that would not be necessary, he did not receive it. Miller's attorney is H. Winship Wheatley.

To Play Up Blackton Film in London.

L. C. Wheeler, exchange manager, associated with Bech Van Siclen & Co., who recently purchased from Blackton Productions, Inc., all foreign rights for "A House Divided," announces that this picture will be given one of the most elaborate presentations in London ever accorded a photoplay.

Mr. Wheeler, who is directing the foreign distribution of the picture plans to present it in one of the largest and most up-to-date cinema theatres in London. The fact that the subject is virtually an all-English production, made in America, will be an exploitation card for it in England and in other territory acquired by Bech Van Siclen & Company.

Leland Visits New York.

S. B. Leland, of Montpelier, Vt., the northern New England distributor for Simplex projectors, spent a week in New York City and included in his itinerary a visit to the Simplex factory.

He reports that in Portland, Me., the Empire, Strand, Keith's, Casco and Elm theatres all use Simplex machines. He reports also that some new developments may be expected in regard to his Portland office, which will be used as a supply base for the state of Maine, leaving him the other to tend to the wants of the exhibitors in New Hampshire and Vermont.

Britain Lets Films Come In.

The War Trade Board has announced for the information of film exporters in the United States that the British Government has so changed its import regulations as to permit of the importation into Great Britain of cinematograph films under general license. In making this announcement, the War Trade Board calls attention to the fact that it is not in a position to speak authoritatively on foreign import restrictions, but merely transmits this information for the convenience of those exporters on its mailing list.

Prisoners See "Humanity" Film.

Through the courtesy of President Laemmle and Manager Oldknow of the Atlanta, Ga., exchange, "The Heart of Humanity," Allen Holubar's super-drama was recently shown to inmates of the Government penitentiary at Atlanta with special musical accompaniment by the Tudor Theatre orchestra.

Special Press Man for Arbuckle.

Keene Thompson, well known in motion picture and magazine circles, has been engaged by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation as special publicity representative to "Fatty" Arbuckle.

RUBBERNECKING IN FILMLAND

Los Angeles Correspondent Personally Conducts Our Readers Through the West Coast Studios

By Giebler

IF Hamlet were alive and lived in Hollywood I would go over to his bungalow and say: "Ham, old dear, come with me, and I will show you that 'there be players' who can act without advice from you. Players who can 'tear passion to tatters' without 'o'erstepping the modesty of nature,' players who 'acquire' and 'beget,' as you say they must, in the 'very torrent tempest of their passion' a temperance that gives it smoothness; players who can 'hold the mirror up to nature,' 'show fear her own feature,' horror, anguish, despair, their image and semblance of form in a reflection as true as that given out by any French plate, guaranteed silver back, hand beveled looking glass in the world."

No Need for Hamlet's Instructions.

Then I would take the melancholy Dane by the hand and lead him over to the Sunset studios and persuade D. W. Griffith and Lillian Gish to re-enact a scene that I saw made there last week.

The action of the scene was supposed to happen in a closet, and the set was just a corner of roughly plastered boards.

Miss Gish came forward, shook her long hair over her shoulders and stood up in the corner.

Griffith began talking in a low voice.

"You are in the closet now," he said. "You have locked the door. Burroughs, your father, is outside. He is trying to get in. He has a whip in his hand—he is going to strike you—he is going to kill you with the whip! Are you ready?"

There was no preparation, no dialogue, no words leading up to the action that might have allowed the girl to get into the spirit of the part she was about to play—no "atmosphere" of any kind.

There was no man with a whip beside Miss Gish. No one but Griffith, the cameraman, and myself were in that part of the studio at the time.

Lillian Gish
Who would need no instructions from Hamlet.

"I am ready," said Miss Gish.

Griffith nodded to the cameraman.

The girl stepped closer to the wall and began crying, a sort of whimpering sound.

Out-Acting the Actor.

"Clever stuff," I said to myself. "Sounds like the real thing."

She pressed her body closer to the wall—hugged it, threw her arms up high above her head, dug her fingers into the plaster. A trickle of dust fell from beneath her nails. She screamed, a high-pitched, terrifying sound, a cry of fear and anguish. Then she turned and faced the camera.

It was the real thing.

Lillian Gish was there, not ten feet away from the camera, but her mind was somewhere else—somewhere in a dark closet. Tears were streaming from her eyes; her face twitched and worked in fear.

"He's just outside," whispered Griffith. "He's going to break the door in. He's going to kill you."

The girl screamed again, not loudly, but loud enough to give me the shivers. Then she began speaking—uttering words that were so choked with sobs that they were almost unintelligible—words of mortal dread.

"Don't, don't, don't!" she pleaded. "I didn't do anything wrong. Don't kill me, I'm your child, your little girl. O-o-oh! Don't!"

"He is in the room now," said Griffith.

She turned to the wall again, tried to climb its smooth surface. Then she faced around again, fending, pushing something away with her hands.

Had Been "Killed" a Week Before.

It must be remembered that there was no one trying to get into the closet. There was no closet, in fact, just a corner made by placing boards together and covering them with plaster, and Donald Crisp, who plays Battling Burroughs, the girl's father, was down somewhere in the Gulf of California on a hunting trip with Rex Beach, having the time of his life dodging cannibals and raising a stand of russet whiskers. In fact, Donald had "killed" Miss Gish the week before. This action was preliminary to the killing.

"Don't! Don't! Please!" she was whimpering now. "The police will come," she threatened, "the cops will get you! They'll hang you. Please! Please! I'm only a little kid. I didn't do anything wrong! Oh! Oh! O-o-o-h!"

Screen Can't Show Agony in Voice.

What a pity it is that Griffith does not write an emotional play, with words, for Lillian Gish. I know I am not doing justice to her acting; I cannot tell about it so that anyone will see it or feel it as I did, and by the same token no screen will ever show it.

The screen will show the action, the contorted, fear-stricken face and eyes of the girl, but it will not show the agony in her voice.

I have always considered myself somewhat hard boiled, and not easily affected by simulated emotions, but this got me. I sat there with my eyes popping out till they could have been snared with a grape vine, and I verily believed that if Donald Crisp or any other actor had been there threatening the girl I would have seized a leg of the camera and gone to her rescue.

I have heard it said that Lillian Gish's art is all Griffith; that no other director could get the same results with her; that she is a puppet in his hands. But that is not true.

Real Dramatic Ability.

Possibly she owes much to Griffith's precepts, training and vision, but the girl is really a great actress.

There is a scene in "Hearts of the World" where Lillian Gish, crazed over the loss of her lover, walks down a road clothed in her wedding finery, with hands outstretched, and her face a medley of emotions that is finer than anything the greatest Ophelia has ever done. No puppet could do that. No puppet could do what I saw her do in the closet scene.

I talked to Griffith about Miss Gish.

"How does she do it?" I asked.

"It's dramatic ability," he answered, "the divine afflatus. Some actresses have it and others do not, and never will have it. Lillian Gish has it, that's all. She is very fortunate.

Didn't See "Audience."

After the scene was over, Miss Gish sat down, exhausted; and I learned that in spite of the fact that she had looked directly at me all the time she was acting, and had seemed to accuse me of wanting to murder her, she had not been aware of my presence before this moment. I had taken my position near the camera, while she had her face turned to the wall the first time.

Dorothy Gish
As she feels after seventeen hours of work.

"I did not see you," she said, "my eyes were full of tears." And then she added naively, "If I had known I was working before an audience, I would have tried harder."

Tried harder, indeed.

The play that will have the scene made by Miss Gish was suggested to Mr. Griffith by one of Burke's "Limehouse Nights" stories.

Battling Burroughs, played by Donald Crisp, who mixes acting with his work of directing Bryant Washburn at the Lasky studio, is the father of the girl. Kid McCoy has a part in the picture, and there is a Chinaman in the plot. The production will probably be called "The Chink and the Child."

I passed from tragedy to comedy by stepping over to another studio where Dorothy Gish was making one of her cut-up comedies. I didn't talk much to Dorothy. I just encouraged her to talk, and I listened and remembered.

Dorothy in the "Tragedy" of Love.

"This play?" she said, in answer to my question. "It's called 'Skinflint Jones.' It's a tragedy—not as tragic as the one my sister Lillian is making, but a tragedy just the same, because there are so many sweethearts in it. Richard Barthelmess, Porter Strong, Ralph Graves and Edward Piel—that's Mr. Piel over there, and I don't think he likes his part because——"

Mr. Piel was simulating a stout sweetheart, and the day was warm.

"Because of the bay window makeup?" I suggested.

She laughed.

"And most actors like fat parts, don't they?"

"How do you like being your own manager?" I asked.

"Fine!" said Dorothy. "I feel so responsible. We've been trying an experiment, trying to save time by working overtime. We've just finished a 17-hour stretch of work."

"That's too much," I said.

"It is too much. It makes me feel like this."

And the conversation was interrupted at this point while we got a picture of how Dorothy feels after working 17 hours at a stretch. Then the conversation was resumed by Dorothy, who told me about an enterprising firm sending her and her sister a lot of cigarettes.

Ohio and London Vie.

"I suppose you would call them enterprising," she said, "but they are misguided. Neither of us has ever smoked a cigarette except in a play where we had to. They make us sick. Maybe it's because we are old-fashioned, and maybe it's because we are from Ohio."

"Don't girls in Ohio smoke?" I asked.

"They didn't when we lived there," she answered. "But the girls in London do. Oh, my word! Yes! They tell a story over there about two girls going in a tube train where there was a young man all alone. One of the girls got out her cigarette case and took one and passed it on to her friend, then she turned to the young man with, 'Pardon, but do you mind if we smoke?'"

"Aren't things getting reversed, though?"

"HEROIC DEEDS SERIES" STIRS DEEPLY

Victory Loan Pictures Show Americans What Soldiers Did and Make Us Anxious to Do the Part Left for Us

IT was surely a big idea that of putting on film for Americans to see a few of the stirringly heroic incidents of America's fight for world freedom. Nothing is so likely to make a man want to dig down for his cash as seeing to what extent the soldier gave in order to do his part. We have read of machine gun nests and felt no doubt that they were nasty things to go up against. In these Liberty Loan films the whole thing is vividly shown and we realize that we didn't truly know before how much we are in debt, how much there remains of our obligation till this Victory Loan is carried over the barbed wire that one cause or another may have put in the way of our giving freely.

Pictures Are Short.

The pictures made under the able direction of Wilton A. Barrett, review secretary of the National Board of Review, are short and have no padding. We are taken along with the advancing platoons. The Hun barrage is kicking up a lot of ground ahead of us. On the German side we see here and there a machine gun safely hidden among a lot of debris or popping out from under what looks like a pile of hay. There is no use going on while those things are in the way; there wouldn't be a single man left, so some one has to get around behind and clear them out and some one goes.

Four incidences of this kind as pictured on film were shown to the trade press this week and they include the deeds of Thomas C. Niebour of Sugar City, Iowa., of Harold A. Furlong of Detroit, of Samuel Woodruff of Fort Thomas, and of Hunter J. Wickersham of Denver. This last episode, in which we see Lieutenant Wickersham give his life in making it possible for his men to advance, is especially effective and worth seeing. It has a more poignant emotional quality as showing the officer's self-forgetful care of his orderly, more painfully wounded than himself, while the two are alone in a shell pit close up to the hidden machine guns and, later, the tears of the orderly when he comes on his commander's body after the heroic work has been done.

"Knocking Knockers."

In the short bit of film contributed by Douglas Fairbanks, the star takes the role of Democracy with a new job on his hands, that of putting the Victory Loan over. He warns disloyalty and other nefarious characters who want to hinder that they will be treated just as Prussianism was dealt with, and by way of illustration we see him get hold of that person in a spike helmet and "treat him rough," so rough that after it is over they call out the fire department and wash him into the sewer. He then sails into the obstructors and they feel sick when he is done.

"A Call for Liberty."

Julian Eltinge has done a good bit for the Loan. In a short film we see him as Liberty sending an aviator to encourage the men waiting on the other side and homesick, now the war is ended. The aviator, also taken by Eltinge, brings a message that the Victory Loan is going over and better and that they will soon be back among their friends at home.

Boy Scouts Will Back Boys' Life Productions

WILLIAM G. McADOO, of the United Artists' Association (Chaplin-Pickford-Fairbanks-Griffith) has accepted the chairmanship of a new Citizens' National Committee to increase the membership of the Boy Scouts of America.

Coincident with this comes the announcement that the Boy Scouts of America will sponsor a series of motion pictures. Their entire membership of 500,000 boys, 16,520 individual troops in the United States, is to co-operate with exhibitors showing the pictures in exploitation and advertising.

The pictures are to be made by Boys' Life Productions, of which A. D. V. Storey is president. This company is the authorized producer of motion pictures for the Boy Scouts of America. Jack Cohn, former editor of Universal News Weeklies and Screen Magazine, is production manager.

Boys' Life Production films will not be scout propaganda, but a series of regular dramatic and comedy features and serials with juvenile stars and casts. They will be made with the editorial supervision of the division of publications of the Boy Scouts.

"Boys' Life Screen Review" is the title of the first offering, a weekly topical educational magazine of interest to everybody. The Juvenile Photoplay Distributors, Inc., with offices in the Godfrey building, New York, are now offering it to the states rights field.

Christie Star Guest at Aerial Circus.

Dorothy De Vore, Christie star, was the guest of Lieutenants J. C. Rahn and Harry Ashe, at the aerial circus at the Arcadia Balloon School recently. Another guest, Lieutenant Henry Farre, celebrated French aviator and artist, who has been showing his paintings in Southern California for the benefit of the families of 300 dead French aviators, was photographed in a Christie picture which shows the thrilling stunts of the air. The picture will be shown in the news weeklies. The cameraman caught an extraordinary stunt in which an aeroplane attacks an observing balloon from which one of the men is doing a parachute drop.

Sills Returns to Goldwyn.

Milton Sills returns to Goldwyn pictures as leading man for Pauline Frederick in an emotional drama of today, this being his first work at the Culver City studios since he supported Geraldine Farrar in three productions made in the East. Others playing with the star are Harry S. Northrup, Emmett King, Beverly Travers and Ernest Pasque.

RAISED DOUGH FOR FUTURE DOUGHNUTS

Los Angeles Enjoyed Movie Day of Salvation Army Week When Screen Players Did Bit to Help Cause

THE week of April 1 was Salvation Army week in Los Angeles and Wednesday of that week was Newspaper day and also Movie day. Nearly all the stars of the film colony laid off studio work on that day and went down on Broadway to help raise the "dough" for future doughnuts.

Mary Pickford, as usual on such occasions, started off the celebration at the head of a parade down Broadway to the Times building. Then, donning a regular Salvation Army bonnet, she began to sell papers, and her cash box began to grow heavy and full. The two soldiers who acted as Mary's guard kept their eyes on it and felt important.

Charlie Murray, who had been advertised to make a dive from a tall building, appeared on the roof and prepared to make the plunge, then suddenly righted himself and flung a lifelike dummy into the net below that was held by several of his fellow comedians. The crowd cheered with relief and laughter at Charlie's trick, and when he came down to the street he sold his share of papers in record time and at record prices.

Charles Ray had his stand in front of Grauman's Theatre, and sold a paper to Sid Grauman for $100, and ever so many papers for lesser prices.

Douglas Fairbanks and his cowboys entertained the crowd by lassoing prospective buyers of papers and the cash box at that stand bulged out on all sides.

William Desmond and Texas Guinan were stationed at the Alexandria Hotel and sold war trophies as well as papers. A copy of the Los Angeles Times, autographed by Captain Eddie Rickenbacker, American ace, brought $200 at auction.

The Sunshine Comedy girls occupied a booth to themselves. Eleanor Field and Ethel Lynn from Christie's worked together. Lois Wilson and Mary MacLaren, and Carmel Myers and Grace Mossman were other pairs who accomplished great results. Bebe Daniels was a hard worker, and Al Ray and Gene Pallette yelled "Wuxtra, wuxtra," down Broadway after the manner of the most successful news vender.

Entire Vitagraph Plant Will Move to Los Angeles

ALBERT E. SMITH, president of Vitagraph, who has lately come from New York to spend several months in planning and overseeing the expansion of the western studio of his organization, has made some important announcements concerning the future of his company.

According to Mr. Smith, Vitagraph is to move its entire plant west before next winter, bringing to Hollywood four additional stars and certain members of their companies, and their directors. These stars are Alice Joyce, Corinne Griffith, Gladys Leslie and Harry Morey.

At present Vitagraph has in its Hollywood studios as stars Bessie Love, Antonio Moreno, Carol Holloway and Earle Williams, besides two companies headed by Larry Semon, and Montgomery and Rock, who produce comedies. Negotiations are being conducted with several other stars on the west coast.

The western Vitagraph studio, on an eleven-acre tract in Hollywood, is to be enlarged by the erection of several new dark stages, with additional laboratories and dressing rooms.

Among books and plays recently acquired by the company to put into film form are "The Great Ruby," and "The Sporting Duchess."

Kathlyn Williams Will Organize Own Company

Kathlyn Williams, former Selig star, and recently seen in leading roles in Cecil De Mille productions, has announced her intention of forming a company and producing pictures according to ideas of her own. Miss Williams has been offered the capital and although it may be several months before she begins making pictures, plans are already under way for a studio and a producing organization. Miss Williams has ambitions of producing a few famous plays of other days, but will also turn out pictures with modern themes and of modern times.

Location Directors Form Responsible Organization

THE first step in the formation of a national association of location directors of the motion picture producing companies was made last week at a meeting held in the Los Angeles Athletic Club and attended by representatives of Famous Players-Lasky, Goldwyn, Universal and Brunton studios.

The idea was originated by Dayton

Reynolds, location director of the Lasky studio, a pioneer in location work. The securing of good locations has been hampered by the fact that irresponsible producers have at times damaged grounds loaned to them by owners, and later refused reparation. Owners often refuse the use of their property for that reason.

The association, which will be representative of all the important producing companies, will undertake to be responsible for any change made by any of its members, and will protect the property owner against the irresponsible and the dishonest producer. All charges of damages against producing companies will be investigated by the association and due reparation to the property owners who have suffered through use by picture companies will be made.

R. C. Moore, of Goldwyn was elected president of the association, and Dayton Reynolds, secretary and treasurer.

Fight Film Employment Bureau.

The Motion Picture Players Union, organized last December and affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, has filed charges against the Motion Picture Service Bureau, a booking organization which furnishes actors and extras to the various studios. The Actors Union claims that the service bureau collects an unjust commission from many of the players.

One of the charges states that players who have been employed direct by studios were sent to the service bureau for their pay, where from 7 to 10 per cent. of the amount was deducted.

The case was heard before Deputy Labor Commissioner H. A. Cable, and copies of the testimony will be forwarded to Labor Commissioner John P. McLaughlin at the state capitol in Sacramento for further action.

Frank Currier Married.

Frank Currier, character actor at Metro, and Miss Mabel Olms, an English dancer who came from New York recently, were married upon Miss Olms' arrival in Los Angeles. When members of the Metro company discovered that Mr. Currier had taken a bride, they planned a surprise for him. One day recently, while he was waiting to go on in a scene with Nazimova in "The Brat," he was invited to come into a church set, where nearly all the players at the studio had gathered and were sitting in the pews. Bert Lytell made a little speech, then presented the bridegroom with an eighty-five-piece set of silver, on behalf of the officers and members of the Metro organization.

Francis Ford Buys Catalina House.

Francis Ford, star and director of serials, while at Catalina last week, bought a home on the island, where he will spend his week-ends, and where he will take a number of scenes for his new serial, the opening episode of which takes place off the coast of Mexico. Ford will purchase a motor launch, which will be used to convey the players and his guests to and from Catalina Island.

"Sunnyside" Ready.

"Sunnyside," the new Chaplin comedy which has just been completed, and the print of which will be taken to New York by Sid Chaplin, will be given a first showing to the board of directors of the First National Exhibitors in New York the latter part of April.

Hayakawas Entertain Songbird.

Mr. and Mrs. Sessue Hayakawa gave a reception at their home in Hollywood for Mme. Tamaki Miura, a noted grand opera singer, during her visit in Los Angeles to fulfill her engagement to sing "Madame Butterfly" and "The Geisha" at the Mason Opera House. The guests at the reception included practically every prominent film player and director of the film colony, besides many prominent society people.

Stedman Applies for Divorce.

Marshall Stedman, former actor, and for eight years a director of motion pictures in Los Angeles studios, has filed a suit for divorce from his wife, Myrtle Stedman, stage and film star, on the grounds of desertion. Mr. Stedman is now connected with the Egan School of Music and Drama and he claims that the whole trouble between himself and his wife is that she prefers to live in New York, while he likes Los Angeles best. Mrs. Stedman is playing in pictures in New York and the 17-year old son of the couple is playing with Lila Lee's company. The Stedmans were married in Chicago in 1900. Mrs. Stedman was Miss Myrtle Lincoln.

Is Operator Number 1313.

Douglas Fairbanks, who has a projection machine in his home in Beverly Hills, which he uses to examine his own productions and show them and others to his guests, discovered that he had no license to operate a moving picture projection machine and he forthwith made application for one. Doug is now Operator No. 1313.

Metro President in West.

Richard A. Rowland, president of the Metro Pictures Corporation, arrived in Los Angeles last week to confer with the producing heads of the western Metro plant on productions for the coming spring and summer. During his stay Mr. Rowland plans to entertain the representatives of newspapers and trade papers of Los Angeles at a luncheon.

Makes Another Propaganda Film.

Douglas Fairbanks received a request by wire last week from Rear Admiral T. J. Cowie at Washington to prepare 200 feet of Liberty Loan propaganda film for use in the navy and at naval stations. The admiral stated that an outline of the scenario, prepared in the navy department, would be sent to Fairbanks. Work on the film will be rushed at the Fairbanks studio, and the film sent to Washington in record time. One film, "Knocking Knockers," for general use in the coming campaign, has already been produced by Fairbanks and sent to Washington.

Curwood Company in Canada.

News from Calgary, Canada, states that Ernest Shipman has organized the James Oliver Curwood Photoplay Company, and that Curwood will soon be in Calgary to supervise the production of his stories. Nell Shipman will star in the productions.

Asher, manager of the First National Exhibitors exchanges of northern California and manager of the Tivoli Theatre, of San Francisco, is visiting Los Angeles, and admits that he is after a franchise with the United Artists for the exclusive control of their pictures for the Turner and Dahnken circuit of California.

Farnum's Tonsils Removed.

Mr. Sanderson plans to inject American ideas into his oriental theatres. He will visit New York and Chicago and other large Eastern cities before returning to China.

Marie Walcamp in Accident.

During the filming of a scene for a new Universal serial Marie Walcamp was seriously injured last week. By a fall from a fire escape she sustained a sprained ankle and a number of cuts and bruises. Tom Lingham, who plays the part of the villain, was pursuing her out on the fire escape. In the action he was to fall down the fire escape and enable her to foil him, but in his fall he jostled her off the little landing and she fell to the ground. Only the quick action of J. P. MacGowan, who braced himself to break her fall, saved Miss Walcamp from more serious injuries.

Recurrence of Old Trouble.

Alma Rubens has again been in a hospital because of a recurrence of the trouble for which she was operated on last fall. Miss Rubens had just begun on a new picture, for which the sets are still standing at Brunton, when she was taken ill.

The trip was made in seven days.

Filled House by Ads That Recalled a Local Incident

IN presenting the photoplay, "A Woman's Experience," last week Guy Heffron of the Colonial Theatre, Seattle, connected the advertising by implication with the Ruth Garrison murder case, which has been the chief subject of conversation and of newspaper publicity for the last month or more. On the back of heralds he had the following curiosity-exciting sentences printed:

"Every woman could tell—something. Do you read the daily papers? Nearly every day someone's pitiful story is exposed in the press. Some are sorry for, some condemn. See Mary Boland in "A Woman's Experience." Judge for yourself. Starting Sunday."

These were distributed among the people leaving the theatre for a week in advance of the showing of "A Woman's Experience."

The window cards suggested the Garrison murder case more directly. The Garrison girl used poison to kill her victim, the wife of the man she loved. Mr. Heffron pictured on his window card a bottle of poison with a circle drawn around it, labeled, "The Other Woman." From this two red lines led to the opposite corners of a triangle, one of which was labeled, "The Husband," the other, "The Wife." The newspaper ad was also very unusual.

The result was a big business during the entire run of the picture.

Inland West Coast Secures Koerpel for New Activity

THE real surprise of the week to Film Row, Seattle, was J. A. Koerpel, local manager of World Film Corporation, severing his connection with that company to join the Inland West Coast Company, which, it is rumored, is a subsidiary of one of the large export companies here.

When interviewed Mr. Koerpel stated that he will organize a film department for handling shipments of film to Japan, China, and India, also to the West Coast and inland of South America, but that, instead of going to Buenos Ayres to make his headquarters, as he had planned some time ago, he will remain in this country, and in all probability have his headquarters either in Seattle or San Francisco.

Mr. Koerpel's tribute to Ricord Gradwell, president and general manager of the World Film Corporation, was inspiring. In the eight years that Mr. Koerpel has been a branch manager he has been with just two concerns, his first connections being with the General Film Company.

Film Row does not want to lose Koerpel, who was instrumental in organizing the Northwest Film Board of Trade. He has the heartiest and best wishes from exhibitors and exchange men.

Looks Into Issuing Old Films Under New Names

DISTRIBUTION of old films under new titles, without advising the exhibitor and public that they are not new productions, is under fire by the Federal Trade Commission, which has had brought to its attention several cases where films made some time ago by well-known stars and exhibited throughout the country have been reissued under new titles with advertising which would lead the uninitiated to believe them to be new pictures.

The Lasso Flms Company, of New York, a co-partnership of Jacob Weinberg and Joseph M. Goldstein, producers and distributors of motion picture films, have agreed to a Federal Trade Commission order to cease and desist from changing the titles and names of old films already displayed to the public and substituting new names and titles, unless it is clearly and unmistakably shown to exhibitors and the motion picture theatre going public that the films so renamed and retitled are old films being reissued.

Flanders & Ganz Join in New Educational Project

IF experience counts for anything Mortimer Flanders and William J. Ganz should have no trouble in winning a big success in the establishment of an educational and industrial film business under the partnership title of Flanders & Ganz. Their names are well known especially in the hazardous occupation of news film photography, and it is their purpose to give conscientious attention to contracts intrusted to their care. The location chosen as their headquarters is 507 Fifth avenue, New York.

Mortimer M. Flanders hails from Montreal and has had seven years experience in the news and industrial end of the business. One of his latest photographic feats was the taking (single-handed) of 23,000 feet of negative at a fire. Also he has to his credit other industrial film as well as thousands of feet of news negative.

The first successful aeroplane pictures of New York City were taken by Mortimer M. Flanders in company with Aviator Lawrence A. Sperry. The testing of Government torpedoes is numbered among his more dangerous photographic feats. In the making of the production, "The Yanks Are Coming," he made twenty-two flights, and in the launching of the Handley Page aeroplane Langley at Elizabeth, N. J., he was the only official photographer who made the flight.

The other half of the firm, William J. Ganz, is also a news and educational photographer of wide experience. Some of the last Roosevelt pictures were taken by him.

Award for Lillian Gish Photograph.

A photograph of Lillian Gish, of the Griffith players, appearing in Artcraft pictures, won first prize in the annual exhibition of photography in the Royal Salon in London. The work was a study of Miss Gish in her character of "The Girl" in Mr. Griffith's classic of the war, "Hearts of the World." Hendrik Sardov of the Hoover studios in Hollywood, Cal., is the artist who captured the coveted honors. It is his sixth winning, the same award having been given last year to his photograph of Mrs. Gish with her two famous daughters, Lillian and Dorothy. The photograph of Miss Gish was in platinum finish.

Jimmie Proved He Was an Actor.

James Harrison, who before the war was a Christie juvenile, dropped in from France, where he was with the 55th Ammunition Train, A.E.F. Jimmie will no doubt soon appear in another Christie picture. While in France Jimmie told some of the boys around the barracks at Mons that he was an actor. They didn't believe him until Jimmie led the gang into Paris one Saturday night and showed them a Christie comedy.

Theatres for sale; theatres for rent and theatres wanted by live managers are listed very frequently in The World's Classified Advertising Department.

SOUTHERN ILLINOIS BUILDS HEAVILY

Many Costly Structures Designed and Under Way to Take Care of Increasing Patronage

I HAVE just learned from a reliable authority, who speaks from a personal knowledge of an acquaintance with the present prevailing conditions in Southern Illinois, that remarkable activity is being shown in the building of modern moving picture theatres in that section; moreover, that the demand by the people in this section for higher class moving picture entertainment is correspondingly evident.

Among the towns recently visited by my advisor, were Cairo, Murphysboro, Carbondale, Centralia, Mount Vernon, East St. Louis, Herrin and West Frankfort.

In Cairo he found that a fine, modern picture theatre, the Cairo, was being constructed by Botto & Myers, the leaders in the exhibiting business there. This house will soon be finished and will give ample accomodation to 1,800. persons. When completed it will represent an investment of about $175,000. Feature pictures of the best kind will be used, as well as the usual accompanying types of pictures which form a high class program. An orchestra of fourteen pieces, with a competent leader, will furnish the accompanying music. Just what the admission will be at the new house has not been learned.

Business Booming in Cairo.

There are five other houses in Cairo—the Kimmel, seating 600; the Gem, seating 600; the Bijou, seating 250, and two outlying houses which cater solely to colored persons. As high as 20 cents is charged in the first three houses, according to the program offered. Business in Cairo is booming.

In Murphysboro, a town of 7,000, there are three picture theatres—the Liberty, American and the Star, seating respectively 800 and 300. Jean Daegle, present owner of the Liberty, purchased that house when it was a lemon. That was about three years ago, but he has proved so successful as a manager that he is now constructing the New Liberty, which will seat 1,600 people, at a cost of $125,000. It will be finished in September, and First National Attractions and other high class productions will be offered. Business is very good at the three houses now running.

Barth Will Seat 1,200.

In Carbondale, which has a population of 4,000, A. W. Barth, who is now running the Yale, is building a new house that will seat 1,200. This house will be called the Barth, and when finished will represent an investment of $60,000. Mr. Barth is a progressive exhibitor, and before beginning work on his new house had the city authorities condemn an alley adjoining the site, so that he could have free exits on both sides of the structure. He has already contracted for all the First National product for his new house. Business is satisfactory at the Yale, which seats about 650 persons.

In Centralia, with a population of 14,000, G. W. Pittenger recently sold the Opera House, which played road attractions, to a local organization which is now remodeling the building for an up-to-date picture theatre that will seat 1,000. Its new name will be the Grand, and it will be finished about the middle of May. The work of remodeling is being carried on while the house is giveng its daily shows, as it is being done in sections. When the work began the house was closed for five days, but since then patrons have been offered their customary shows. The programs include makes of Fox, First National, Vitagraph and Goldwyn. The prices of admissions vary according to the features used.

1,800-Seat House for East St. Louis.

East St. Louis has only one picture house, the Majestic, at the present time. The house is run by H. G. Redmond to good business, and seats 600. The Erbers, a vaudeville house seating 1,200, which includes feature pictures on its programs, has been so successful that the owner, Joe Erbers, has had plans drawn for building an exclusive picture theatre that will seat 1,800. The site has been purchased and work on the structure will soon begin. so that it will be ready for opening in September, this year. Mr. Erbers has already contracted exclusively for the product of the First National and Fox for his new house, which has not yet been named. He has announced that he will follow, as closely as possible, the policy of the Strand Theatre, New York, in his presentation of pictures. He believes that by offering high class programs in the most modern way, he will be able to keep the picture lovers in East St. Louis from going across the bridge to the big city, to see pictures there.

New Plaza Will Cost $50,000.

In Mount Vernon, with its population of 8,000, H. H. Hicks, who owns the Plaza, a small house seating 300, will soon begin work on the New Plaza, which will cost $50,000 and seat 1,000 people. Mr. Hicks expects everything will be in readiness to open his new house in October. Other picture theatres in Mount Vernon are the Majestic, managed by O. L. Levick and seating 450, which is showing to fine business, and the Gem, seating 300 and owned by A. J. Vandergrif, who reports big business. The admissions at the Mount Vernon houses vary according to the programs, and run from 10 to 50 cents.

Herrin, a town of 7,000 population, is in the coal mining district, and there miners are the main support of the New Marlow, owned by the Marlow Brothers, seating 2,500 and erected at a cost of $150,000. These miners represent various nationalities, including Italians, Croatians, Slovaks, etc. They are great lovers of pictures and music and of fine places of entertainment. The New Marlow, a thoroughly modern picture temple, pleases them immensely. Last February, in response to the wishes of thousands of these miners, the Marlow Brothers, guaranteed $3,000 to Mme. Schumann Heink, the well known soprano, for two concerts at the New Marlow, on February 1 and 2, and, in addition, a percentage of the gross receipts over a certain figure.

Get $3 a Seat for Singer.

In order to meet the demands of the occasion, the Marlow Brothers charged $3 a seat for each concert. Did they lose? No. The receipts were $7,500!

The Marlow Brothers are showing to fine business with pictures of the Fox, First National, Metro and World brands. They also run big special productions when the occasion offers.

West Frankfort has a steady population of 2,000 people, but varies according to the activity of the adjoining coal mines. Sometimes, when work is booming, the population goes up as high as 15,000. There are three new picture theatres here, two of which are completed and running, and one in course of construction. The two now running are the Opera House and the Liberty, and the Plaza will open May 15. The houses seat, in the order named, 1,200, 800 and 750.

Gardiner Gets as High as $2.

H. W. Gardiner is manager of the Opera House and books big special pictures only, such as "Hearts of the World," "The Heart of Humanity," etc. A Wurlitzer orchestrion furnishes the music. The admissions at this house run as high as $2 a seat!

At the Liberty, which opened March 15, Manager James Arnette offers First National, Fox, Goldwyn, Vitagraph and Metro makes at 10 and 15 cents. An orchestra of three pieces furnishes the music.

As soon as the present high prices for construction material go down, new picture theatres will be built in the following Illinois towns: Marion, La Salle, Springfield, Divernion and Effingham. The Springfield house will be a new departure for that city in point of the modernity and costliness of the structure, while the quality of the presentations will nearly equal the best in the big cities. Reference will be made to this in some future letter.

Robbins Presides Over Fox Sales Conference

THE managers of the Fox Film Corporation in the Middle West and Southwest met last week in conference in the Chicago offices of that organization. Herman Robbins, assistant general manager, presided and outlined minor departures from the sales methods and production policies, which were recently adopted at headquarters in New York.

Mr. Robbins is now making one of his periodical tours throughout the country.

The following branch managers were present: C. W. Eckhardt, Chicago; Louis J. Levin, Minneapolis; C. E. Penrod, Indianapolis; J. E. Keane, St. Louis; Lester Sturm, Cincinnati; Sidney Meyer, Omaha; and E. H. Wachter, district manager in southwestern territory.

Miss Theby and Mr. Sherry Meet.

An interesting incident occurred at American's Santa Barbara studios recently. In Mary Miles Minter's current production, "Yvonne from Paris," Rosemary Theby and J. Barney Sherry, who are in the cast, met for the first time since they deserted the dramatic stage for pictures. They played in stock together for quite a time, and then Mr. Sherry resigned to join a moving picture company. Soon afterward Miss Theby followed his example. They have never met since, though each had been following the success of the other in their new field, until Director Emmett J. Flynn introduced Mr. Sherry to Miss Theby as one of his co-workers in the production mentioned.

A number of scenes in "Yvonne from Paris" are being filmed in San Francisco.

Army Training Creates Efficiency.

Gilbert Lubin, recently honorably discharged as first class sergeant from the 323d aviation squadron, which spent four months in London and was prevented from going to France by the armistice, has been appointed head of the shipping department in Select's Chicago office. Mr. Lubin served nine months in the aviation training camp at Ridgefield, Waco, Texas, before being sent abroad.

He has had ripe experience in the film business as shipping clerk. Before he was called to the army he had spent two and a half years with Mutual and four and a half years with Triangle, as head of their shipping departments here. He is a young man of sterling worth, and his army experience, if anything, has contributed to his efficiency. Manager Aiken, of Select's Chicago office, shows a preference for experienced film men who have had army training, as he believes it has made them more strict and careful.

Joe Bloom, Live Goldwyn Salesman.

Goldwyn's St. Louis office has a live wire traveling salesman in Joe Bloom, who makes southern Illinois his stamping ground. Mr. Bloom never fails to advise exhibitors in advance when he intends paying them a visit, and he invites them to write him, care of the St. Louis office, when they want him to make a call.

Mr Bloom booms the Goldwyn star series and he himself has earned among exhibitors the title of "The Goldwyn Special." He is always promptly on the spot when he is needed and makes it a rule never to disappoint a customer.

Paramount Comedian Visits Chicago.

Ben Turpin, widely known by his risible work in Paramount comedies, stopped over for a day in Chicago last week to renew old friendships and to add to the long list. Mr. Turpin was born in Chicago and also reared here, so that he was on the move every moment of his stay. Many Chicago exhibitors, who know him only by his work for Paramount, were glad to meet him in the flesh, while a host of old friends greeted him wherever he went. He left for Paramount's Los Angeles studios, Thursday, April 3.

Nielson Sees Big Runs in Illinois for "Mickey"

THE general manager of the Mickey Film Corporation of Illinois, F. O. Nielson, returned last week from a business trip of three days, through central Illinois, in the interests of that company. He told the writer that he secured $3,000 worth of bookings for "Mickey" in that time.

Mr. Nielson learned on his trip that there are still a few exhibitors who have not yet heard of "Mickey," but that the big majority are familiar with Mabel Normand's fine comedy work in it from reading and hearsay. They are also aware of its excellent box-office value.

On May 1, the Mickey Film Corporation will close its books to Chicago bookings, and no bookings for this city will be accepted until next season. From May 1 the organization will devote its entire time and energy to the exploitation of "Mickey" throughout the state, from the Chicago office in the Consumers Building, 220 South State street.

Mr. Nielson says that the outlook of the picture business for the coming season, in every town visited, spells nothing but a big bright future. All indications point to bigger and better business, and exhibitors are looking forward, with eager expectancy, to see finer and greater productions.

Louis Mayer Talks About Anita Stewart's Pictures

LOUIS B. MAYER, president of Anita Stewart Productions, Inc., was seen for a few minutes at the Blackstone Hotel, Wednesday, April 2, just before boarding the Twentieth Century for New York. He came on to Chicago specially to view "Mary Regan," the third picture in which Anita Stewart appears for the organization bearing her name, the positives for which have been made by the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company.

Mr. Mayer is a man of few words when it comes to discussing his pictures, that is, for publication; but he showed both elation and great earnestness when he told me in a semi-confidential way, that "Mary Regan" will prove to be not one of the best, but the best film that has been made in the past two years and that it shows, undoubtedly, the best work of Miss Stewart's career before the camera. Messrs. Weiss and Seery, co-managers of the Chicago office of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, were also present and have told me that they were impressed in the same way.

"Mary Regan" was turned into the editing and pruning room at the Rothacker plant in eight reels, but Mr. Mayer expects to be able to reduce it to six, or thereabout. Lois Weber directed the production. It will be released in about four or five weeks.

Marshal Neilan is at present directing Miss Stewart in "Her Kingdom of Dreams" and "In Old Kentucky." In a sense these two features are being produced contemporaneously, as Director Neilan has another director engaged in selecting the locations for scenes and in building streets, cabins, etc., for "In Old Kentucky," while the other production is under way.

Mr. Mayer named to the writer, but not for publication, the list of players who support Miss Stewart in the two features now under way, and it can be truly said they form an aggregation of unusual talent and celebrity.

Mr. Mayer has just purchased the photoplay rights of Harold McGrath's "The Yellow Typhoon," which recently concluded its run in the Saturday Evening Post.

Geo. Beban Has Busy Week in Chicago.

George Beban spent a busy time in Chicago last week. He appeared twice daily at the Ziegfeld, where his latest feature, "Hearts of Men," had a week's successful run. In addition, he addressed the Hamilton Club, the Woman's Press Association, the Chicago Censor Board and a number of other organizations. His activities were liberally chronicled in the dailies of the city.

Merger of Picture Houses in Chillicothe Pending

ACCORDING to reliable authority, a merger of the four picture theatres in Chillicothe, Ohio, was in the process of formation and that with this combine all semblance of competition would end. Film service in Chillicothe is almost controlled by Charles Smith, owner of the Star and Queen theatres there. This makes it somewhat difficult for the New Sherman in that city to get service. The Sherman was built recently and is a product of the war prosperity that Chillicothe enjoyed. There is one other film house there, known as the Royal. This house is managed by Myers Brothers, who also control the Majestic, the only legitimate house in town playing vaudeville. The combine would place the Chillicothe Picture Theatre Company, headed by S. S. Wirtley and who controls the Sherman, in possession of the entire field. For some time past there have been attempts at a consolidation, but thus far none of these has been productive of results.

There has been no announcement as yet as to who will manage the new combination.

H. C. Christie Working with Rothapfel.

Howard Chandler Christie, the noted artist, and Samuel L. Rothapfel will blend their artistry in a satirical comedy titled, "The Face on the Drug Store Floor." This number will be one of the eight features of the first Rothapfel Unit Program, now under production under the personal supervision of Mr. Rothapfel.

FINDS BUSINESS GOOD IN SOUTHLAND

Moving Picture World Representative Visiting Cities in Dixie Reports Business in Fine Shape with Picture Showmen Right Down the Line

WE present another installment of the report Nat Bregstein is sending from the various towns he visits on his tour of the South in the interest of Moving Picture World. Bregstein has passed through the Atlantic Coast states and is now working in towns on the Gulf side of the country, soliciting subscriptions and putting our paper in closer touch with the picture showmen in cities of various sizes. This report ends with his visit to Atlanta, from there he headed toward the Southwest, where he is now active.

Here Is Bregstein's Report.

Charlotte, N. C., is a lively town. Here they have The Craver Amusement Enterprises, F. Alton Abbott, the manager of the Broadway Theatre, seating 500, admission 10 and 20 cents. Auditorium seats 3,000. Admission prices vary here; runs road shows. Things look bright for Charlotte in the amusement end, Mr. Abbott says.

The Ideal Theatre, seating 400, admission price 5 and 10 cents, is run by A. B. Cheatham. The other house belonging to the same firm is the Ottawa, seating 400, admission 10 and 20 cents. Otto Hoss is the proprietor of these two theatres. The other theatres are the Strand, seating 700, admission 10 and 20 cents; manager, F. H. Harris; using Pathe, Mutual and Metro. L. M. Holmes, manager of the Edisonia Theatre, which seats 300, charges an admission of 10 cents.

Enterprise in Savannah.

Savannah supports the following theatres: Arcadia, seating 757, admission 11 and 17 cents; Star, colored house, seating 1,016; admission, 6 and 11 cents. A. Guckenheimer, the president and general manager of Hearts of the World Corporation of the Southeast, owns these two theatres. Mr. Guckenheimer says "Hearts of the World" has two companies on the road at present. Mr. Wolf, the other exhibitor in town, controls the Odem, seating 800, which he will shortly remodel to a seating capacity of 1,100, admission 11 and 17 cents; and the Folly, seating 400, admission 6 and 17 cents. The owners of the theatres in Savannah are pooled when it comes to buying productions. Colonial Theatre, under the management of Mr. Wolf, which was closed recently, will open very soon. New organs will be installed in all the movie houses in Savannah.

The Report on Augusta.

Augusta is another town I visited. Here they have the Princess, seating 290, with admission price of 10 and 15 cents; the Rialto, 700, admission 10 and 20 cents. Both of these houses belong to the Lynch Enterprises. Service at the Rialto is Paramount; at the Princess, everything. Mr. Hearn, who has been here since September 7, has been connected with the Lynch Enterprises for seven years. The population of Augusta is about 60,000, and movie theatres in town draw a patronage from Somerville, Ga.

Greenland Theatre is another house, seating 640, admission price 10 cents, and is one of the oldest theatres in town. Uses Mutual, Pathe and Vitagraph. Business is very good.

Atlanta Busiest of Cities.

Atlanta is a mighty busy town these days. There are twenty exchanges here, also about a dozen theatres, all downtown; no suburban houses at all. Among the independent exchanges is that of R. M. Savini, who has been here four years. He nandles "Woman," Gaumont Weeklies and serials. Another independent exchange is the Film Clearing House, Carl De Seay, manager. This office opened two months ago and has "Wanted for Murder" going big.

Had a chat with T. O. Tuttle, manager of the Select Branch. Among the changes in the office force S. W. Grow, formerly with Vitagraph and Paramount, just released from the service, is now back at his old job. B. J. Wolfson, former salesman, also recently discharged, resumes his old position as salesman. Clara Kimball Young in "The Road in the Dark," played to a good business at the Criterion in Atlanta, says Mr. Tuttle. "This week's business breaks all records for this office," is the manager's statement.

At the Vitagraph office, George R. Allison, the manager, here about two years, reports big serial business. He says the Pheil Theatre, seating 900, just opened recently, went big with "Common Cause."

Atlanta Exchanges Busy.

At the Goldwyn office I had a chat with Joe Marentette, manager. Everything is going big at this office.

Tracy R. Barham, manager for Fox Exchange, reports large business on "Hell Roaring Reform" and "Salome." Three new salesmen are at this office: H. Simpson, formerly of Vitagraph; Charles A. Weatherly, formerly of World; Paul Phillips, formerly of Goldwyn. George Hoffman is setting the pace at this office.

A. C. Bromberg is vice-president and general manager of the Southeastern Pictures Corporation. This concern handles "To-day," "Mad Lover," etc. New salesman, W. L. Schmidt, formerly of Paramount.

South Takes to "Better 'Ole."

Called on Mr. Willbanks and P. A. Engler, of the E. & H. Film Company. These boys handle Billy West comedies and several other productions. Mr. Engler will shortly open the Frolic Theatre in Birmingham, a 600-seater, and will run straight pictures. He says this theatre will be backed by Birmingham capital.

G. F. Weaver, manager of World Pictures, says Kinograms Weekly is holding its own; also "The Better 'Ole" is going big.

At the Mutual office Manager Davis reports big business on the Cannibal pictures. J. P. Corbett, manager of Triangle office, reports good business on Talmadge reissues. At the Universal office "The Heart of Humanity" is reported going big in Atlanta.

Atlanta Theatres Prosperous.

At the Paramount office things looked busy. I called on J. C. Brown, manager Southern Theatre Equipment Company, which also has offices in Dallas. This company, organized in 1916, has Power agency for eleven Southern states.

Among the theatres in town are the Forsyth Theatre, in charge of Hugh L. Cardoza, Manager for the Wells Enterprises in Atlanta. The Forsyth, seating 1,500, admission 20 cents, was formerly a vaudeville house, but is now straight pictures, using Paramount and specials. Rialto, originally the Piedmont, seats 1,200, straight pictures, admission 20 cents. Both of these houses are up-to-date in every respect. Business is good in both houses, says Mr. Cardoza. W. P. Patterson, Manager, The Criterion, seating 1,000, admission 10 and 20 cents, uses Select and open booking, and has had this theatre three years; only orchestra in town with ten pieces; soon going to get an Austin organ, costing $15,000, and also will shortly improve the foyer of the theatre.

George E. Schmidt is at the Alamo No. 2 Theatre, seating 500. He says this house recently played to big business with Gaby Deslys "Infatuation." This theatre is situated between two terminals, and gets a transient business.

The Vaudett Theatre, seating 700, has an admission of 11 cents. Strand Theatre, seating 650, admission 20 cents; John Evins, Manager, says he uses Goldwyn, Fox and Standard, and doing a good business.

Uses "Flivver" for Country Route.

While strolling through the exchanges in Atlanta I ran into Mr. Towell, of Tuscaloosa, Ala., who has the Diamond Theatres, seating 500, admission 15 and 25 cents, and the Belvedere, seating 500, admission 10 and 20 cents. His town has 20,000 population Another out-of-town exhibitor I met was R. H. Hightower, owner and manager of the Crystal Theatre, Dublin, Ga., a town of 8,000. The Crystal seats 500, admission 11 and 17 cents, uses Select, Paramount and Fox. Mr. Hightower told me he has a man that uses a Ford to post 3,000 sheets all around the vicinity of about twenty miles. Plans have been drawn for a new house in Dublin to seat 1,400. Posting by automobile is "going some."

WHAT IS "GREATEST THING IN LIFE"?

Exhibitor Ludy Bosten Asked Muscatine Philosophers and Tradesmen to Answer—All Wanted to See Picture

LUDY BOSTEN, of the A-Muse-U Theatre, Muscatine, Ia., cleaned up on Griffith's Artcraft production, "The Greatest Thing in Life."

He got his local paper to co-operate with him. Then he announced a contest at the same time that he ran his usual advertisement asking Muscatiners "What is the greatest thing in life?"

The outcome proved finally that almost everybody in Muscatine had opinions on the subject and almost everybody in Muscatine jumped at the chance to express them. Local interest rose to a high pitch and three well-known citizens were chosen to act as judges: the secretary of the local Y. M. C. A., the secretary of the Association of Commerce, and a retired newspaper man.

The enthusiasm aroused led the paper to realize that it was overlooking something, and accordingly after the contest was over, it printed an editorial commenting on the interest displayed and inaugurating a series of weekly essay contests on topics of local or national importance. "Our Schools," and "The League of Nations" indicate the nature of the new series.

So much for the literary side. Now for the straight business angle.

Mr. Bosten arranged with various merchants and the paper that his ad for the showing of "The Greatest Thing in Life" was surrounded by ads telling what the merchants thought was "The Greatest Thing in Life." A dentist advertised "Clean teeth"; a butcher, "good health depending upon fresh meat," etc. A good "tie-up" for the tradesmen, and a better one for Mr. Bosten.

The result was that everybody in Muscatine and environs was all het up about "The Greatest Thing in Life." The film told them to everybody's satisfaction, including Mr. Boston's, when he figured up the receipts.

Non-Inflammable Film Law Under Discussion in Boston

THE Pathoscope Company, manufacturers of non-inflammable film and the Pathoscope machine, protested against a bill presented to the Massachusetts Legislature seeking to make lawful the use of certain sizes and perforations of film. The main provision is that the law relating to the use of films shall not apply to apparatus which cannot use standard theatrical films and is operated with only cellulose acetate films and with only an inclosed incandescent light.

The Liberty Mutual Insurance Company, one of the parties in favor of the bill was represented by John W. Cronin, as counsel. The other petitioner was Francis H. Lincoln, of Worcester, Messrs. Cronin and Lincoln claim that the films they want to use are not the usual commercial films, but are such as are used in churches, etc. They said that the opposition came from the Pathoscope company, which has a monopoly and wants to keep it.

Former Senator Claude L. Allen, of Melrose, counsel for the Pathoscope Company, put his opposition to the bill on the ground of the danger from fire which would result if the petition were granted to apparatus with as little safeguard against fire as he charged existed in the case of the apparatus to be favored by the proposed bill.

Directors Association to Meet.

EAST SHOULD BE PRODUCING CENTER

P. A. Powers Declares That Artificial Lighting Has Robbed California Sunshine of Its Cinch

IT is evident that P. A. Powers never intends to run for any office at the disposal of the men and women who vote in Los Angeles. Be it furthermore surmised that he has no hope of ever being elected to any office in the whole state of California. For "P. A." has declared himself. "P. A." is an Eastern coast defender who represents what the real original coast defender stands for along the Pacific's shores.

To a representative of Moving Picture World, Mr. Powers, the other day, said: "I can't understand why producers are leaving the East and going to Los Angeles to make their productions."

"It's the sunshine, methinks," said the interviewer.

Had there been a knot-hole the size of a rain barrel handy the World man would have rejoicingly dropped through it when Mr. Powers turned his gaze upon this fount of ignorance.

"Over seventy-five per cent. of pictures now made are photographed under artificial lights," said Mr. Powers.

"But the sunshine——" A sentence here was cut right in the middle of a gulp.

"Nobody has any outdoor stage in operation. Nobody depends entirely upon sunlight for three-fourths of the pictures," continued Mr. Powers. "If a picture is taken out-of-doors lights are also used, in most instances. Los Angeles has no such corner on sunshine as to warrant producers to haul bag and baggage out there to make pictures."

Paul Gulick—First Aid.

At this point Mr. Powers called in Paul Gulick; probably to have some one who might add at least a modicum of intelligence to the situation. It was Paul, we believe, who remarked that D. W. Griffith was coming East to make his future productions. And it was Paul's presence of mind that suggested the thought that Famous Players-Lasky had but lately rented Universal's Fort Lee studio in which to make productions.

"And they're going to build a studio in Long Island City," said the World man, thus encouraged to use the brains in one side of his head.

Says the East Is Slow.

"New York and the East are slow," said Mr. Powers. "Slow" might suggest the speed of a Ford in comparison to a Rolls-Royce to a fast worker like P. A. Powers. Here we have all been saturated with the idea that New York was, to say the least, a bit hasty—but "P. A." with his Rolls-Royce nature seemed to gauge the action as though he were passing a Ford, and hitting on all four.

"Here's all this money going to Los Angeles. We send it from New York," declared Mr. Powers, "and all we keep here is for the executive office pay-roll. We get it together here and send it to Los Angeles to be paid out. We keep the bungalow business good, while here in New York you can get a kitchenette and two rooms for as little as $1,200 a year."

As an Eastern coast defender Mr. Powers was just getting warmed up.

"Look at the income tax that was collected from the motion picture industry in Los Angeles," said Mr. Powers, while Paul Gulick and the World man took a mental look. "More money was paid the Government by picture people—actors, directors, employes and producers themselves—than was paid by the combined theatrical interest in any other town in the country.

Favors Eastern "Locations."

"Then, too, there is the matter of locations. The East has every variety of location the picture producer might desire. On the West Coast locations are limited and they have all been worked over time and again." The World man makes no claim to actually reproducing the very words Mr. Powers used—for "P. A." is not only a fast thinker, but a quick talker.

But the digest of what he said is here: With lights being used in seventy-five per cent. of the pictures now made, New York and vicinity represents the spot where pictures should be made.

"The players are all New Yorkers," continued Mr. Powers. "They have home ties here and every time they get an engagement they must break a lease or sub-let at a loss. The executives live in New York and must travel back and forth between here and the Coast to transact business. New York should be the center of picture production as well as the head of the business in a financial way."

When we had joined Paul Gulick in passing out, being careful to not slam the door, the World man ventured to say:

"This California sunshine seems to be largely moonshine, doesn't it?"

With which Paul agreed. HILL.

Norma Talmadge on Location at Saranac Lake.

Stuart Holmes is piercing a throbbing heart of snow. The players are garbed for Miss Talmadge's Russian picture, "The New Moon," from the pen of H. H. Van Loan. Pipe Marc MacDermott behind the whiskers!

Irene Castle Leaves for Florida.

Irene Castle, with her director, Charles Maigne, and a large number of players engaged to support her in Famous Players-Lasky production, "The Firing Line," has gone to Miami, Fla., to start work on the film.

Heading the cast, in the two most prominent male roles, are Robert V. Steele and David Powell, and among the others are J. H. Gilmore, Frank Losee, Rudolph de Cordova, Charles Craig, Philip S. Rice, Robert Schable, Shaw Lovett, Isabel West, May Kitson, Janne Warrington, Anna Cornwall and Gladys Coburn. Robert Schnable also goes in the capacity of assistant to Director Maigne, while his cameraman is Al. Liguori.

The scenario which is one of the best known novels from the gifted pen of Robert W. Chambers, is the work of Clara Beranger.

Woman Promotes Moving Pictures.

The feature entitled "When a Woman Strikes," released through the Film Clearing House, Inc., was sponsored by Mrs. Nancibelle W. Grant, who is president of the British American Finance Co., and there will be other features produced by the same corporation. Rosemary Theby, Ben Wilson, Neva Gerber and Murdock Mac Quarrie are prominent players in "When a Woman Strikes," a melodramatic feature. Mrs. Grant not only organized the British American Finance Co., getting the money together, but as president has charge of the corporation's activities, which are large and varied.

Pathe Will Reside at Forest Hills.

A private house at Forest Hills, L. I., has been leased to serve as the home of Charles Pathe, head of the house that bears his name, during his residence in the United States. Mr. Pathe sailed from France on April 6 and arrived in New York April 15 for an indefinite stay.

Mr. Pathe's temporary home will be an eight-room house. One of the important features will be a thoroughly equipped office from which he will be enabled to guide his big organization, both the American and the European sections.

DIRECTOR MILLER BECOMES PRODUCER

Signed by Frank Hall to Produce Special Features To Be Released by Independent Sales Corporation

CHARLES MILLER, who first came into prominence as a director with the Ince forces during the Fine Arts days, and who since that time has given to the screen some of its best dramatic features, has been signed by Frank G. Hall, president of Independent Sales Corporation, to produce a series of special productions under the corporate name, Charles Miller Productions, Inc. Mr. Miller is president and Mr. Hall is vice-president and general manager as well as one of the directors of the corporation.

Work will be started next week on the first of this series of Miller productions, at the Bacon-Backer studio, which has been engaged by Mr. Hall for the Miller company. The Miller productions will be distributed by Independent Sales Corporation, through its Film Clearing House exchanges. Mr. Miller plans to produce six specials during the current year.

Since the days when five-reel productions were the exception and not the rule, Mr. Miller has held the megaphone over moving picture productions, and during the time intervening he has been in the studio, rising with the rapid strides taken by the silent art and gaining increased experience. "The Ghost of Yesterday," one of the most popular and finished picture in which Norma Talmadge has ever appeared, was his work. His ability to bring out the simplicity and comely character of star and story was convincingly shown in his production of "The Sawdust Ring," starring Bessie Love. His production of "The Flame of the Yukon," featuring Dorothy Dalton, was one of the screen successes of its time.

Miller Expresses Satisfaction.

Mr. Miller, in making the announcement of his independent venture, said: "What has been done toward advancing the silent drama as an art everyone knows. I hope I have contributed something to this advancement. I have tried during the course of my direction to bring out the worthwhile phases of the drama that has become the biggest individual entertainment medium of the time and now that I have free rein and can put into actual practice my ideas of production, I feel that my venture will be a success.

"I have always contended that the first consideration should be given to the story, and the story will be first and foremost in my productions. With a good human story and a capable cast working with me, I consider the hardest part of my work done. Mr. Hall and I expect to give the public pictures with appeal, logical, human stories and productions that will meet the demands made upon both big and little theatres."

Claims "Daddies" Took His Plot.

On April 2 Harry O. Davis, through his attorney, Arthur Butler Graham, instituted suit in the United States District Court, Southern District of New York, against David Belasco and John L. Hobble, under a claim for infringement of a copyright owned by Mr. Davis.

When Mr. Davis was associated with the Universal Company he copyrighted the literary rights to a play entitled "The Little Belgian," and produced it in a motion picture of that name. He claims that the play "Daddies," now enjoying a successful run at the Lyceum Theatre, New York, is so similar in plot and incident to "The Little Belgian" as to give him a right of action for infringement. The defendant, John L. Hobble, is the author of the play and Mr. Belasco, it is claimed by the plaintiff, presents it.

Billie Burke Signs New Famous Players Contract

BILLIE BURKE, who for the past few months has been enjoying a well-earned winter vacation at Palm Beach, has signed a new contract with Famous Players-Lasky Corporation to continue her appearance in Paramount pictures, by arrangement with F. Ziegfeld, Jr.

Miss Burke's new arrangement will not interfere with her appearance on the stage in an all-star revival this spring and her appearance under Mr.

Billie Burke.

Ziegfeld's management in a new play next fall.

Arrangements are now being completed by Jesse L. Lasky for Miss Burke's two new screen vehicles, both of which are popular Broadway hits. She will work in her first film at the former Universal studio in Fort Lee, which has just been taken over by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. "We are not able to announce the titles of these plays just at this time but expect to be able to do so in about a week," said Mr. Lasky, in discussing the new plans for Miss Burke.

Livingston's New Orpheum.

Manager William H. Haight, of the Orpheum, Livingston, Mont., is busy renovating and entirely restoring the interior decorations and furnishings of what has been known as Hefferlin's Opera House. About May 1 he will reopen the opera house as the Orpheum, closing up his present Orpheum and putting it out of business. The new Orpheum will represent $12,000. in its reconstruction and will play road shows, vaudeville and highest class moving pictures. In the logical course of events there will be greatly more time devoted to pictures than there will be to other types of amusement.

"Fires of Faith" To Be Presented in a Big Way

"FIRES OF FAITH," the big Salvation Army special produced by Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, under the direction of Edward Jose, will be presented to the public in a big way. Wayland H. Taylor, formerly with D. W. Griffith, has been engaged to manage a special department to exploit and present it to the public. Mr. Taylor handled "Intolerance" and other big features with marked success.

Working in conjunction with the company's campaign on this film, the Salvation Army has started its drive in every city and hamlet, creating great interest in the production through its various channels of publiciy.

Arrangements are well under way for the picture's premier in New York City as well as in Boston, Chicago and other large cities. Details on these openings are not ready for publication at this time, but will be made public in the near future.

Grossett and Dunlap, publishers of the book, "Fires of Faith," have also started their sales campaign on the novel, working in close association with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. The book will be distributed so as to prove of direct benefit to managers running the picture. The song, "Fires of Faith," also inspired by the production, is now receiving its final treatment. The song, published by Waterson, Berlin & Snyder and prepared by George W. Benyon, is used as the general theme of the music score for the film.

Providence Provides Armory for Movie Ball on April 24

GREAT preparations are being made in Providence for the first annual ball of the Motion Picture Operator's union on April 24. A special act of the Legislature was passed granting the motion picture interests the use of a state armory for the affair. It is one of the few times in the history of the state where one of the state armories has been used for other than state affairs. It is a flattering tribute to the motion picture interests that the permission was given unanimously by the legislators.

Fifty per cent. of the receipts of the affair will go to the fund for Fatherless Children of France. Governor Beeckman and many notables will attend. Sargeant Gammel, the motion picture censor of Rhode Island, Colonel Anthony Dyer, of Providence, and other state leaders are giving their earnest co-operation in making the affair a huge success.

It is expected that some of the largest exhibitors will send their stars to the ball. Plans are being made for an elaborate entertainment of the stars who attend.

MARTIN RUNS "SALOME" FOR TWO WEEKS

Connecticut Exhibitor Advertises Event Heavily in Newspapers, on Billboards and by Circular Matter

PRODUCERS of big special feature attractions long have contended that the only way to play big pictures is in a big way—with long runs, extensive advertising, big publicity smashes. They have held that all the resources of keen showmanship should be exercised, so that the maximum of patronage may be obtained.

C. L. Martin, a Connecticut exhibitor, sees wisdom in the attitude of the producers, and stands by them in a manner which shows that he is willing to translate his convictions into action. Mr. Martin is manager of the Rivoli and Princess Theatres, Waterbury.

An example of the methods Mr. Martin uses in exploiting big features was given recently when he opened "Salome" with Theda Bara at the Rivoli for a two-week stand.

Mr. Martin, who has been manager of the Rivoli since last July, said that he booked "Salome" because before he took charge the house had fallen into a rut and he is trying to extricate it from this position. He had seen "Salome" and decided that it was the type of picture necessary to restore the Rivoli to public favor.

After having seen "Salome" he laid out an advertising and publicity campaign which he figured would give the widest exploitation to its merits.

Puts Big Ads in the Newspapers.

He made arrangements for a sensational advertising and publicity campaign in Waterbury's two papers, the Sun and the Waterbury Life. On Saturday, March 22, the day before he opened, he ran big, smashing advertisements in each of the local papers, using cuts and mats supplied by the Fox Film Corporation for this production. He also made arrangements with the editors of the papers to carry extensive publicity stories—these stories being furnished from the press book issued by Fox. The advertisement in the Waterbury Sun on the day before the opening was twenty inches deep and dominated the whole paper. He followed this up on the opening day with a large display in the Waterbury Life, a Sunday paper. He carried display advertising every day after the opening, keeping "Salome" in a position that was certain to stand out from the mass of other theatre advertising.

Just before the opening he let loose a blizzard of 20,000 heralds all over Waterbury and surrounding towns. He plastered every available space with 10,000 yellow circus sheets.

To travelers entering Waterbury on the main roads he carried the message of "Salome" on twenty-four 24-sheet stands. He plastered the city with fifty three-sheets, twenty-five six-sheets, and 200 one-sheet date stands.

Places 500 Window Cards.

From the store windows of the city 500 window cards shouted the merits of "Salome." On lampposts, fences, the sides of barns—everywhere—he plastered 200 streamers carrying the dates of "Salome's" engagement.

In the window of a vacant store in the center of the city he arranged a large art display of Theda Bara as "Salome." Standing out in prominent places, so that even the most casual passer-by could not fail to see them, were sixty program frames, 9x22½ inches. These he set up in hotel lobbies, barber shops, railway stations, street-car waiting rooms, drugstores.

The result was that when "Salome" opened on Sunday, March 23, it would have been impossible to find anyone in Waterbury or its environs who did not know that "Salome" was playing at the Rivoli and would continue to play there for two weeks. Mr. Martin did a smashing business during the entire run.

Kane Will See That Kansas Boys Are Well Entertained

TWO honors from outside the business have recently been conferred upon Arthur S. Kane, general manager of Select Pictures Corporation. Soon after finishing his term as president of the Kansas Society of New York the New York Washburn Club, made up of Alumni and others who attended Washburn College, Topeka, made him president for the current year.

Now another compliment has just been paid him. Former Kansans in New York are co-operating with Adjutant General Martin and the women sent by the state to prepare for the reception of Sunflower state troops from overseas, and Mr. Kane has been made chairman of the entertainment committee.

Governor Henry Allen and state officials will be given a dinner when they arrive to welcome the Kansas boys with the Thirty-fifth Division, and Mr. Kane has been made a member of the committee to arrange this banquet.

Select's general manager is serving notice on the trade that he expects a lot of entertainment to be furnished for the Sunflower state lads who bucked the Hun into a state of helplessness in the Argonne Forest.

Pathe's Albany Exchange Takes Bigger Quarters

THAT Albany, N. Y., is recognized by motion picture distributors as an ideal location for exchanges," says the Albany Journal, "is shown by the fact that the Pathe Exchange, Inc., now located at 398 Broadway, has taken the building at 35-37 Orange street, on a long-term lease, and it will be remodeled into one of the most modern exchanges in the country." B. M. Moran, manager of the Pathe Exchange, expects to be in the new building by May 1.

The main floor of the new exchange will be given over to offices. The various executive departments will be in the front part, and in the rear Manager Moran plans to erect a vault for the storage of 3,000 reels. The second floor of the exchange will be given over to the exploitation and poster departments.

One of the features of the new exchange will be a miniature theatre on the second floor. Thirty-two persons are employed in the Albany exchange, and it is probable that when the exchange moves into its new quarters, the office force will be increased.

Union Deprecates Opening Theatres that Cannot Pay

THE Moving Picture Operators' Union of San Francisco, through its business agent, Peter Boyle, has issued a warning against the promiscuous purchase of moving picture theatres by persons unacquainted with the business, calling attention to the fact that but few houses offered for sale are making money. A number of small local houses have been taken over recently by striking boilermakers and machinists and in order to meet expenses the owners of these are evading union rules and as a result many skilled operators are out of employment.

Business Agent Boyle, as a delegate from the Operators' Union, recently attended a meeting of the San Francisco Labor Council, and asked the aid of that body in establishing a boycott on a number of theatres if no other method could be recommended to enforce better working conditions. The general prosperity of the amusement business has led to the reopening of small houses that have been closed for a long time and but few of the new owners of these have ever had previous experience along this line.

Universal Exchange Managers in Town.

Tom Spry, manager of the Universal exchange at Boston, F. S. Hopkins, manager of the Buffalo exchange, and Louis Baum, manager of the Cincinnati office, spent two days in New York last week conferring with H. M. Berman, general manager of exchanges, regarding business conditions in their respective territories.

No two men advertise alike. If they did, there would be little pull in advertising. But the man who does the best work is usually he who makes the most radical departure from the average.

LEAGUE SECONDS THE CENSOR PROTEST

Maryland State Body to Co-operate with Washington Exchange Managers in Accelerating Work of Viewers

THE Exhibitors' League of Maryland will co-operate with the Managers' Association of Washington in any action that body takes relative to the Censor Board of Maryland. This was decided on at a general meeting held Tuesday, April 8, at the headquarters of the League, 419 East Baltimore street.

President Louis Schlicter presided and under the head of new business several matters were taken up. Secretary C. B. Eyer read a letter from Mr. Kent, manager of the Triangle Exchange in Washington, thanking him for his invitation to visit the new headquarters and also speaking of the action the Washington Managers' Association relative to writing Governor Harrington on the activities of the Maryland Censor Board.

A motion was made by W. C. Pacey and carried that Mr. Eyer write to the Washington organization that the league will co-operate on the censor question and also on any other matter for the benefit of the industry.

It was decided that Baltimore newspapers be asked to give publicity to the fact that the new revenue bill which goes into effect on May 1 requires one cent war tax on every five cent admission ticket and that it must be paid by the public.

Another general meeting has been called for Sunday night, April 13, at 7:30, at the league headquarters, 419 East Ball street.

Get Stars for Ball April 25.

The ball committees are busily engaged in making ready for the event on Friday night, April 25, at the Lyric. The tickets are selling for 55 cents including war tax and all the boxes have been taken. Music will be furnished by Cupero's new Park Band. Cupero is also leader of the New Theatre orchestra.

Definite promises have been given by Leah Baird and Taylor Holmes, according to the members of the committee, that they will be present and negotiations are now under way with others for their appearance.

COURT REBUKES PENNSYLVANIA CENSOR

State Film Viewers Scored by Judge Rogers in His Decision on "The Brand" as Arbitrary and Oppressive

THE Goldwyn-Rex Beach production of "The Brand" was justified in a decision handed down by the Common Pleas Court, Philadelphia, on an appeal from the Pennsylvania State Board of Censors. The Court ordered the censors to approve the production. The action of the board in its original finding is characterized by the Court as an abuse of discretion, the Court finding that the board acted "arbitrarily and oppressively in disapproving and condemning the series of moving pictures in question known as 'The Brand'." The appeal to the Common Pleas Court had been taken by Gabriel D. Hess, general counsel for Goldwyn Distributing Corporation.

The opinion of the Court, written by Judge Rogers, completely vindicates the author and the producers, and once more emphasizes the high plane on which Goldwyn pictures are made. The decision establishes the Goldwyn production of "The Brand," a story of Alaska, as, in the opinion of the Court, "a series of pictures of historical and educational value, dealing with this particular territory of the United States."

The Pennsylvania litigation is expected to have a strong influence on similar litigation in other parts of the country and is looked on as indicating a sentiment on the part of jurists to curb the arbitrary power of censors, in accordance with the spirit of the law.

E. E. Shauer Returns from Europe.

E. E. Shauer, assistant treasurer of Famous Players-Lasky, returned from Europe March 8. Mr. Shauer has been in England and France for the past few months studying film conditions and returned with a wealth of information and unlimited enthusiasm on the subject of greatly improved conditions of the film industry in these countries.

Dubray Wounded Five Times in Four Years Against Hun

J. A. DUBRAY, formerly head cameraman at the Wharton studios, Ithaca, has returned to that city after four and a half years' service in the armies of France and America. He returns with the chevrons of a corporal, the scars of five wounds, a Croix de Guerre and the thrilling memories of twenty-one furious charges over the top.

Corporal J. A. Dubray.

In October, 1914, Corporal Dubray left the Wharton studios to return to France and fight for the mother country. He had served with the French engineers in 1902 and on his return was immediately assigned to the Sixth Engineers. He was sent into the trenches on November 13.

Five times Corporal Dubray narrowly escaped death from wounds, but shrapnel, machine gun bullets and gas failed to register the finale for this fighting Frenchman. He is one of five to survive the original unit of 74, and the only one of this five who has his full quota of arms and legs. Giant Hun shells buried him alive six times.

"The nearest I ever came to being killed," said Corporal Dubray, "was the time when with four others I was in a dugout hit simultaneously by two German shells. Three were buried alive and died before being uncovered. One lost a leg and I was the only one untouched."

At Lassigny in 1917 he was hit by two fragments from a high explosive shell, one piece of which struck him in the heart area and the other in the head. He refused to be sent to a hospital, and continued to fight on with his comrades. For this he was awarded the Croix de Guerre.

Corporal Dubray's service with the American army dated from August, 1918, to January 1, 1919. He was assigned as interpreter with the Fifth Division and went through the St. Mihiel drive with the Yankees.

Julia Arthur Praises the Movies.

The Authors' League of America holds every year a dinner, and this spring it had as its guests leading exponents of other arts than authorship. Among the players present as guests of honor were John Drew, Julia Arthur, Elsie Ferguson, Mabel Taliaferro and Louise Huff. Julia Arthur was called on to speak and most of what she said related to moving pictures and to the ever increasing value of them. She called the authors' attention to the educational possibilities in film portrayals and to the need for American historical pictures written as the best authors of the country could write them. She deplored the chance that the script as submitted might be changed by the studio continuity writers and said that that would pass. She said, "the moving pictures need you authors and America needs the moving pictures."

Another Simplex on Presidential Ship.

Samuel B. Rose, chief radio operator, abroad the Presidential Peace Ship George Washington was a visitor at the Simplex factory this week.

It will be remembered that there are three Simplex machines installed on this ship, two of them being used for the entertainment of the guests and the other is located in the crew's quarters.

The purpose of Mr. Rose's visit was to make arrangements for the purchase of still another Simplex. This will be necessary owing to the fact that arrangements are now being made for increasing the facilities to accommodate 1,700 additional troops on the George Washington.

THE BROADWAY TO SHOW GARSON FILM

"The Unpardonable Sin" Will Reopen Renovated Theatre—San Francisco Opens to Large Crowds

AFTER angling for a number of weeks Harry Garson has finally secured a theatre for the New York run of his new production, "The Unpardonable Sin," starring Blanche Sweet under the direction of Marshall Neilan. The picture has been chosen to re-open the Broadway theatre under its new management after the house has been renovated from top to bottom, inside and out. The date set for the opening is Friday, May 20.

The big Garson picture, like some others that have been looking for Broadway openings, ran into an unprecedented condition along the Great White Way. Never in its history, according to reports, has New York been so crowded with out-of-town visitors. Never before has the gross business of the Broadway theatres reached such tremendous proportions.

With these conditions prevailing the choice of "The Unpardonable Sin" to open the renovated Broadway is considered flattering by Mr. Garson and his associates.

Within the past few weeks the Broadway has been acquired by the B. S. Moss Theatrical Enterprises. It is to be raised to a higher plane than it has yet enjoyed as a picture house. The installation of a forty-thousand dollar pipe organ is one of the important improvements planned.

New York Eager to See Picture.

The tales of success which came to New York are making metropolitan film devotees eager to see "The Unpardonable Sin." Not more than a score of New York film folk have seen the big picture to date. Detroit has seen it, San Francisco has seen it, Toronto has seen it, but the occasional print that has happened into New York has moved on quickly.

The picture opened Sunday, April 6, at the California theatre, San Francisco, for an indefinite run, and telegrams received by W. H. Rudolph, eastern representative for Mr. Garson, indicate that it scored fully as great a success there as it did at its real premiere in Detroit not long ago. Eugene H. Roth, manager of the California theatre, which is one of the finest in the country, had this to say by wire:

"Accept heartiest congratulations. Our California theatre was packed to capacity all day, the consensus of opinion in San Francisco being that Miss Sweet has again demonstrated her splendid dramatic ability and perhaps is shown at her best in 'The Unpardonable Sin.' Marshal Neilan can well be proud of his excellent production. The powerful story is richly and delicately handled. Present my compliments to Harry Garson and tell him for me that pictures such as 'The Unpardonable Sin' fulfill all of his promises of delivering 'one hundred per cent' pictures."

Sol Lesser Wires Encouragement.

Sol Lesser, who had bought the rights for California, Nevada and Wyoming long before the engagement at the California theatre was even considered, wired of hundreds being turned away and of enthusiastic audiences.

The opening in Toronto, at the Allen theatre, under the direction of Jule and Jay A. Allen, who have purchased the Canadian rights on the picture, took place Monday, March 31. The Allens' telegram to the Garson office in New York included these lines: "First day's receipts, $1,605. Film going big. Holding over for second week."

Other Openings Planned.

Following the same plan which caused him to open the production himself in Detroit—a plan which immediately started an avalanche of state rights selling, "The Unpardonable Sin" is to be opened for indefinite runs in a number of the important cities throughout the country in the immediate future—and always with the active co-operation of the Garson forces. Mr. Rudolph is leaving for Chicago Friday evening, April 11, to superintend the opening of the picture at the Randolph theatre in the Windy City, owned and operated by Jones, Linick & Schaefer, who have purchased the Illinois rights. Sunday, April 20, is the Chicago date and the engagement is an indefinite one.

Opening dates in Minneapolis and St. Paul have been set for May 4 and May 11 respectively at the New Lyric and New Liberty theatres. The Broad Street theatre, Newark, a Klaw & Erlanger house of the "legitimate" class, gets the picture beginning May 26.

Louis H. Mayer, who has bought the New England rights, plans a big opening at a prominent Boston theatre in the near future, and engagements in Pittsburgh, Cleveland, and Indianapolis are already being arranged.

The Carter De Havens to Appear in Capitol Comedies

CARTER DE HAVEN and Flora Parker, former musical comedy and vaudeville favorites and now prominent picture players, have been signed by "Smiling Bill" Parsons, star and creator of Capitol Comedies and president of the National Film Corporation of America, to make thirteen Capitol Comedies during the coming year at Parsons' Hollywood studios. The De Haven-Parker productions, like all other Capitol Comedies, are to be released exclusively through Goldwyn.

"Smiling Bill" has already obtained six suitable stories for the pair and is now engaged in assembling a cast of popular comedy players for their support. Work on the first De Haven-Parker Capitol Comedy will be started early in May.

William Fox Gives Prizes to Employes for Captions

ADVERTISING possibilities of a photoplay begin with the title. That is, the title is the first means of appeal for both the producer and exhibitor; and this is the reason, according to the Exhibitors Service Bureau, for a system lately devised in the William Fox organization whereby everyone connected with the home office is afforded opportunity for expressing himself regarding the titling of every Fox picture released.

Copies of the synopsis are prepared as soon as the story has been definitely decided upon. These are distributed among the employes of the various departments, and in order that there may be extra incentive for entering the competition a prize is offered for the title and catchline which is accepted.

Girl Proposed Ninety Titles.

A large number of varying ideas are thus developed. Sometimes one contestant will submit as many as fifty suggestions for titles, and it is on record that a young woman employe proposed ninety titles. The usual number received from each person varies from five to twenty.

These titles and catchline all are carefully examined by a committee of executives. A selection is made, with recommendation for adoption and with the one chosen are submitted ten or twelve of the best of the others. These go to the general manager and eventually are passed upon by Mr. Fox, who frequently calls the director and scenario writer, and sometimes the star, into conference on the subject.

Not infrequently, even with such a great variety of ideas as are developed through this competition, a second contest is held. On several occasions letters containing the synopsis have been sent broadcast to William Fox employes in the branch offices, an extra prize being offered in the hope of developing an especially fitting and appealing title.

Coast Salesman for "Units."

M. E. Maxwell, until recently connected with the sales and exploitation forces of United Picture Theatres, Inc., has joined the Independent Sales and Rothapfel forces as special representative for the Rothapfel Unit Program. Mr. Maxwell left the New York office of Independent Sales, Monday, for Denver, his first stop from here to the Coast. He will visit every important city from Denver to the Coast and will visit the Independent exchanges in this territory as special representative for Lynn S. Card, general sales manager.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Planting.

PLENTY of managers declare that their local papers will not take press matter when they do not even know what press work is let alone planting. First of all you must have something that will interest the readers of the paper you want to land. You do not have to reach them all, but you must show the editor something that he knows, without being told, is going to interest many of his readers. If he does not know that photoplay items are of interest then educate him first, and start to plant when you have him trained. You cannot plant before then, so wait until you have him trained, and do not interrupt the training by trying to plant as you go along. We know of one editor who "knew" his public was not interested in photoplays. He knew that because he did not care for them himself, and he did not realize that he was getting out a paper to please himself. The theatre man did not argue the point. He just switched the conversation, but the next time he turned up he had half of a portrait cut of a player. "You want a prize contest?" he demanded. "I'll give ten dollars' worth of candy as prizes to the first five people who can tell who this is." He knew the editor liked prize contests, and the editor ran true to form and took it up, though he sought to argue that the contest would be so difficult that no one would win the prize unless some marked hint was given. The manager held out. Not a hint. It would not even be fair to say that it was a photoplay star. The editor wanted the contest, and he took it on the manager's terms. When he found that more than 200 correct replies were received within twelve hours and more than a thousand on a basis of less than five thousand circulation he put in a photoplay page, and it made good; and he never found out that the manager had been running a slide of the same player for about a week before he sprang the contest, ostensibly as an advertisement for a coming film. Now he can plant anything he wants because he planted the lesson so adroitly. The same scheme may not always work, but the man who goes at the job of getting press stuff quietly and nicely can always better the amount of space his advertising is supposed to carry.

A Hook Up.

The Paramount press book for Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew in "Once a Mason" shows how to make capital of the fact that the picture is indorsed by the New York Temple of the Mystic Shrine. It might have added that you can get a hook-up with any of the Masonic bodies from the Symbolic Lodge up, since it was the Symbolic Lodge that Henry joined. Don't let this chance get past you if you use the picture, for it is the most acceptable picture dealing with Masonry we have ever seen, and it will make a strong appeal to lodge, chapter, council, commandery or shrine. Try and get one of the bodies to attend officially, making your chief effort to get the lodge, since it has the largest membership.

Double Advertising.

The Rose Theatre, Fayetteville, N. C., took two spaces in the local paper preceding the showing of "The Heart of Humanity." One of these was a four-fifteens on the back page, practically all reading matter. A three-tens was used on an inside page and two four and a halfs ran beside the larger to announce the current bill, a total of 99-column inches in a single issue; and this is a better division of the space than a combined display. The pictorial showing comes first, and prepared the reader for the all-type argument on the back page. Even in the Monday display both fists point to the larger advertisement alongside. It's a little thing, but it all helps. The all-type display by itself would not be good for there is not enough attraction to it, but taken in conjunction with the other display it works well and better than it would were the two combined into one space.

A Four Fifteens and a Three Tens Used in the Same Issue as Advance for The Heart of Humanity.

Takes the Cake.

Broadway is not what it used to be before they took the cover off. All the smart shops went over on Fifth avenue when they began to dig the subway, but they could not move the theatres, and so the theater district is infested with a lot of gift shops and lunchroom. One of the latter, near the Broadway Theatre, noticed the hit that "The Heart of Humanity" was making and hooked up with a ten-pound fruit cake designed after the film advertising.

This was displayed in the window for a week or two and attracted much attention. Hook-ups with book stores are common, and most every other sort of store has been brought in; but a cake hook-up seems to be something really new. Most of those fancy cakes are made of plaster of paris, and by mixing the plaster with vinegar instead of water it can be modeled before it sets. Try something along this line some time.

Steve Stunts.

Steve Farrar and his opposition have been scrapping over the Roosevelt pictures down in Harrisburg, Ill., and have been having a lively time. The Grand, the opposition house, booked the official Roosevelt picture, and Steve must have picked up some collection of news pictures. But he got in the first crack, for while the other house was still underlining "The Fighting Roosevelts" in a single 24-point Steve had "The Real Roosevelt" in a cross page six at the top of the page. Evidently he took that space for the run, for the Grand came out fighting, but could not top the page even with a larger space. This reproduced page shows both advertisements on the opening day. Steve had only a two-reel picture, and the Grand could probably have wiped him out with the proper sort of a campaign, but it contented itself with saying that their picture was not a rehash, not a reissue and in seven reels instead of two. Of course there is a lot more type and it all tells about the picture, but the Grand did not come out and tell just what the difference was. It did not tell the difference between a reissue and a first run. It did not say much of anything that counted. Steve had absolutely only

Two Roosevelt Advertisements, One a Six and the Other a Ten, Across the Page.

Projection Department

Important Notice.

OWING to the mass of matter awaiting publication, it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost), will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

Both the first and second sets of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

Lens Charts for Framing.

In response to requests from several progressive projectionists we have had the lens charts printed on heavy paper, size 11x17 inches, for framing.

These charts should form a part of the equipment of every projectionist. Remit the sum of 50 cents and they (both charts on one sheet) will be sent you in a mailing tube. You can then have them framed for your projection room. They are of size which shows up very clearly. The figures on Chart No. 1 are ¼-inch high. Those of Chart No. 2 a bit smaller. There is no longer the slightest question as to the value of these charts. Make them a permanent part of your equipment and be up to date.

Addresses Wanted.

This department has occasional inquiries for addresses of dealers in motion picture supplies in various cities or parts of the country. For instance, just now a large manufacturer asks addresses of all reliable dealers on the Pacific Coast.

My records in this are a bit out of date. Will dealers kindly send me a letterhead, so that I may get an up-to-date list of addresses?

Maine Unions.

Casper F. Hartleb, Bath, Maine, orders a handbook and the question booklets and says:

"Issue December 28, referring to lens charts, says: 'Looking at top of chart we find 20, and directly under that number, opposite B. F. of projection lens (4-inch in this instance) we find our aerial image (revolving shutter position) will be eight inches from the aperture.' Under table 2 it is marked E. F. and not B. F. One man says it should read E. F. in both places, but I say B. F. in both places. Who is right? Have been projecting pictures for about eight years and have received a great deal of help from the handbook and the department. Have set of Hawkins' Electrical Guides and find plenty in the three to keep me busy. Can you give me any information about the union in this state?"

Um, might I respectfully inquire of Local Union 458, I. A. T. S. E. and M. P. M. O. of the U. S. & C., why a projectionist within her territory is permitted to, much less obliged to, ask such a question? Brother A. L. Falconi, 27 Winslow street, Portland, is secretary of the local. Write to him for information. As to the lens chart, it seems to me the thing is rather obvious. E. F. is right, of course, in so far as applies to chart No. 2. B. F. is correct for No. 1. In other words, the charts are correct. It was an error in the printed instructions for their use. It merely shows how prone the human mind is to err. I read the proof of those instructions over half a dozen times, and have read it over more than once in the department, yet I did not catch the mistake until you pointed it out. Mucha gracias! I might add that the shutter positions, as supplied by chart No. 2, are closely approximate only—not exact. The aerial image is apt to be a bit nearer the aperture than is shown by chart. This is due to reasons which are beyond control. They will be explained later. I have just found this out. It in no way affects chart No. 1 and only slightly lessens the value of chart No. 2.

CARBON STUBS WANTED.

Some weeks ago we asked for carbon stubs, both A. C. and D. C., from projectionists using amperage in excess of 60 and up to 100.

The response has not been at all satisfactory. These stubs, which need not be more than an inch long (it is the crater I want), are to be used in extending the lens table from 60 to 100 amperes. Only upper stubs are wanted, and it is imperative that the exact amperage be given.

Surely you can help to that extent. Don't think the "other fellow" will send stubs. DO IT YOURSELF, because there is no danger of having too many. The more the better. Get busy.

Punk Inspection.

J. M. Nighswander, Eugene, Oregon, submits sample of film, with comment that he has received many films showing the fault, during several weeks past.

The film is a Paramount and the fault lies with the perforator. The Paramount, viewed as a company, is perhaps not to blame, since it, like other producers, is at the mercy of careless employes, but the man or woman responsible should be hunted out and fired bodily. What sort of inspection is it which permits film of this kind to go out? Friend producer yells his head off because the projectionist makes a monkey out of his productions by improper projection, often through no fault of his own. What apology has he to offer for making a monkey out of the projectionist by sending out film with which it is impossible to give perfect rendition? Just remember, Mr. Producer, that you have done absolutely nothing for the projectionist which your own selfish interest has not compelled you to do, although you are absolutely dependent upon him for the final success of your work, while the projectionist has done many things for you. Suppose you at least instruct your inspectors that while any man, or woman, may make an occasion slip, continued sending out of such blunders as is shown can have no earthly excuse under the sun.

An Amazing Thing.

To me the one most amazing of the many astonishing features of the motion picture industry is the seemingly absolute indifference to waste in projection practice. It is astounding. It makes me wonder if the entire industry is stark, raving mad. We see theatre men tearing their hair over "overhead expense." We hear them howling about various war taxes, raving over high film rentals and see them working themselves into a frenzy of indignation over excessive star salaries. "The Gods," they howl, "are linked together for our ruin." We see the theatre manager writhe and groan over a two or three dollar a week advance in projectionist's salaries, and begin to believe the poor chap is really to be pitied—until we step into his projection room, take a squint around, and then wonder what occupies the space where his brain is supposed to be.

For there we find not even the faintest glimmering of common sense in the handling of highly valuable property. In fact we find that property mauled around and manhandled in a way that ought to be instantly condemned by the wisest tyro. And it is done with the utmost sang froid and against repeated warnings by this department. We find gate tension pulling the living liver out of sprocket holes one way and take up tension the other. We find the crocked reel buzzing merrily around at a thousand a minute on an out-of-line rewinder, raising merry Cain with reels of film worth $100 or more each. And the projectionist is too cussed lazy, too informally shiftless or too stupidly ignorant of the fundamentals of his business to even line up the re-winder properly. Faugh! it is disgusting. Of course, this is not, thank God, the case in all projection rooms, but any who read this and find the shoe to fit, can just wear it, with my compliments. It is past the time for mincing words on such displays of stupid incompetency. Examine thyself, thy rewinder and machine tensions, and if what I have said does not apply, then accept my congratulations. If you find it does apply, then I hope what I have said hurts, and hurts good and proper, for you are small credit to the profession.

Suppose you are running fairly good film—say a week old, and that you have an eight-reel program. Those reels are easily worth $100 each—total $800. Apparently they leave your hands in practically the same condition in which you received them, if your tensions are right, which automatically precludes any overspeeding of projection, and your re-winder is graved down and properly lined, those films actually are in essentially the same condition as when received. Under those conditions wear and tear will not exceed one-fourth of one per cent, or $2 for the entire program. But if the three items named be wrong to any considerable degree, (a not at all unusual condition) then the damage, while probably entirely invisible to the naked eye, may very easily reach 2 per cent, or a total of $16 for the day, $14 which is clear waste. And it is an absolute fact that that much unnecessary waste in film does occur every day in a very large number of projection rooms, the managers of which strain at a wage increase of comparatively trifling amount and calmly swallow the cause of $14 a day without batting an eye. Why? Simply because the wage increase they see and understand, while the other they don't actually see—it is just "Richardson's ravings." But they pay for it just the same, in increased film rental. Yes, verily do they pay that same! And the worst of it is that the theatre with an up-to-date projectionist, who does not commit these outrages, but performs his full duty, and which has a manager who does not force the waste by shoot-'em-through tactics, must shoulder the full share of the damage done by Mr. Ignorance, because it all goes, perforce, into the "overhead," which must be charged back in increased film rentals.

A Duty Owed.

The motion picture projectionist shoulders a burden of responsibility when he takes charge of projection, and it is one phase of this we would bring to your attention in this article. There is a too frequent disposition on the part of projectionists to regard themselves as responsible only to their immediate employer, the exhibitor. The prevailing idea is that if the employer is satisfied, then all is well. Never was there an idea with less basis in fact. I might even say that in many cases if the exhibitor is satisfied, that fact is conclusive evidence that the work is almost anything else than good. But it is not my purpose in this article to deal with that phase of the matter, nor to cite the fact that the projectionist owes a distinct duty to the machine manufacturer, to the exchange, the producer and the artists, as well as to others directly connected with the industry, all of whom will be directly injured if his work is improperly performed. The item with which we will deal is the responsibility of the projectionist to the public—the audiences which fill the theatre, which responsibility is not only direct, and very great, but one which cannot possibly be shelved.

First and foremost, as has been repeatedly pointed out by this department, any neglect on the part of the projectionist which operates to injury of screen results, is nothing less than a direct swindle, because the patron who buys a ticket (and thus helps to pay your wages) has the right to expect and to receive the very best you are capable of producing. To give anything less than that is dishonest, as well as discreditable to yourself and to the profession. With the foregoing in view, let us examine into the matter of eye strain, due to lack of knowledge or to carelessness, laziness or neglect on the part of the projectionist.

Eye strain may be caused by any one of several different things, or by them all conbined. First, by a picture out of proportion in size to distance from front rows of seats. This is a very serious item indeed. True, the exhibitor is the one who is usually directly responsible for a wrong condition in this respect, but unless the projectionist knows what is right, and advises the exhibitor that the condition is wrong, he must perforce assume responsibility for damage done. Eye-strain may be, and all too frequently is caused by wrong auditorium and orchestra pit lighting. Again the exhibitor is directly to blame, but again, if the projectionist is unable to point out the remedy, he must share the responsibility, and the responsibility for injury to God's most precious gift to humanity, the eyesight, is no light matter.

But aside from all this we still find thousands of projectionists attempting to judge of the sharpness of their picture with the naked eye, at distances ranging from 75 to 150 feet. Gentlemen, it can't be done! The picture which, looked at with the naked eye at a distance of 100 feet, seems clear-cut and sharp, may, more often then not, be decidedly improved if viewed through a good opera glass.

The importance of obtaining the very last word in sharpness of definition, cannot be too strongly emphasized. The audience "reads" the picture for from one and one half to two hours in the average theatre. The sharper the picture the easier it is on the eyes. That is a well known and recognized fact. The possible immediate injury to the eye of the patron is not the worst phase of this matter. Motion pictures are now almost universally patronized. Rich and poor, high and low, young and old, all "go to the movies" and any unnecessary weakening of the eyesight of this generation must and will inevitably operate to the damage of the eyesight of future generations. Your responsibility along these lines is, therefore, a heavy one. Are you doing your full duty? Do you study these matters? Can you talk intelligently on, for instance, auditorium lighting as affecting projection? Can you, with confidence, tell your employer whether his auditorium lighting is calculated to give a maximum result, with a minimum of eyestrain to the audience, and with minimum damage to your screen results. To say that it would do no good to tell him does not excuse your lack of accurate knowledge of the subject if you do not possess accurate knowledge. It is your duty to possess that knowledge. It is a part of your profession. Without it you automatically sink to the level of a mere mechanism "operator." Such knowledge has long since been made available by this department. Much of it is contained in the handbook. It should be a part and parcel of your professional equipment. You owe a duty to the public and to the motion picture industry and that duty is to accumulate unto yourself full knowledge of your profession, and having done so, to apply that knowledge to the utmost. And thus shall the profession of projection become respectable and respected and take its place up near the head of the class, instead of playing tail piece to the whole works.

Evidently Very Busy.

G. W. Walker, our projectionist cartoonist, whose work has been attracting attention in the department for quite some time, recently became the proud possessor of a handbook. He sends accompanying sketch of himself as at present seen. Comment is unnecessary. Incidentally brother Walker has recently removed to New York City, where he now has a good position in which his cartoon ability is utilized for dollar making purposes.

Good Hamilton Projection Room.

Cecil W. Wallis, Hamilton, Ontario, recently offered Film Digest details of automatic lamphouse illumination. I wrote calling his attention to the fact that while publication in Digest was perfectly all right, his proposed plan had been described and illustrated in the handbook for years. In reply he remarks:

"Have third edition of handbook, but frankly had forgotten that that particular plan was contained therein. But don't get the idea that the handbook is not used, for it most certainly is. Here is something which may be of interest. When you were in Hamilton last year the union took good care to show you the projection rooms of union theatres only, and Hamilton got a well-deserved roasting for its poor projection rooms. But there are a few theatres you did not visit, among them the Empire and Strand. The projection room at the Empire is 11 feet long, 7-feet 4 inches wide and 14 feet high, with a 20-inch ventilator through the ceiling to open air. Projection distance 86 feet, with lens only 5 feet above center of screen. Observation ports 11 feet high by 9 feet wide. Floor 6 feet thick, of concrete. Walls and ceiling 4 feet thick, of plaster on steel lath. Construction of Strand projection room is the same, but it is a little larger. Ventilation about the same. Distance of projection 144 inches, using Sabo 3-lens combination projection lens. Both theatres are equipped with Wagner converters and duplex arc regulators. Strand picture 17 feet 6 inches; Empire 15 feet."

In showing me projection rooms of union theatres only, the union did exactly what was to be expected. I was there as the guest of the union. I hope you will pardon me for saying that you are not doing yourself very proud in remaining outside the organization of your fellows. Apparently you are a man of ideas and brains. Take my advice and join the organization of your craft. You don't find the banker remaining outside the Bankers Union. Not on your tintype. He's too smart to make such a foolish play. Every day you work, friend Wallis, you take benefits won by the struggles the union has passed through. Get in and do your part. Anything less is not to your credit. This advice is given in all friendliness. I will say, though, that the union committee wanted me to look over some more theatres, but I was too tired. Whether the Empire and Strand were among them I cannot say, though it runs in my mind they were. I may possibly motor up to Toronto next summer. If I do I shall most likely pay Hamilton another flying visit. How do you like the Sabo lens?

Dowser Connection.

Harold Salters, Richmond, Indiana, orders question booklets and says:

"Sold my handbook recently, but will order another immediately as I just can't get along without one. Am going to have two new Simplex projectors soon. Wonder if you could give me the dope on the plan used by the Rivoli Theatre, New York City, for connecting the dowsers of the two projectors so as to get a perfect shift from one machine to the other. Find most of the boys here have the Hawkins Electrical Guides, but no handbook. I have a set of Hawkins, but don't believe they will do the average projectionist much good, as they do not go into sufficient detail. I have strung wire and did maintenance work for three or four years. Find many subjects treated in Hawkins which I don't believe a man without practical experience could grasp; also only four or five out of the ten volumes touch upon matters having to do with the projectionist's work. I certainly do enjoy the department. Hope some day to hear you talk on projection. Know it would do me a lot of good. Do you regard it as practical to connect the two projection arcs in series when using a 2-lamp 50 ampere Ft. Wayne generator, something on the order of the Transverter?"

Yes, the new Ft. Wayne motor generator is designed to be used that way, and will deliver the goods in fine shape. As to the Hawkins works, they are the best electrical books there are for the projectionist, because they are couched in understandable form. You are right, however, in saying that only a few of the volumes are practical for the projectionist. Some of the books are of no practical use to him at all. Your men make a big error in getting the Hawkins books first, which deal with electricity only, instead of the Handbook, which deals with all phases of projection, and in detail. They should have the Hawkins, yes, but the Handbook ought by all means to come first. Projectionists will do well, however, to buy only those volumes of Hawkins which will be of practical value to them. As to the Rivoli, why, I think they have the dowsers connected, if that is the way they do it (I don't remember now), the same as any one else. Run a light chain from one to the other, by means of pulleys on ceiling, so that closing one dowser opens the other. Connect them so that when one is wide open the other is just closed. That's all there is to it.

Operators.

Some of you still cling to the term "Operator" and wonder why I object. Well, here is a visual illustration of one of the reasons. These were all taken from just a part of one issue of a daily paper:

Operator—Gimbel Brothers, 32d St. and Broadway, require the services of an operator for their Millinery Workroom. Experience not necessary.

Operators—Solomon & Metzler, require the services of expert operators for high grade line of ladies waists, 33 East 33rd St.

Operators—Experienced brassiere operators on high-class work only, Mme. Irene.

Operators—Muslin and silk underwear. Good positions open on all machines.

Operators—on hose supporters, experienced and inexperienced.

Operators—experienced on ladies' neckwear, week or piece work.

Operators—on fine custom skirts and pajamas, A Sulka & Co.

Operators—Zig zag machines, experienced on lace scarfs; Perlmann, Schal & Stern.

Operator—experienced, and learners, garters and hose supporters; Buyer.

Operators—experienced on high-class gowns, Goldberg.

Operators—binders, experienced on bathing shoes; good pay, Empire Rubber.

And this is but a beginning.

Eye Trouble.

P. J. Saner, Westfield, New York, says: "Am chief projectionist at the theatre here and am having trouble with my eyes, due to glare of arc light. Would spectacles made from Crooks lenses break up the actinic rays of the arc, or would you recommend some make of glasses that I could wear while at work? Of course the color of the lenses must be such that I can see the picture at 80 feet."

No such animal exists, friend Saner. Any spectacles which would enable you to look at the arc or even at the spot without eye strain would prevent you from seeing your picture clearly. This matter has been dealt with in this department many times; also in the first two editions of the handbook. In the last it was left out to economize space because it is so generally well understood. The correct thing for you to do is inclose your light ray in a metal cone, so made that it will extend from lamphouse cone to aperture. It must be so made that it will either telescope, swing up, or lift out of the way for threading. In the side, next the aperture, you may set a piece of grass green or red glass if you feel that you just must see your spot, though the right way is to learn to handle your light entirely by the screen. The arc you must never look at at all. It is entirely unnecessary. You can tell the exact condition and position of the crater from the spot, and for that one reason it is perhaps advisable to have the glass inside of protecting cone. This plan is widely in use in San Francisco, as well as some other western cities. You can, of course, get glasses made purposely to allow of looking at electric arcs, but they are unnecessary. The shape, size and position of the spot tells you, if you understand your business as you should, everything it is necessary that you know about the crater, therefore why look at it? The spot should be round. Any divergence from the shape tells a tale of improper adjustment to him who can read the spot. Its sharpness or lack of sharpness tells the story of crater focus position to him who can read and understand. Better get a handbook and study these things. See adv. at end of department.

As to Presidents.

Sometimes one hardly knows whether to laugh or swear. Recently certain members of a certain large union saw fit to make the party occupying the office of president a present of some trinkets, which was their privilege, provided they let it be clearly understood that the presentation was from his own clique and not from the body. But when the presentation was accompanied by the statement that he, the individual in question, was "the best president the union had ever had," one wonders how the several past presidents of the organization feel, none of them having been removed by the I. A. headquarters for absolute rottenness of administration.

Breco Converter.

W. B. Wilson, Buffalo, New York, asks: "In July 27 issue you mention, in an article titled "A. C. and The Three-wing Shutter," a low-priced converter called the "Breco." Will you please supply an old-timer (fourteen years shooting pictures through the port holes, Old Man) the address of firm making same?

The Breco Converter was to have been marketed by the Breco Converter Company, Toledo, Ohio. The machine was tested, finally, here in New York, by J. H. Hallberg at our request. The report made to us by Mr. Hallberg was that the electrical efficiency was impossibly low. Since that time we have heard not one word from the Breco Company. Whether or no they have tried, or are trying to remedy the fault, we are not advised.

Sabo Lens Makes Good.

Cecil W. Wallis, Hamilton, Ontario, in a recent letter to the editor spoke of having Sabo projection lenses. I wrote asking his opinion of them. He says

"Regarding the Sabo projection lens, we regard the money we spent and the trouble we had getting the lenses to Hamilton, on account of the embargo on lenses, as a most excellent investment. Before getting the Sabo lenses we tried one of the popular makes of projection lenses. It had a B. F. of 6⅝ or 6¾ inches, I have forgotten which. The Sabo had a B. F. of 1 13/16 inches. There was a marked improvement in screen illumination, definition of picture is excellent and there is absolutely no indication of curvature of field. In short, we are well satisfied with the Sabo lenses.

"I am sincerely sorry to hear of your hospital experience and it is my earnest wish that you may pull through, because we could not afford to lose the 'Daddy of us all.'"

Many thanks. I pulled through, but it was a reasonably narrow squeak. I didn't exactly hear the rustle of angels' wings, but one night I think the nurse must have burned an old fashioned match in the room.

Yours is precisely the condition under which the Sabo 3-combination lens would work big improvement. The shortening of the B. F. enables the lens to pick up most, if not all, of the ray, which at 6⅝ inches would be entirely too large to enter the lens. Mr. Sabo himself does not recommend the 3-combination lens when the B. F. of the ordinary lens is short enough so that a lens of reasonable diameter can pick up the entire ray.

Gas Making Outfits.

I have an inquiry from Moncton, New Brunswick, from a man who wants a gas making outfit with which he can make his own gas for projection. The last I knew (quite some while ago) the Oxy-Hydro-Cet gas making outfit, S. A. Bliss, 218 Third avenue, Peoria, Ill., was on the market, as was also the Ozo-Carbi, made by Moore, Hubble & Co., 713 Masonic Temple, Chicago, Ill. Whether these manufacturers are still in business or not I cannot say. The man has tried Model B and finds it too expensive in operation. Who knows the present gas making outfits available? Does C. E. Lindall, P. O. Box 415, Bar Harbor, Maine, still handle or make Guil Pastil? Let's get in touch with the right dope on gas again.

Arc Controller.

W. L. Stern, sales manager for G. A. Metcalfe, San Francisco, sends circular description of arc controller Mr. Metcalfe is selling, with assertion that it is the only arc controller now on the market.

Circular descriptions have no value with this department, except in rare cases in which the article is extremely simple—so much so that its practicability and utility can be judged at a glance. Friend Stern says: "Our claims are quite modest. It is a special device for a special purpose. It is for Powers projectors only."

The thing which interests me is the assertion that only one speed controller remains out of the several which were being actively marketed a year or two ago. If this is true it is news to me, and I would like to have it confirmed. I, of course, knew some of them have suspended or entirely abandoned production, but that all but one is gone—well, it is too bad, if true, for an automatic arc control is an essential requirement of modern projection. It is an apparatus absolutely essential to high grade, efficient projection. Mr. Metcalfe is also marketing a Powers condenser holder, and a speed controller, the same, as I understand it, as figures 111 and 115 of the handbook.

CALGARA WILL HAVE A $200,000 HOUSE

It Will Be Erected by Local Capital and Have Facilities to Seat About Two Thousand Patrons

The largest moving picture theatre in Western Canada will be built this summer at Calgary, Alberta, for the Allen Theatrical Enterprises, according to an announcement by Jule and J. J. Allen. There is already an Allen Theatre in Calgary, but this has been found to be too small. It was built five years ago, and has been doing capacity business for many months.

The site for the new theatre will be in the heart of the downtown section, and the building alone will cost $200,000. The new house will have a seating capacity of 2,000, according to the plans, which have already been drawn. Personal attention is being given to the matter by H. J. Pantages Secures Injunction.

Alexander Pantages has secured an injunction at Vancouver, B. C., to restrain W. S. Ramsay and his associates from using the word "Pantages" in connection with the operation of a moving picture theatre at Vancouver formerly used and occupied by Pantages.

The theatre which has been operated by Ramsay under the name of "Pantages" had been vacated in June, 1917, for a new structure, but the defendant in the action had continued to use the name "Pantages," as he claimed that it was the actual name of the building.

Chief Justice Hunter, in awarding judgment to the plaintiff, ruled that the personal name of the proprietor of a theatrical business could not be used by the man who succeeded to the use of the building unless with the agreement of the previous manager. It was pointed out that the proprietor of a business could not take or control the use of a name such as "Lyceum," "Strand," Garrick," etc., but in this case the defendant was making use of the personal name of a man whose business interests were elsewhere.

The Isis Plays Up Its Pictures.

AUGUSTA, KAN., a 5,000-town in the center of the oil field, is fortunate in the possession of the Isis, as conducted by Charles Barron, who books the best and biggest pictures and takes special pride in presenting them with appropriate musical settings. He is aided in the musical numbers by Signor Cato and Joe Belini, the one a pianist of note and the other a musical genius in the way of the violin. But Mr. Barron himself is no ways behind the others. He, himself, takes the trap drum with ability and gives everything from a cricket to a cannon, topping off the comedies in a manner which always attracts attention. Mrs. Barron is also an important factor in the success of the Isis, as she looks after the box office and, in a large measure, is responsible for the booking.

He was formerly with the Paramount in Iowa, but is not a stranger to Kansas. He states that Kansas picture men are doing better than they have for several years, with every indication of this prosperity continuing. # GOOD FILMS FILL CINCINNATI HOUSES

Several New Theatres Will Soon Be Ready to Share in Queen City's Amusement Prosperity

THAT the programs provided by the local managers have caught the public fancy is attested by the capacity houses that have been the rule at all the theatres. The downtown section has recently been short one of the regular houses, the Colonial having been closed for alterations. The rather unusual accomplishment of making one theatre over into two, each with a seating capacity equal to the original, without taking any additional space, is being done in this case. The work is nearing completion, and the two new houses will be ready for business in the near future.

The Palace Will Soon Open.

There is also the new Palace Theatre, on East Sixth street, soon to be opened, which will materially increase the total seating capacity of the local houses. However, there seems to be plenty of business to take care of these additions and probably a few more.

Walnut Draws Big Houses.

The Walnut, which is the highest-priced theatre in this city, continues to draw capacity houses through the excellence of the bills presented and the quality of the music furnished, the orchestra being by far the finest accompaniment at any of the local houses. This week's feature is Fannie Ward, in "Common Clay," to which is added a Sennett comedy, Pathe News and the pictures of the home-coming of the Cincinnati regiments.

Film that Draws Well.

Charles Ray always has been a favorite in Cincinnati, and the reception given his picture, "The Girl Dodger," at the Strand, shows conclusively that his popularity is not on the wane.

The Gifts has been doing a wonderful business with the Goldwyn pictures, the latest being Tom Moore's "A Man and His Money." The Lloyd comedies have furnished the second part of the bills and have pleased the patrons.

The Family has had two excellent pictures this week on its program, Dustin Farnum, in "A Man in the Open," for the first half of the week, and Vivian Martin, in "You Never Saw Such a Girl," the latter half.

Standard Will Reopen.

The Standard Theatre, which has been closed for several years, will be remodeled and opened in the near future as a picture house. The theatre is at Vine and Canal streets, and should make an excellent addition to Cincinnati's growing list of movie houses.

A committee, consisting of Messrs. Libson, chairman; Levy and Hettesheimer, was appointed to confer with the officials of the local operators' union in regard to the proposed changes in the wage scale. The balance of the meeting was taken up with routine matters.

Runey Gets Rats.

Oranges and rats were the dramatis personae in an interesting film produced under the direction of Clarence Runey, head of the Cincinnati Motion Picture Co., recently. Some 266,112 oranges and an untold number of the rodents took part in the performance. The oranges, worth nearly $4,000, were a shipment from California which was condemned by Dr. Leo B. Forst, chief of the Cincinnati station of the United States Pure Food Department. The oranges were pyramided on the Eighth Street dump and burned with the aid of crude oil and gasoline. The performance of the rats was impromptu, being staged with the assistance of the champion rat catchers and their dogs. The film was shown at some of the downtown theatres and attracted considerable notice.

"Cincinnati's Own" on the Screen.

The Family and the Walnut are running a film of especial interest to Cincinnati audiences, and they have been crowded at every performance. The film is by International and shows the scenes of the arrival in New York of the 147th and 148th Infantry, which are "Cincinnati's Own." The suggestion has been made that these films be preserved in the archives of Cincinnati as historic mementoes of the war, and this will undoubtedly be carried out.

Herman Rohs, of Cynthiana, Ky., will construct a theatre of brick and terra cotta, 50x133 feet, with a seating capacity of 500. C. C. & E. A. Weber, of Cincinnati, are the architects.

Cincinnati M. P. Co. Makes Parade Film.

Clarence Runey, of the Cincinnati Motion Picture Company, had an extensive battery of cameras filming the scenes enacted during the patriotic demonstration in honor of the returning Cincinnati artillery and military police, Friday, April 4. The films will not be displayed until after the second parade next week, when the Cincinnati infantry regiments return. After being shown in the downtown theatres the films will be filed away for historical record. Some very excellent scenes on Government Place were secured, showing the triumphal arch and colonade.

Victory Loan Films to Be Well Distributed.

The committee in charge of the distribution of the films to be displayed in the interest of the forthcoming Victory loan, has been organized with Isaac Libson as chairman, and Harris P. Goldberg, in charge of the exchange, listing the films for production. The pictures will reach every house in Southern Ohio and Kentucky, and will be shown in conjunction with regular programs. These pictures will also be shown on street screens nightly, the picture houses donating the use of extra machines for this purpose.

Usherettes Come and Go.

Superintendent Sheridan, of the Family Theatre, comes forward with the plaint that it is almost impossible to keep his force of usherettes up to the necessary numerical strength. Fine Southern Furniture in Clark Film.

Lovers of interior decoration and furnishings will be delighted with the settings of Marguerite Clark's new Paramount picture, "Come Out of the Kitchen." Director John S. Robertson is known as a stickler for correctness.

Alice Duer Miller's story, the dramatic version of which by A. E. Thomas was put into scenario form by Clara Beranger, is laid in and about a fine old Southern mansion. The living and dining room sets are furnished with the rarest of old mahogany. In the living room is a quaint secretary and a handsome round table. Here, too, is a fine old fireplace with high mantel. In the dining room is a still handsomer fireplace. Here also is a massive sideboard and serving table of the most exquisite design, while on the opposite side of the room is an old-fashioned silver table of mahogany, surmounted by a quaint and rare old liqueur case.

The spacious kitchen has been furnished with the utmost care. From the rag rugs to the pair of call bells dangling high on the wall, there is complete accord in the furnishings. Here is a mammoth brick chimney into which is set a seven-foot wood range.

Audiences were quick in their responses to the lively humor, keen satire and trenchant criticisms on the social, political and other foibles of the day. The weekly release is of 350 feet length and I am of the firm opinion that 'Topics of the Day,' in conjunction with our serials, Pathe News, Pathe Review and the Lloyd comedies, gives us the most perfect short subject program on the screen today."

UPPER MONTCLAIR WANTS TWO HOUSES

And Max Ginsburg Applies for Permission to Erect the New Theatre to Care for Overflow

ABOUT six miles north of Newark, lies the exclusive residential community of Montclair. This town is ruled by a Board of Commissioners. Any improvement or addition to the town must have the sanction of this board. There is but one purveyor of amusement in the town, and that is H. H. Wellenbrink, who dispenses motion pictures at his Montclair Theatre, 636 Bloomfield avenue. Now, it so happens that Montclair is quite a big place, in fact, there is a larger film-loving population than friend Wellenbrink can justly accommodate. So, from time to time, various applicants for a second license to conduct a motion picture theatre in Montclair, have presented their claims to the board, and the board has repeatedly refused each and every application.

Another interested party has made appuication for a theatre license. Max Ginsberg, the applicant this time, purposes erecting a modern motion picture theatre at the corner of Valley road and Lorraine avenue, in the north end of the community. The Upper Montclair Business Men's Association, while not approving or endorsing any individual application, has declared itself in favor of licensing a theatre at the north end. The organization has sent a communication to the Board of Commissioners pointing out the overwhelming sentiment for another theatre. The association has taken a postal card canvass to determine the sentiment of the residents, and this showed 1,128 in favor and 128 against the proposed motion picture house.

East Orange Censor Board Powerless.

Although the city of East Orange in New Jersey is supposed to have a board of censorship to supervise the exhibition of motion pictures, the board has not yet been appointed. Even were it chosen, the board would have no direct power to prohibit the showing of any pictures. The sentiment in favor of such a board is largely imaginative, as the mass of the people and even the East Orange officials, themselves, seem to oppose the idea of censorship. It was, at first, contemplated to have a policewoman judge the character of the films before they were displayed to the general public. But this plan has been dismissed as impracticable. A previous board of censorship gave up the idea when the City Council refused to invest them with any power. In the meantime, the Orange exhibitors are awaiting the outcome with interest of the censorship question.

Reproductions of the production advertisements of all sizes are used in lieu of regular newspaper advertising and the news colums abound in interesting material concerning the picture and its producer.

Four Christie Comedies Under Way.

Among Independent Producers

Conducted by C. S. SEWELL

Tower Company to Reissue "Custer's Last Fight"

THE Tower Film Corporation is preparing to re-issue on the state rights market "Custer's Last Fight," a three reel spectacular feature. Many exhibitors will remember this production as a successful box office attraction, and the Tower organization predicts it will be even more successful in its revival.

This production is said to mark the earliest appearance of some of the most popular screen actors of the present day, and months of research, work and study were put into this picture, which was made when some of the actual witnesses of this memorable fight were still alive.

"Custer's Last Fight" is said to be filled with thrills, action, suspense and pathos, with beautiful scenic surroundings and to be a historical study of this thrilling page of American history with which the public is familiar.

The advertising matter on this feature will consist of attractive posters, two styles of one sheets, three and six sheets, handsome photographs for lobby display, press sheets, newspaper cuts, etc. The Tower Film Corporation announces that this production is of such calibre that it will be possible for state rights buyers who secure the rights, to book it in the leading theatres in their territories.

Doll-Van Secures Rights on "Once to Every Man"

JESSE J. GOLDBERG, General Manager of the Frohman Amusement Corporation, who is now in Los Angeles, announces he has closed with the Doll-Van Film Corporation of Chicago and Indianapolis for the Illinois and Indiana rights of their special six part attraction, "Once To Every Man." Henry Dollman, President of Doll-Van Film Corporation, was in New York a short time ago, but was obliged to leave town without closing his contract, and when Mr. Goldburg called upon him in Chicago the deal was quickly closed.

Contract has also been closed with the Supreme Systems, Inc., of Minneapolis, Minn. This concern is said to have bought "Once To Every Man," without screening, on the telegraphic advice of the Manager of the Majestic Theatre, Detroit. There he had played the picture to capacity houses, and the picture went over big. With these sales, and those previously reported, there remain but two territories in the United States unsold.

Symphony Theatre Repeats First Episode of Serial

DUE to the demand of a large number of his patrons who missed seeing the first episode of "The Carter Case" entitled "The Phosgene Bullet" during its two days showing at the Symphony Theatre, New York, Manager M. Kashin repeated this episode in connection with the second installment shown the next week.

The Symphony is located at Broadway and Ninety-sixth street in the heart of a high class residential district, and this is said to be the first time that a serial has been shown in this house. Those who witnessed the first day's showing were so pleased that it is announced the crowd could not be taken care of on the second day, and requested that the first episode be repeated, which was done.

An extensive bill-board campaign had been inaugurated in New York in connection with this production in which Herbert Rawlinson and Margaret Marsh are the stars, and which was produced under the direction of Harry Grossman. These posters are striking, twenty-four sheets, reminding the many readers of the Craig Kennedy stories of the opportunity to see this scientific detective-hero on the screen, and several theatres are said to have reported an increase in attendance as a result of this campaign.

Large Crowd at Premiere of First S-L Production

VIRTUOUS MEN" was presented for the first time at the Fulton Theatre Sunday evening, April 6. This production, which stars E. K. Lincoln and was directed by Ralph Ince, is the initial S-L Picture feature. The audience which witnessed the premiere of "Virtuous Men" consisted of the leading distributors, exchange men, state rights buyers and representatives of the press. The Fulton Theatre was taxed to its capacity by the crowd which attended the trade showing. A twenty piece orchestra provided the musical seting for the presentation.

Sawyer and Lubin utilized the lobby of the theatre for a display of advertising matter which will accompany "Virtuous Men." The original poster sketches as well as paintings of E. K. Lincoln by Clarence Underwood and R. G. Morgan attracted considerable attention. "The Picture Plus—," an exploitation guide of sixteen pages containing an elaborate campaign for the use of the exhibitor in connection with "Virtuous Men," was favorably commented upon.

Among the guests present at the premiere were the following: James D. Williams, Robert H. Lieber and Harry Schwalbe, of the First National Exhibitors Circuit; Louis J. Selznick, M. H. Lincoln, Ralph Ince, Lucille Lee Stewart, Frank Gerston, and many other figures well known in the theatrical profession and motion picture industry.

Two Gale Henry Comedies Shown at the New York

THE second Gale Henry two-reel comedy "Stung" was shown recently at Loew's New York theatre and roof, and the Bulls Eye Film Corporation distributing the new series of productions made by this popular comedienne reports that it publicated the pleasing impression made by the first release "The Wild Woman" shown the previous week.

In "Stung" Miss Henry plays the role of a motorman-conductor and introduces many original comedy twists in the manner in which she operates an electric car. A particularly effective scene is her rescue of a man lying across the tracks, apparently hit by the car, and the manner in which she backed the car while running alongside.

Miss Henry is said to be assisted by a particularly strong supporting cast.

Latest Frohman Feature Sold for Western Canada

A CONTRACT has been closed between the Frohman Amusement Corporation and Mr. R. E. Scott representing the Amalgamated Film Company, Limited, of Canada, for the rights of "Once To Every Man" for Western Canada. The latter Film Company operates a chain of theatres in Western Canada in addition to their affiliation with the First National Exhibitors Exchange, operating in the same territory.

"Carter Case" First Serial Shown in Many Houses

HARRY GROSSMAN, vice-president and general manager of Oliver Films, Inc., who supervised the production of "The Carter Case," the Craig Kennedy serial, declares the heavy booking of his product vindicates his judgment, arrived at after four years' study of the episode photoplay situation, that a feature production given to material of serial construction, results in an effectual box-office attraction.

Before venturing to give Arthur B. Reeve's and John W. Grey's film version of the former's Craig Kennedy stories a production worthy of few feature presentations, even, in the matter of elaborate settings, and with such players as Herbert Rawlinson, Margaret Marsh, and an excellent supporting cast, Mr. Grossman made a tour of the country to sound out the trade with respect to his project. The encouragement he received clinched his determination, and "The Carter Case" was filmed.

Returning from a recent whirlwind trip through the Middle West Mr. Grossman announced that he is gratified in being able to state that the retrospect exceeds the prospect his previous tour opened before him. "The Carter Case" has been bought by exchangemen and booked by many theatres which heretofore have not handled serials.

More than sixty theatres in Chicago have booked the Craig Kennedy Serial, including the Ascher Bros., and Lubliner & Trinz circuits, over which no serial has yet been shown. The Palace Theatre, one of the largest vaudeville houses in Milwaukee, gave an enthusiastic welcome to the photoplay, and many exhibitors are securing bookings.

Ethel Grey Terry
Who has strong adventuress role in "The Carter Case."

In Toronto rights to the Canadian territory were sold to Regal Films, of which N. Nathanson is president and with branches at Montreal, Winnipeg, St. John, Calgary and Vancouver. On the way back Mr. Grossman closed with Mr. Ralph E. Peckham of Cleveland for the Ohio territory.

"Tempest and Sunshine" Sold for Nineteen States

THE J. Frank Hatch Enterprises have disposed of a large percentage of territory in the United States on the feature production "Tempest and Sunshine," based on Mary J. Holmes novel of the same name. Missouri and Kansas rights have been sold to the First National Film Company of Kansas City and Wisconsin to the Mid-West Distributing Company of Milwaukee.

Ivan Abramson Again Busy

Work on the scenario will be started immediately on Mr. Abramson's return from the Coast.

While in Frisco, Mr. Abramson disposed of the California, Nevada and Arizona rights for "The Echo of Youth" to M & R Feature Film Exchange of that city.

Pioneers "Boomerang" Has an Excellent Cast

THE picturization of the William Hamilton Osborne production, "The Boomerang," which is being released by Pioneer Film Corporation on state right basis, has a cast of prominent players in addition to Henry B. Walthall, the star.

Among the number are Helen Jerome Eddy, Melbourne McDowell, Nina Byron, Gordon Sackville, Richard Morris, Beulah Becker and Maryland Morne. Miss Eddy is well known for her excellent work in several productions, while Miss Byron has appeared as leading woman with William S. Hart. Mr. McDowell, the heavy, is also well known, and in "The Boomerang" is said to have done some of his best work.

This production is in seven reels. The scenario is by Franklyn Hull and is said to closely follow Mr. Osborne's story, which is an arraingnment of the meat packers, and involves the desire of a capitalist to gain control of rival businesses and the love affair of this man's daughter with the son of his bitterest rival. It is said to be intensely dramatic and to have a strong love interest as well. Bertram Bracken directed the production.

S-L Prepares a Press Book Exploiting "Virtuous Men"

THE PICTURE PLUS——" is the name given the exploitation booklet issued by S-L Pictures to accompany their first production, "Virtuous Men." It is in sixteen pages, printed on India tint paper in brown ink. The outside front and back covers picture scenes from "Virtuous Men," drawn by R. K. Morgan. The book itself is eight columns in width and has been prepared so that the exhibitor can quickly find what he wants.

Paragraphs, special advertisements, star cuts and a variety of copy for use in programs, newspapers, magazines, etc., are included. In addition there are stories for the use of the exhibitor before and after the showing designed for use. without revamping. Underwood, Gustav Michelson, and others.

The Oliver "Twist" Causes Buyers to "Ask for More"

OLIVER FILMS, INC., announce that already contracts are being signed for future releases to be made by this company, based on the strength developed by the first production, "The Carter Case" a Craig Kennedy serial starring Herbert Rawlinson and Margaret Marsh.

This is said to be due to the ability possessed by Harry Grossman, vice-president and general manager of the company, to give a special twist at just the right moment to the particular business at hand, and is manifest in this serial which was produced under his personal supervision.

As the result of Oliver "twist" imparted by Mr. Grossman, exhibitors are "asking for more," says an official of the company. The first contract for the forthcoming productions was made by the Export and Import Film Company which is distributing "The Carter Case" through Europe, South America and the Orient, and contracts have also been signed by domestic organizations.

Many Advertising Angles to Latest Tyrad Feature

THE reception accorded 'Your Wife and Mine' at the private showing in New York recently proves that in this feature we have something of worth to state rights buyers and exhibitors," said Jacques Tyrol, of Tyrad Pictures, Inc., 729 Seventh avenue, New York.

"It isn't enough to say that a feature has a good story, an appealing star, a splendid cast, beautiful photography, etc.," continued Mr. Tyrol. "The important thing about a picture that the buyer or exhibitor looks for is its exploitation possibilities, the opportunities it offers for the sort of advertising that attracts dollars to the box office. In 'Your Wife and Mine' we have not only a worthwhile story, cast, photography, etc., but also this greatest of all qualities—the quality of exploitation.

"I am glad to say that buyers who saw the feature agree with us. They have told us our feature presents big opportunities for the live-wire showman.

"Consider the title. Is there not an appeal in it? Doesn't it sound a universal chord? Doesn't it hit home with every married man and woman? We believe so strongly in 'Your Wife and Mine' that we have made it our policy to insist before selling it or booking it that the buyer or exhibitor see it first. We have no pig in a poke to sell; we have a real money-making feature and we'll sell it on its merits or not at all."

Much Interest Displayed in First S-L Production

FOLLOWING the premiere of "Virtuous Men" at the Fulton Theatre on April 6th, Arthur H. Sawyer and Herbert Lubin, sponsors for the production, have been in receipt of many inquiries regarding the marketing of the picture. The presentation on Sunday evening was attended by distributors, state rights buyers, and exhibitors from various parts of the country. This S-L Picture stars E. K. Lincoln and was directed by Ralph Ince. Many big bids are said to have been received from leading distributors, and prominent state rights buyers have wired offers for their respective territories. However, it has not yet been decided what methods of distribution will be taken advantage of. It is said that

Even Virtuous Men Kiss.
At least it's so with E. K. Lincoln in his S-L feature, "Virtuous Men."

"Virtuous Men" may be placed in a Broadway Theatre at an early date for an extensive run prior to its showing throughout the country. If this is done, a similar procedure will be followed in other cities of prominence.

Sawyer & Lubin will issue an announcement next week giving the details as to the method of distribution to be followed in connection with "Virtuous Men."

Sidney Lust Praises "Once to Every Man"

SIDNEY B. LUST, of the Super Film Attractions, Inc., of Washington, D. C., last week addressed the Frohman Amusement Corporation as follows: "I thought you would be interested in knowing how 'Once to Every Man' went over at the first showing in this territory. It played the entire week at the Leader Theatre, Washington, to capacity business, in spite of the fact that we had some very bad weather. It was highly endorsed by every newspaper in Washington, in addition to which we have had many comments from other sources, including theatrical clubs, exhibitors and movie fans. We expect 'Once to Every Man' to create considerable interest. The picture was shown yesterday at the New Theatre, Baltimore, at a benefit for the Wounded and Crippled Boys from Overseas, and made a hit. It is a red blooded American production, and should get wonderful results in any theatre."

Zion Company to Produce Russian and Jewish Films

So much interest has been manifested in the initial Sholon Aleichem production, "Khavah," now being cut and assembled for an early showing, that Zion Films, Inc., are making plans for a series of Jewish and Russian pictures written by some of the biggest writers in the land once controlled by the Czars.

Some of the stories have already been selected and most of them deal with historical events backed by strong dramatic moments.

When "Khavah" is released it will give an insight into the kind of stories Zion Films, Inc., plan to make. No expense is said to have been spared to make this production the equal of any seen on the screen. The Russian village, built expressly for the story, just outside of Leonia, New Jersey, is claimed to be one of the finest yet seen in pictures, true in every detail. It is expected that the church and priest's house, particularly, will win favor from the public.

Alice Hastings is the star of "Khavah" and plays the title role. She is supported by Giacomo Masuroff and Alex Tenanholtz.

Tourneur Directs Film at Bottom of the Ocean

MAURICE TOURNEUR'S newest production, "The White Heather," which will have its premiere at a big New York theatre within a few weeks, is said to present the first motion picture scenes actually directed by a producer at the bottom of the sea. The big punch of "The White Heather" is a fight between the hero and the villian in their deep sea diving suits, which occurs upon the hulk of a sunken yacht while sharks and subsea animal life dart back and forth in front of the camera. The struggle ends when one of the men cuts his own air hose by mistake.

The staging of these scenes was made possible by the invention of the Williamson Brothers.

The director did not handle his players from a deep sea glass "ball" or any other enclosure. He donned a diving suit and, from the ocean floor itself, handled his players by a series of signals. Mr. Tourneur says: "At first the weight of the headpiece and the heavy leaded boots seems terrific, the rest of your body appearing eliminated. You go under the surface of the water with genuine relief, for the pressure relieves the awful weight. Believe me, the bottom of the sea has been tremendously overpraised. I found tin cans, broken bottles and other unromantic refuse. But there we were at the entrance to San Pedro Harbor.

"As an odd fish darted by me, I seized it with my bare hand but it stung me. I left the rest of the deep sea fish strictly alone.

"Believe me, walking at the bottom of the sea is harder than climbing the Weehawken hills. When I came to the surface and had my headpiece unscrewed, the perspiration was pouring down my face. Let me say right here that if there's any thing harder than directing, it's deep sea diving. The hardest thing about diving is going down the second time. That makes will power plus. My next picture isn't going to be a deep sea one!"

The releasing arrangements are being made by Hiller and Wilk, Inc.

Castles that Shadows Built

IDEAS have been powerful enough to build empires and found religions.

The idea of better motion pictures as expressed by Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in Paramount and Artcraft has consolidated and energized a world-industry.

Some of the more magnificent fruits of this idea are these super-theatres of stone, steel, stucco and marble, dotted all over the land.

They were made possible solely by those shadows that come and go on the screen and with which you find yourself in such rapt sympathy that the very beat of your heart is speeded or slowed from moment to moment.

Paramount and Artcraft Pictures are popular wherever human beings allow themselves a little play-time.

Statistics establish the fact that they are the greatest source of entertainment and social harmony ever known in the history of civilization.

It is Paramount and Artcraft that have made possible the Castles of Make-Believe—smoothed the pathway to luxurious presentation generally.

In the little old movie show of years gone by you caught colds, eye-strain and stiffness.

In the modern motion picture theatre you sit in the lap of luxury and catch the spirit of eternal romance.

BROCKLISS POLICY BASED UPON SENSATIONAL CONCLUSION

"Stars and Programs Are Through," Contend Firm's Two Principal Figures in Pointing Out That for the Future They Are Tying to Big Stories—Strong English Competition Likely.

The trips of J. Frank Brockliss, back and forth between London and New York, coupled with the fact that the capitalization of the well-known film distributing company of the same name has quietly increased tenfold — without the slighest change in its officership—are clear indications that this firm does not intend to lag behind in the markets of the world during the approaching period of reconstruction.

Sidney Garrett, president of J. Frank Brockliss, Inc., of New York, was rather reticent when interviewed by a representative of the Moving Picture World. He would neither deny nor confirm some of the rumors circulating in export circles about the future activities of the company in new fields, merely stating that "on certain matters, this was the time to act, not to talk."

Thinks Stars and Programs Through.

"I may state, however," said Mr. Garrett, "that this firm has thrown its lot with the independent producers. We will buy and distribute throughout the world, including the United States and Canada, any production of real merit, wherever it may happen to be made. We do not believe in stars and much less in programs—their times are past and will not return. The sooner the American producers get this into their minds, the better it will be for all concerned.

"We are exporting at present from this country about 60 per cent. of the pictures made, but I would wager that this percentage will drop to 30 by about the end of the year. Pictures of real merit will find abroad even a readier market than in the past two years, the usefulness of the ordinary program picture is practically past and the power of attraction of the stars is also rapidly dwindling.

"Our purchases in the past six months are proof that we have the courage of our convictions. We have already secured the world rights of forty new features for 1919, including the Great Authors Series. We have just signed a contract covering all the pictures to be produced from the works of Jack London by C. E. Shurtleff, Inc., the first of which, 'The Star Rover,' will be shortly released."

At this point Mr. Brockliss entered the room and made some interesting remarks on the European activities of the firm.

"We have today a closely-knit organization, covering all the world markets, with branches or agencies in the most strategical film centers. Having recognized the fact that 1919 marks the beginning of the era of great independent productions, and that the story is rapidly dethroning the star, we have gone ahead and obtained the rights on pictures of this nature. And it should be borne in mind, because it really has decisive importance, that the works included in the Great Authors Series, are being reproduced on the screen exactly as the authors themselves intended that they should be reproduced.

English Market Unusually Active.

"The English market was never more active than at present. The London houses are producing, exporting, and importing in greater quantities than ever. Great Britian has made up its mind to become one of the greatest film producing nations, and is well on the road to achieve this purpose. Closer intercourse with the Dominions, which seems to be desired on both sides, has given impetus to the British film producing movement.

"The international outlook for the moving picture business presents no clouds for those exporters that have prepared themselves to meet the new conditions that will have to be confronted as soon as peace is signed and the war barriers to unhampered trade eliminated."

Mr. Brockliss, head of the London firm bearing the same name, leaves New York for Liverpool on the 19th, sailing on the "Lapland." Sidney Garrett, president of the New York Company, will also sail for Europe about the middle of June. Mr. Brockliss remained in this country over two months and during his stay, took several trips to Chicago and the Pacific Coast.

Mr. Garrett has just returned to his desk at 729 Seventh avenue, New York, after having "loafed" for three or four weeks on the South Atlantic Coast. He had been suffering from ill health all winter and was compelled to take a rest, but now expresses the belief that finally, after many months of effort, he has got back to normal and will be able to fight off the doctors for another twenty-five years, as he was able to do until pneumonia and Spanish influenza—encountered separately "—knocked him galley west."

ROBERTSON-COLE JOINS WITH JURY

Announcement Marks One of the Biggest Export Deals Yet Closed

WILL INTERCHANGE PRODUCT

American Concern Will Distribute Here Special Productions Now in the Making on Other Side of Atlantic—Jury Gets "The White Heather."

The announcement which came from the offices of the Robertson-Cole Company a few days ago to the effect that a close working agreement had been entered into between the big American film exporting house and Jury's Imperial Pictures, Ltd., of London, chronicles one of the real big developments of the past month in international export and import circles.

The Robertson-Cole Company has been operating on an unusually large scale, ever since it entered the American export field and the arrangement which it has made with the Jury interests in the United Kingdom, is said to be only the culmination of only the first of a number of important deals upon which it has been working for some time.

Under the arrangement made, Jury's, of London, headed by Sir William Jury, a knight of the British realm, practically becomes exclusive sales agent for Robertson-Cole in the United Kingdom and sole representative in the United States. The big British house immediately takes over the rights for the United Kingdom, on all the Robertson-Cole product except the pictures starring Sessue Hayakawa and J. Warren Kerrigan and Martin Johnson's "Cannibals of the South Sea," pictures which had been disposed of for that territory prior to the time the big contract was signed.

Through the Jury deal, it also has been announced, Robertson-Cole will secure a number of special productions already being made or about to be made on the other side of the Atlantic, in which the big British agency has important interests.

Gets British Rights for "The White Heather"

Within less than a week after the contract was closed by which the Robertson-Cole Company, became the American representatives of Jury's Imperial Pictures, Ltd., of London, the American firm announces the consummation of a deal in behalf of the leading film distributors of the British Isles. By this deal, Jury's acquires the British rights to "The White Heather," the famous Drury Lane melodrama and the first picture produced by Maurice Tourneur since he directed "Sporting Life." The sum paid for the "White Heather" is said to be one of the largest ever expended for the British rights to any motion picture.

In its plot, "The White Heather" is a successful combination of melodrama and heart interest. While it thrills the spectator with smashing big situations and sensational scenes, it also touches the sentimental side of life as well as the humorous, and many are the heart throbs and tears which mingle with its thrills. It was directed by Maurice Tourneur, who has long since established himself as one of the most forceful as well as one of the most artistic directors in the world.

For this production, Mr. Tourneur assembled a cast of competent players. Ralph Graves, who has been seen in "Sporting Life" and other Tourneur productions, will be seen as Alec McClintlock; while Mabel Ballin plays the part of Marian Hume. Baby Ben Alexander, a leading child actor, well remembered for his work in "Hearts of the World" and "The Turn in the Road," plays Donald Cameron; while H. G. Herbert is seen as Lord Angus Cameron.

SWEDISH BIOGRAPH CO. PLANS BIG CINEMA CITY

George D. Hopper, United States Consul at Stockholm, reports that plans are being made for the erection and equipment of a large moving-picture city, corresponding to those in California, in the vicinity of Rasunda, outside of Stockholm. The Swedish Biograph Co. (Ltd.) has bought a site of about ten acres that is suitable for taking pictures; there is a large fir forest with a rocky area and also a lake. It is expected that acting will begin in 1920.

In order to meet the heavy expenses connected with this project, the company has increased its capital from 2,500,000 to 10,000,000 crowns ($670,000 to $2,680,000 at normal exchange). It is the intention of the promotors to specialize in Swedish literary films, or dramatizations of Swedish books. The production will be about 3,000,000 meters of film per year.

INTER-OCEAN HAS BUSIEST WEEK

More Contracts Closed Than During Any Similar Period in Firm's Life

TECHNICAL EXPERT ADDED

Edwin Hayden Hibben Placed in Charge of Film and Title Department of Big Organization—New Projection Room Now Open.

Peace is reflecting itself on the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation, 218 West Forty-second street, New York, who have just had the busiest week, in point of contracts closed, in the company's existence.

Gus S. Schlesinger placed the output of World Pictures in South Africa, Dutch East Indies, and Strait Settlements. The Graphic feature, "Echo of Youth" was sold for Argentine, Paraguay and Uruguay. This feature together with "When Men Betray" and "Ashes of Love," additional Graphic productions, was placed by Mr. Schlesinger for Brazil. The special feature, "Trilby" was placed in Belgium and the Belgian colonies. On the comedy side, Black Diamonds, Vims and the "Charlie" Cartoons, were negotiated for Argentine, Paraguay and Uruguay.

Ricardo Castro, of the Inter-Ocean sales department, negotiated the Florence Reed feature, "Wives of Men" for Brazil, Spain and Portugal. He also placed the Selexart subject, "Blue Blood," and some comedies in Spain and Portugal. The three Graphic features "Echo of Youth," "Ashes of Love," and "When Men Betray," were placed in Chile, Peru, Bolivia, and Ecquador. The special feature, "The Transgressor," made by the producers of "The Victim," was also sold by him in the last named territories.

Accessories Manager Eugene H. Kaufman has just returned from a trip to San Francisco, where he closed several contracts for Speer carbons, the particulars of which will be ready for publication soon.

Louis Brock also returned this week, from a successful tour of Central America and Cuba.

President Cromelin, announces the acquisition of Edwin Hayden Hibben, as technical director, in charge of the film and title department of that organization. Mr. Hibben comes from the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company in Chicago, where he spent three years as a technical specialist. Mr. Cromelin also announces that the new projection room at Inter-Ocean Building is now running regularly and that I. Penzer and D. B. Shepard have been placed in charge of showings to foreign buyers. It is believed to be the largest projection room in New York devoted exclusively to showing for field export.

IS COMMUTING ACROSS ATLANTIC

Ben Blumenthal, of Export and Import Film Company, Inc., Making Hasty Trips

NOW VISITING COPENHAGEN

Firm's Future Activities Has Other Exporters Guessing—New Animal Serial, Almost Ready, Will Follow "The Carter Case."

Ben Blumenthal, head of the Export and Import Film Company, Inc., left New York a few days ago on his second "commutations" trip across the Atlantic since the embargo on overseas visiting, placed as a result of the world war, was lifted. Mr. Blumenthal had been in England and found it necessary to return to his offices in New York to take care of some pressing business which had developed during his absence and as a result of his negotiations abroad. He hurried westward, but had not been in New York more than a week when he sailed again for the other side with Copenhagen as his destination. Just how long he will remain in Europe on this last trip has not been announced at his offices in the Godfrey Building.

The Export and Import Film Company is the one concern which its fellow exporters in the United States are watching with more than passing interest. It has been purchasing foreign rights on American-made pictures in wholesale lots for a long time and just what it intends to do with them, now that a return to prewar conditions is at hand is an interesting problems.

The company's most recent sales campaign was conducted in behalf of the Craig Kennedy serial, called "The Carter Case," which was successfully placed throughout the foreign markets, in most instances going to the purchasers of the Houdini serial which the same company had sold at top prices, just a month or two before. A third serial of the same high class, according to advanced announcements, is about to be placed in its hands for foreign distribution.

The spectacular success of Nazimova in the new series of pictures which she is making for the Metro Pictures Corporation, has also been "water on the Export company's wheel," inasmuch as it controls these pictures, as well as all other Metro product, for European territory. Each Nazimova release has added to the long list of buyers who have expressed themselves as anxious to take every single one of the well known star's productions and "The Red Lantern," starring Nazimova in a production which is said to excel anything which has yet been attempted on the screen, has already been sold for practically the entire foreign territory.

CALCUTTA EXHIBITOR GIVES VICTORY TREAT

J. F. Madan, who operates a string of moving picture theatres in India, some of them in Calcutta, celebrated the signing of the armistice and the cessation of the war in Europe some time ago in a noval manner. Mr. Madan announced a "Victory Treat" for the children in Calcutta, choosing a Friday and the immediately following Saturday for the gala days.

It is estimated that about 8,000 children were entertained free. Not only were the entertainers absolutely free, according to previous arrangements made with the different schools, but also bon-bons, flags, etc., were distributed to the children at each show, and the little ones thoroughly enjoyed themselves. The children of the different schools were entertained by the Elphinstone Bioscope at the Elphinstone Picture Palace, Albion Theatre, Cornwallis Theatre and Ripon Theatre, all controlled by Mr. Madan.

Conducted by

F. G. Ortega and Randall M. White

A special department of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD devoted to the exploitation of moving pictures wherever the English language is used in trade.

A part of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD once a month in the issue of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD published the Saturday nearest the first of the month and bearing date of the Saturday nearest the fifteenth.

The next INTERNATIONAL SECTION will appear in the issue of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD dated SATURDAY, MAY 17, 1919.

Advertising forms close, Tuesday MAY 6, 1919.

Three new moving picture companies have been organized in France since the armistice was signed. They are already producing.

A new moving picture trade paper has been launched in Zurich, Switzerland. We have read the prospectus, which is rather mysterious and resembles one of those articles by Maximillian Harden. It aims—it seems—to act as intermediary between the Central Empire markets and those of the Entente.

A trust, or, more properly speaking, an exporting cartel has been formed by the most prominent Italian producing firms. The combination is backed by powerful Italian banks.

Four English companies recently landed in Italy on a producing tour.

The wanderlust has taken hold of many American directors. A New York exporter remarked to the writer a few days ago that four of them had called at his office for information as to the possibilities of organizing producing companies on the other side of the Atlantic.

There seems to be a sort of agreement among English authors not to sell the moving picture rights on their works to other than English producing companies.

The nationalistic spirit is not as rampant in Europe as it appears on the surface. We thought it was when reading advertisements such as these: "A film with a French story, French artists, French director," or "This picture was produced in England, with English actors and by an English company." But we have observed the same pictures advertised for export and they are supposed to possess "great international appeal," etc. And so it goes. It depends on the bird you wish to catch.

Can Film Characters Be Internationally "Standardized"

"The best study of mankind is man," said Pope, unconsciously synthetizing in a short, concrete maxim the egotistical trend of modern philosophy. The ancients may have dabbled in complex speculations as to the spiritual life of animals, plants, stones, building up hundreds of myths and attempting to pry into the ethereal existence of gods and demigods, but we have no time to bother with those things today. This is a practical age; a mechanical and materialistic age. Nothing matters except ourselves.

Carrying Pope's premise to its logical conclusion it may be safely taken for granted that there is nothing more pleasant to an American moving picture man than to read or hear the American moving picture industry discussed—unless the object of discussion happens to be his own personality within the industry.

And now at last we are coming to the point.

Have the producers in this country read the series of articles written by Henri Diamant-Berger, and published in "Le Film," of Paris, on American stars, directors, technical methods and public tastes?

They are intended to guide French manufacturers in their approaching producing revival, and the success of American films at home and abroad during the past four years, as well as the factors responsible for their world-wide popularity, are taken as the basis for future calculations and for the plans that should be adopted at present in France.

Among other interesting observations made by Mr. Diamant-Berger and passed to his readers as elements of importance, he mentions the fact that whiskers are disagreeable to Americans; that moustaches are only worn, as a rule, by confirmed villains; that vampires are always of a dark complexion and addicted to the habit of exposing as much of their anatomy as will get by the different censorship boards; that ingenues are small, blonde, curly-haired. He does not say so outright, but he certainly insinuates that French producers would gain by adopting these types.

But would they?

This problem of hair, complexion and type is a very complicated one. The Latin Americans, for instance, have just raised a hullaballoo because a prominent New York producer dared to present a clean-shaven St. John the Baptist on the screen. And, if we remember rightly, were they not French girls, those who remarked when the first contingent of American troops was passing through Paris, what a pitiful thing it was that such nice boys should have no hair on their faces?

Then we have our English friends, who have not yet been able to overcome their disgust at the democratic way in which we insist on handling "English" scenes, particularly those that have to do with hunting, where our directors generally manage to break every possible tradition.

And the question of smoking! How can the Latins respect a "villain" that handles a cigarette like a schoolgirl on a lark, and, despite his criminal career, is afraid to inhale the smoke as a man should?

No, the French will not get anywhere by trying to imitate our film types, and they would run the risk of producing hybrids that would please neither at home nor abroad. The memory of the "western pictures" made in France and Italy is still fresh in every film man's mind. This method will never reintroduce the French brand of pictures in this country, and if adopted is bound to end in failure.

There is not, and never will be, a standard of international film characters. The popularity of American films in foreign countries was gained and has been maintained in spite of our nationalistic conceptions in this respect. If the United States, a nation of yesterday, that had pracically no theatre or literature of its own a hundred years ago, and made up of members of every race in the world, could not break certain precedents, how can the French, Italian or English suddenly disregard the traditions and customs of centuries?

They cannot and should not attempt it.

The experiment has been tried here, and the results have been unsatisfactory in every case.

Our success in this field at home and abroad has been won on superior technique, better acting—and Mr. Diamant-Berger is right; we do not mean gesticulating and posing—cleaner and more naturally developed themes, a profusion of male and female players of great physical attraction and a system of advertising and publicity of wonderful effect.

Our French friends can study all these factors, adopt and, if possible, improve them.

—But sticking to their types and, above all, to the elements of the drama, which have not changed from the time of Aeschylus.

representative and met Mr. Schlesinger while doing business with Inter-Ocean, of which firm Mr. Hyams has long been a customer. Mr. Hyams returns to the Far East shortly.

The permanent address of the newly appointed American buying representative will be announced in the near future, as soon as suitable office space is secured.

Leon Schlesinger has been with the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation for the past three years, both in the foreign and domestic departments. He is considered to have an expert knowledge of the international market. The best wishes of President Cromelin and the Inter-Ocean go with him in his new berth.

ROBERTSON-COLE CO. GETS BELL & HOWELL LINE.

Of special interest to all European producers who are contemplating increased activities or betterment of their working facilities is the fact that Bell and Howell cinemachinery, through a big deal recently closed, is now handled by the Robertson-Cole Company, in every country outside of the United States and Canada.

It is understood that the demand for laboratory equipment is now very great in Europe, where virtually every manufacturing plant was commandeered for war work. Bell & Howell cinemachinery is a standard product embracing every phase of the mechanical part of film developing and printing. The Bell & Howell camera, with its many automatic devices, is generally recognized as perhaps the most practical of all motion picture cameras.

The Bell & Howell perforating machine has practically standardized film perforation in America. This machine is said to be in especially heavy demand. Other articles of Bell & Howell cinemachinery include continuous feed film printers, stop feed film printers, and splicing machines.

The first big transaction in Bell & Howell product sold for export, to be recorded is the deal made through Robertson-Cole, whereby Jury's Pictures, Ltd., of London acquire the entire equipment for a tremendous new laboratory from Bell & Howell.

B. P. SCHULBERG ANNOUNCEMENT MAKES STIR IN EXPORT CIRCLES

His Recent Connection with "Big Four" Whose Overseas Plan Is Still Unannounced Starts Tongues a-Wagging—Is Banking on Independent Productions.

Right out of the blue sky, insofar as the New York export colony is concerned, B. P. Schulberg, for years prominently identified with the Famous Players-Lasky Corp. and just a few weeks ago, comfortably established as assistant to Hiram Abrams, general manager of the newly organized "Big Four's" distributing organization, has "busted" into the export field. With every person happy, including Mr. Abrams, who has made a statement to that effect and is proving it every day by his helpful co-operation in his former assistant's plans, Mr. Schulberg has shied his castor into the ring with every indication that his activities will soon be making themselves felt wherever moving pictures are being sold, whether it be in Siberia or South Africa. All that has happened to date is that Mr. Schulberg has paid out his money in trade paper advertising to tell the world that he is prepared by buy at highest cash prices, any production, no matter how large, which may be found available for distribution in the foreign markets. He has said that he has "unlimited financial backing," and, while the source of the bankroll has not been disclosed, no person professedly "in the know" doubts that it is there.

In view of Mr. Schulberg's very recent connection with the affairs of the "Big Four," controlling the future pictures of Douglas Fairbanks, Charlie Chaplin, Mary Pickford and David Wark Griffith, and of the interest which American exporters generally have been showing in just who is going to get the juicy plum which these pictures will represent in the export market, the announcement of the new venture of the former assistant manager of the "Big Four" has excited no little comment. The possible relation between Mr. Schulberg's new business and the distribution of the "Big Four's" product abroad is being discussed.

"How many independent productions of real merit do you think will be produced in this country during 1919?," asked, point blank, Mr. Schulberg of the representative of the Moving Picture World.

This was getting into deep water, indeed! Our man wanted to ask, not to answer, questions. Besides he hadn't the slightest idea on the subject.

"How many do you think?" we shot back.

"At least fifty, and perhaps considerable more than that. The program may be doomed and it may not—everybody is entitled to his opinion and I have mine—but the fact remains that the great attraction, the really extraordinary picture, is an absolute necessity today in the motion picture business. A few years back a small investment would start anybody in business as an exhibitor, films were always a novelty no matter how poorly made, and the large theatres relying on them for their patronage, were an insignificant factor in the industry. Today conditions are changed. The large, centrally located, expensively run motion picture show, representing an investment of many thousand dollars, is a powerful element, perhaps the most powerful one, in the business. And these houses simply cannot afford to show mediocre photoplays. They cannot tie themselves to any particular program, however excellent it might be on an average. The risk is too great. A couple of weeks of poor attendance may affect the whole year's profits.

"Well, it is these photoplays, these extraordinary productions," continued Mr. Schulberg, "the kind of material that our firm will handle, not only in foreign markets, but right here in the United States. Features of undoubted value will soon be produced abroad, and those we aim to present before the American public. We have already established connections in Europe and expect to be trading in full blast within two or three months.

"I do not wish to go into details regarding our financial resources, but can confidently state that we are in a position to take care of every possible eventuality. We cannot imagine of any import or export deal too big for us to handle.

"A statement will shortly be forthcoming as to our distributing plans in foreign countries."

CINEMA CLUB-EXCHANGE FOR YORKSHIRE, ENGLAND.

News of the formation of a combination motion picture exchange and club in Leeds, England, is furnished in an official report from United States Consul Percival Garrett at Leeds, quoted below.

Members of the cinematograph trade in Yorkshire now have a trade headquarters of their own in Leeds. The Savoy Theatre has been acquired, structurally altered, and opened as the Yorkshire Cinema Exchange and Club.

The growth of the cinematograph business in Leeds, as elsewhere, during the last few years has been very great, and especially so in the renting side of the trade. The renters are really the middlemen, though occasionally they are also producers, and rent exclusive films under contract to the exhibitors. The number of such in Leeds has been multiplied ten or twelve times during the last five years, and the city today is one of the most important centers of filmdom in England. In view of this rapid development the need of some suitable headquarters has long been felt, both for the transaction of business and for the purposes of recreation—a sort of home for members of the trade throughout the county.

The new exchange and club, which is the third of its kind in England, is being liberally supported, and when it recently opened its doors for the use of the trade over 300 exhibitors and renters had taken up the necessary number of shares in the undertaking. The principal feature of the exchange is the theatre, which is now used only for the screening of exclusive pictures to the trade prior to their release for public exhibition.

BANJO PATERSON STORIES CHOSEN BY BAKER

A selection of the chief incidents of the best known of Banjo Paterson's stories and verse, presented under the general title of "The Man from Snowy River," has been chosen by Reg. L. (Snowy) Baker as the subject of his next Australian screen production. A start has already been made with the picture on a sheep station up-country, where every facility is offered for the filming of such thrills as the great ride from "Rio Grande," the bushranging scenes from "Conroy's Gap," and the fight from "Saltbush Bill." Beaumont Smith has written the scenario with the double purpose of appealing to Australian purposes and getting a good release on the American market. Mr. Baker's recent trip to America gave him intimate knowledge of the methods of the big directors there. These are to be applied to "The Man from Snowy River."

Will the Chaplin Influence Kill Bull Fighting?

Foremost Spanish Writers Fear Funny Antics of Imitator of Noted American Moving Picture Comedian May Wreck Their National Sport.

Queer Trend of Events May Transform Celebrated Amusement Character Into a Power Potent Where Nation's Laws Have Failed.

A man in Brazil writes a long letter to find out whether the vaudeville actor posing as Chaplin in one of the Sao Paulo theatres is really our own Charlie or some impersonator.

As far as we know, there are successful stage "Chaplins" today in France, Italy, Spain, Argentine and now in Brazil. Judging by the news from abroad, the impersonation of the American comedian is getting as common as some of the patriotic catch-phrases used at the present time in this and other belligerent countries when the audience shows a tendency to fall asleep.

This, however, is mere child's play compared to the problem raised by Chaplin in Spain. We all know that bullfighting has been the national amusement of the Peninsula from the time of the Moors, and it is anything but humorous. There is as much difference between the animals bred for fighting in Spain and those of other countries as between a gamecock and a farm rooster. The man who gets into a ring with one of these bulls is risking his life. If he is reckless, the bull is liable to give his interior anatomy a nice, cosy place in the sun in the middle of the ring; if he decides to act on the "Safety First" plan, the authorities will put him in jail for "conduct detrimental to the dignity of the game," or the public may take the law into its own hands and bombard him with empty bottles and all other missiles available.

There is a fellow in Spain whose real name we happen to know, but will not mention, who has organized a regular "quadrilla," and is actually playing to full houses in all the rings of the kingdom under the make-up of Charlie Chaplin.

His assistants—picadores, banderilleros, etc.—dress up as regular bullfighters, but he comes into the ring with the big shoes, funny hat, little moustache and the cane, which is changed for a very business-like sword when the time comes for bidding good-bye to our old friend the bull.

"Charlot"—and this is Chaplin "frenchified"—soon became the idol of the fans, and began to rank with the great stars of the game, whose salaries even a moving picture favorite or champion boxer would look upon with respect. In this connection we might state that a popular "matador" draws anywhere from five to ten thousand pesetas ($1,000 to $2,000) for each performance, and during the season, which lasts about six months in the spring and summer, some of them manage to crowd in as much as three shows a week.

At the beginning, the bullfighting clown was treated with contempt. Soon, however, the public started to fill the rings where he made his appearances, with the result that the sporting and trade papers (of which a number are published in Spain devoted to the art of breeding, handling and killing bulls) called a halt by proclaiming that "Charlot" was undermining the industry, or words to that effect.

And it may be said seriously that, without exaggeration, the man has turned out the biggest menace that bullfighting has encountered in its long career. If his antics are not eliminated in quick order the game will receive its deathblow. This is the opinion of some of the foremost Spanish writers.

In this connection, a very important factor has to be considered. Owing to the complicated and expensive machinery connected with bullfighting, it can only subsist, like horse-racing, by the consent of the governing powers. This is one of its many pecularities, and it really has very little in common with other prominent national sports, such as baseball, boxing, wrestling, cockfighting, etc. A bat and ball is all that is needed for baseball or cricket; a couple of energetic roosters or men and we have boxing, wrestling or cockfighting. For bullfighting large and complicated buildings have to be erected—there are several rings in Spain bigger than any ball park in this country; the one at Valencia is as large as the Coliseum at Rome, having a seating capacity of 70,000—and horses and bulls furnished. The element of chance which furnishes the great appeal in other games is absolutely lacking. There is no gambling connected with bullfighting.

It cannot be abolished by law. That method has been tried, and it failed. It did not root out the game from the hearts of the people.

All thinkers agree that the only effective way to eliminate something tragic, whether it be bullfighting or the French Revolution, is by applying a good dose of ridicule. There must be no monkey-business connected with the last act that all animate beings have to play. If staged with due solemnity, even the daintiest vegetarian will stand for a reasonable number of massacres, but no sane man has the stomach to see a human being or an animal put out of the way in a jocular vein. You cannot laugh at death outside of a lunatic asylum—unless you happen to be hopelessly drunk.

And here we have in synthesis the whole problem raised by "Charlot."

Fighting bulls have been killed from time inmemorial, but this is the first time in history that any one has attempted to murder them in a humorous way. Can the sport stand it?

Or is it written that Chaplin, through an imitator, will have the honor of killing bullfighting in Spain as Cervantes, through his unique satire, put an end to knight-errant literature throughout Europe?

The Crime of Careless Titling

By RAMIREY TORRES

In a recent number of your Spanish edition, Cine-Mundial, appears an article which, by its importance, timeliness and forceful arguments should not escape the attention of manufacturers as well as those interested in the export and exploitation of motion pictures in countries of a foreign language. The article deals with the subject of title translations. And, although its author refers principally to Spanish translations, it nevertheless gives a warning worth considering by all in the film industry.

The author of the article in question points out the great care and effort that American producers exercise in the selection of main titles for their films and in respect to the wording of subtitles. For American picture makers know that the main title must possess drawing power and that many a poor picture has been saved by excellence in subtitles.

Value Lost in Poor Main Title

Foreign exchanges and exhibitors rely upon and make use of the advertising value that lies in a main title. They also demand that the subtitles do justice to the subject. It happens, however, that in many cases the manufacturer or exporter, due perhaps to ignorance of foreign languages, is compelled to rely on the work of translators. In the majority of cases these translators are incompetent for this work, owing to the narrowness of their vocabulary in both English and foreign languages. Thus the manufacturer fails to present his pictures to foreign audiences with the same care with which he presents them at home.

There are some translators who are also good title writers. But unfortunately there are numerous "one-dollar a reel translators" who do not possess the proper educational or language qualifications as title writers. Yet the inefficient translator apparently does the biggest business; for the sole reason that his low rates seem to appeal to those for whom the work is done.

In many instances the "one-dollar a reel translators" know absolutely nothing of the technique and importance of titles in relation to the film. Furthermore, many of the translations of titles are done solely from "title sheets." The translator works thus without seeing the film itself. The result is that translations are made too literally. And in some cases the foreign titles give an entirely different meaning to the situations illustrated on the film.

Many of these translators, as already stated, are not thoroughly conversant with English, and their knowledge even of their native language is so limited

HOWELLS TOURING EUROPE SEES HAVOC OF GREAT WAR

Well-Known American Film Exporter Writes Entertainingly of Conditions in Noted Battle Areas—Surprised at Strength of Picture Business and Marvels at Nerve of People.

Letters just received. from David P Howells, who is in Europe opening offices for the distribution of American moving pictures, tell of present conditions at the battle fronts, which he and Mrs. Howells have just visited. As the guest of an American Colonel, Mr. Howells made the trip by motor from Bar-le-duc through the Argonne Forest, Varennes, Clermont, Montfaucon, Mort Hommes Hill, and Verdun, returning by way of the valley of the Marne, St. Mihiel and Commercy.

"We left our hotel at 6 in the morning without any breakfast, as there was 'pas de lait' and 'pas de fue' which means in perfectly good American that the milkman did not come until after 9 and the fire was not made until after 7.

"Going over fairly good roads for two hours we traveled through French villages (in which American soldiers were billeted and could be seen washing themselves at the village well in ice cold water) until we came to a village which the colonel said was the last chance to get anything to eat. We went to the village grocery store, which was a room with a dirt floor, adjoining the stable, and had ranged around on the window sill and small chairs and table the stock in trade—a few oranges, a few eggs and several long loaves of bread.

"The best thing we could do was to buy eggs, $1.20 a dozen, and take them to another house, where an old lady cooked them for us and served them to us in the living room, also adjoining the stable. After that we began to go through the rear areas of the French lines which were blocked with barbed wire entanglements and trenches. The country leading to the Argonne woods is somewhat hilly, and we could see the fox holes dug by our boys in their advance. Many of the hills were completely cleared of woods and the fertile fields had been turned into nothing more than gravel pits by the bombardment of the heavy artillery.

"In the Argonne we went into some German dug-outs which were fitted up with furniture stol n from the destroyed villages and were very comfortable. One consolation, however, was to see the German prisoners at work repairing the roads they had ruined and clearing away the wreckage, many times under the guard of American darkies, who prefer to do this kind of work than to make roads themselves.

"Practically the entire region was uninhabited and the desolation was apparent when compared with the beautifully kept fields near the villages, which had not been molested. At Montfaucon the wreckage was even greater and travel in the automobile was like riding bronchos. We saw the concrete tower in which the periscope was placed so that little Willie could steal up and have a good look at the siege of Verdun, his hobby, in perfect safety. This desolation continued past Mort Homme Hill and up to Verdun, for it was here that France gave up the lives of a million men and the Germans sacrificed over a million and a half. At Verdun we drove around the fortresses and citadel which is large enough to contain 12,000 men at one time.

"The Marne was overflowing and making marshy fields and gave us a good idea of the hardships our men had gone through in the terrible mud. Everywhere we heard good things spoken of the conduct of our fighters and were assured that they had really done big things. The graves with a small cross, wooden, made of lathe, a trench hat on the head, and sometimes an American flag, testified that they had made the supreme sacrifice.

"Next day we motored from Bar-le-duc to Rheims through unspeakable desolation. On one side of the superb valley were the vineyards of the Champagne district, on the other side trenches like mountain gulleys, shellholes like ponds, acres of barbed wire, woods shot to pieces, and the roads worn to terrible ruts and impassable furrows. For miles we rode behind a camouflaged road screen, made of burlap and faffia, which was originally intended to hide the French movements from the Boche.

"The ruins of Rheims could be seen from a great distance, but their full effect was not felt until we drove, once filled with a happy people, through the silent streets and past the piles of stone that had once been homes. The wonderful cathedral had been considerably damaged, but we succeeded in going inside and found that the main arches and walls were still in good shape, considering the terrific bombardment they had been subjected to.

"What of the moving picture conditions?," asks Mr. Howells in conclusion. "It is a wonder there is anything left in the country. But these people who have said, 'They shall not pass' still have plenty of nerve and ambition and are going about the rebuilding of their country, industries and amusements as rapidly as possible."

CRIME OF BAD TITLING.

that they are not qualified to interpret the meaning of a title, and even less qualified to express the meaning in proper grammatical style.

A Menace to Language Itself

In viewing some of the pictures with foreign titles those who know the language are, as the result of the conditions cited above, offered great oportunities to criticise the subtitles for their grammatical errors, poor construction, etc. In the article in question the author refers to a specific case in which the government of a South American country officially prohibited the exhibition of motion pictures in which the titles were not written in correct Spanish. The attitude of the Government in this case was based on the fact that so many pictures had been exhibited with titles couched in such poor Spanish that it was becoming a menace to the language itself.

Aside from the fact that a governmental movement of this kind might be followed by other Spanish-speaking countries, the matter of larger importance to producers and exporters is the great harm that these poorly-written titles do to their productions. Producers and exporters can protect themselves from this evil simply by employing translators possessing the necessary educational qualifications for such work. Foreign titles, with a few exceptions, should be actually created, rather than translated.

If exporters would give more care and attention to the very important matter of foreign titles, and if they will make the compensation commensurate with the superior work of fully qualified translators, they will be greatly benefited in their business abroad.

DEPARTMENT FIGURES SHOW BIG INCREASE IN FILM EXPORT

Imports in Some Lines Are Greatly Diminishing—Little Unexposed Stock Coming in and Even Less Exposed—Three and One-Half Million Dollars Worth of Photoplays Sent Abroad in Eight Months.

Our foreign trade in motion picture films is rapidly shifting from an import to an export business. Figures gathered by the bureau of foreign and domestic commerce, of the Department of Commerce, show that our imports are decreasing, while our exports, now that the war is over, are expanding.

During February our imports of sensitized, but not exposed film, amounted to but 164,512 linear feet, valued at $2,434, as compared with 1,938,693 feet, worth $35,005, imported during February, 1918; imports of negatives amounted to 45,560 feet, worth $6,582, as compared with 85,499 feet, valued at $30,521; imports of positives increased slightly, from 159,752 feet, worth $7,906, in February, 1918, to 170,978 feet, worth $12,385, in February of this year, but not sufficiently to bring the total for the year anywhere near that of 1918.

Value of Exports Jumps.

On the other hand, exports of exposed film during the month totaled 11,542,388 feet, with a value of $689,903, against 6,577,069 feet, worth $338,020, in February, 1918, and exports of unexposed film amounted to 4,645,725 feet, valued at $177,182, as compared with 1,024,444 feet, with a value of $30,518, during February, 1918.

The bureau is also compiling figures showing the exports for the first eight months of the current fiscal year, from which it will appear that shipments of unexposed film during that period amounted to 56,972,187 feet, with a value of $1,410,135. This is a decided increase over previous years' exports, the total for the corresponding period of the fiscal year 1917, being 18,251,306 feet, valued at $510,715, and for 1918, 21,630,342 feet, with a value of $521,032.

Exports of exposed film during the eight-month period totaled 53,265,047 feet, worth $3,500,234. This is a slight decrease over the shipments of the two preceding years, because of the fact that the lifting of export restrictions has not been effective long enough for the increased exports to offset the reduced shipments necessary during the year. During the first eight months of the fiscal years 1917, exports totaled 79,365,008 feet, with a value of $4,279,074, and during 1918, 54,275,905 feet, valued at $3,650,894.

Imports Show Great Drop.

Imports of all classes of films for the eight-month period show a tremendous drop as compared with those of the corresponding periods of 1917 and 1918. Sensitized, but unexposed film, the imports of which increased from 25,803,379 feet, valued at $404,028, in 1917, to 38,757,169 feet, with a value of $586,762, in 1918, dropped to 17,332,714 feet, worth $264,993.

Our imports of negative film, never a very large item, have dropped even lower than last year, the total this year being 274,228 feet, worth $163,396, as compared with 601,508 feet, worth $151,398, last year, and 717,044 feet, with a value of $382,912, in 1917.

A drop of over a hundred per cent. is recorded in the imports of positive films, the total for the eight-month period being 1,079,358 feet, valued at $71,228, against 2,664,945 feet, with a value of $128,262, in 1918, and 2,386,389 feet, worth $106,467, in 1917.

Sometimes A STAR PULLS.

sometimes it's a story that does the trick, depending largely on the star, on the story, in their suitability to the tastes of the territory for which they are bought.

We know those tastes.

And our success has been in our care TO SUIT THOSE TASTES. There are particular territories for which we advise Kerrigan features, others for which we suggest the Blackwells, ditto the Bessie Barriscales, H. B. Walthalls, Elvidges, Loves, Kitty Gordons and other World or Paralta celebrities.

In some territories we advise the exhibition of Vim Comedies; in others, Black Diamonds; in still others, those Wharton "funnies." With comedy, too, it is a matter of territorial taste.

Specials? Often the three Graphics—"When Men Betray," "Ashes of Love," "Echo of Youth"—are our earnest recommendation, depending on the territory; sometimes we propose "Wives of Men," the Florence Reed special; or "Hearts Across the Sea," the Arnold Daly one; or "The Victim," starring Robert T. ## "Oh, You Women!" May Be Booked by All Exhibitors

"OH, YOU WOMEN!" the John Emerson-Anita Loos Paramount production featuring Ernest Truex and Louise Huff, has been scheduled by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation for release May 4. This production will be booked by itself and avaialble to every exhibitor regardless of whether he runs other Paramount-Artcraft service or not.

The story deals with the problems of what a fellow is going to do when he comes home from the war and finds the women all rigged up as men and a girl in his job.

The moral is that while it is fine for a woman to take a man's place while he is away at war, it is all wrong for her to consider keeping it when he comes home. Also, while it is all very well for women to take their proper place in the world's affairs, let them—for the love of heaven—still remain women and not become freaks. One can depend upon it, however, that Mr. Emerson and Miss Loos have not taken the problem too seriously and have extracted lots of fun from it in settling it in their own way.

In its exploitation of the picture the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has distributed to all exhibitors an attractive four-page folder illustrated with stills from the production and carrying a straight sales talk to the exhibitor. Other folders, attractively printed in colors and illustrated, are being distributed in quantities to exhibitors who order them from the exchanges. These are designed for use as envelope stuffers.

Employs Special Publicity Aids.

A special press book of extra size and also printed in colors is now in course of preparation. This contains more than the usual number of newspaper stories and production cuts, and is further embellished by courtesy of the Tribune Syndicate with a reproduction of the clever and singularly appropriate cartoon by "Ding" recently published in the New York Tribune titled "There's No Telling How Far-reaching the Effects of the World War Are Going to Be."

Gets Good Views of Victory Parade.

So clear and complete were the scenes taken by International Film Service cameramen of the reception given New York's 27th Division upon the occasion of its home coming March 25, that all four leading Broadway theatres, Strand, Rivoli, Rialto and Broadway, displayed the scenes of the parade simultaneously. Over fifty other New York, Brooklyn and Jersey City theatres displayed the parade pictures the same day that the parade occurred. Views of the parade were obtained from the Metropolitan tower, from the reviewing stand, and from automobiles in the line of march. Some exceptional close-ups of Major-General John F. O'Ryan were obtained. These scenes were added to Hearst News No. 13. Universal Current Events contained exclusive pictures of the parade taken from an aeroplane which followed the marchers up Fifth avenue from Fourteenth street through Victory Arch and past the reviewing stand.

Easter Walters

Whose speed helps her in an important part in "The Tiger's Trail," Pathe's serial starring Ruth Roland.

Breaking the Speed Laws Is Sport for Easter Walters

EASTER WALTERS, who plays the part of the housemaid spy in Pathe's new serial, "The Tiger's Trail," starring Ruth Roland, is known in the vicinity of Los Angeles and Glendale, Cal., as a motorcycle speed fiend who has little regard for her own life and none at all for the local laws which limit the speed at which motorcycles are supposed or legalized to travel.

Born in Knoxville, Iowa, Miss Walters began her stage career as a child, playing many child parts, notable among them being "Little Eva" in "Uncle Tom's Cabin." As she grew too big to be wafted to heaven safely on a wire, her parents, also professional people, put her in school in Los Angeles, where she remained until she entered pictures a short time ago. She supported Miss Roland in her previous Pathe serial, "Hands Up!" and is doing excellent work in "The Tiger's Trail."

Pathe News Shows Daring Aerial Stunt.

The Pathe News, in adding to its reputation for unusual achievement in the air, shows in the issue of No. 29 a feat that is characterized as "by far the most daring and dangerous ever shown on the screen." It was made especially for the Pathe News in Texas, and shows an aviator, high in the clouds, walking about the wings of his speeding machine and cooly making repairs.

Defying a windstorm, and flying at 90 miles an hour, the aviator climbs out on the wings to adjust loosened wires, repair the wheels, and climbs over the top of the speeding machine. The "shooting" of these pictures from another plane was attended by pilotage and quick, efficient camera work.

First Great Authors' Film Is Nearing Completion

WORK on Stewart Edward White's novel, "The Westerners," which is to be the first production of Great Authors Pictures, Inc., is rapidly nearing completion.

"The Westerners" is a story of the opening of the Black Hills to civilization. It covers the period of the Custer massacre, and the onward march of civilization that drove the Sioux out of Dakota. In this connection, the Indians who are being used in the cast are real Ogallala Sioux, with the exception of Clark Comstock, who plays the chief, Lone Wolf. Mr. Comstock lived for many years among this tribe, and for this reason, in addition to playing the part of Lone Wolf, acts in a technical and advisory capacity with Director Edward Sloman.

The latter is well qualified to direct this feature. A graduate of the English school of legitimate stage work, his first screen appearance was in "The Love Victorious." By a strange coincidence his director in this picture was Mr. Wilfred Lucas, who in "The Westerners" is playing under the direction of Mr. Sloman, taking the part of Jim Buckley.

Miss Mildred Manning will do the dual role of Prue Welch and her daughter of years afterward, Molly Lafond. The villainous half-breed, "Black Mike" Lafond, will be played by Robert McKim. Roy Stewart will portray the debonnair mining-camp Beau Brummel, "Cheyenne Harry." The baby character of little Molly Welch will be in the hands of four-year-old Mary Jane Irving.

The other characters of the story will be depicted by actors of known and recognized ability, as may best be evidenced by the engagement of Graham Pettie to play the absent-minded professor.

The producers were most fortunate in that Major White's return from France, after active service with California's artillery regiment, "The Grizzlies," occurred in time for him to lend his active interest and asssitance in the adaptation of his story for the screen.

"Great Gamble" Company in Washington.

Joseph A. Golden, director of the Western Photoplays, Inc., has completed the exteriors for which he went to Florida nearly two months ago with the entire company of players who will be seen in "The Great Gamble," a coming release on the Pathe program. The other week the company left for Washington, where they are now and will remain for about a week.

While in Washington Mr. Golden will take many scenes in and around the public buildings which will be incorporated in the serial. Much of the action takes place in the Capitol.

Trailer for New Pathe Serial.

As an aid to exhibitors showing "The Tiger's Trail," Pathe's new serial, in which Ruth Roland is starred and which is released April 20, Pathe Exchange, Inc., has issued a 250-foot trailer for insertion at any point in a house program where it can be brought before the eyes of the greatest number of fans.

Scenes on the trailer were selected with special attention to depicting the atmosphere of mystery and danger which pervade the story.

Fortune Spent in Producing "The Red Lantern"

THE expenditure of a quarter of a million dollars, costumes worth thousands, and the services of 1,200 persons, from director, scenario writers and art designers to an ensemble that embodied a small army in size, represents but a small part of the outlay in money, time and effort given by Richard A. Rowland and Maxwell Karger to the production of "The Red Lantern," in which they present Nazimova.

This Nazimova super-feature, in seven parts, which Mr. Rowland has announced will be released during the present month, is to be distributed exclusively by Metro Pictures Corporation. Its sponsors have launched a nation-wide advertising and publicity campaign to insure exhibitors of "The Red Lantern" the ultimate in box-office returns.

The total cost of producing the picture was, in round figures, $250,000. The time required to make it was three months; eight weeks in actual production and four weeks devoted to research work carried out by June Mathis and Albert Capellani, who made the screen adaptation and scenario in order to insure accuracy in the matter of Chinese life and customs.

To Albert Capellani was assigned by Messrs. Rowland and Karger the exclusive services of Henri Menessier, French artist, to design not only all the art interiors, but costume details, special furnishings and properties, but also personally to "dress" every setting with an eye to color harmonies and contrasts.

Six acres of ground were given over to the Nazimova production. This area included not only the major part of the studios, two big open stages, but virtually all of the inclosed stage, lighted artificially and representing a square footage of 19,500; and the whole of the studio lot not occupied by these stages, the administration offices, the carpenter shop and other buildings of the plant.

Veritably miles of California redwood and ash were used by the carpenters in turning out band-saw reproductions of Chinese gargoyles, dragon heads and other fantastic designs with which they adorn their houses of worship and abode, and in making the lattice work with which they cover their windows. For window panes, yards and yards of glazed linen was used, faithfully reproducing one of the architectural peculiarities of the Orientals.

In the street battle scenes the "extras" numbered close to 1,200 men, women and children, three-quarters of them of Chinese blood, imported to the studios from Los Angeles, San Diego and other parts of California; as remote from the studios in some instances as San Francisco. Three hundred white men, in the uniforms of Allied troops, and armed with carbines, made up the "relief army." In this, following historical verity, American marines took the lead. The Boxer forces were equipped with knives, swords and spears, with a few rifles.

Nazimova has what is in effect a triple personality to interpret in "The Red Lantern." She appears as Mahlee, an Eurasian girl (that is, half white and half Chinese), in which the racial traits of the Oriental and the Anglo-Saxon conflict in moments of elemental passion; and also as Blanche Sackville, an English girl, the natural daughter of the father of Mahlee. As Blanche, Nazimova for the first time on the screen appears as a blonde.

Big Thrills in New Outing-Chester Films.

Something new in the Outing-Chester series will be presented in releases 9 and 10, a startling picture of African natives and big game, being released as "Cameraring Through Africa."

These are the pictorial records of the adventures of Charles Cottar, the big game hunter, who has spent the last twelve years in British East and other parts of Central Africa. The first reel, which climaxes with a sensational lion hunt in which three of the big cats participate, will be regular Outing-Chester Picture No. 9, and the second reel, in which several rhinoceroses charging the camera end the scene, will be release No. 10.

Through the press sheet exhibitors will be aided in making a feature of the two releases.

Paper Aids in Showing "The Red Glove."

Manager Fred Gerling, of the Gordon Theatre, Rochester, N. Y., has secured considerable co-operation from a local newspaper in presenting the first episode of the latest Universal serial, "The Red Glove." The Pictureplay News published two weeks in advance a coupon admitting those presenting it at the Gordon box office to the theatre upon payment of Government war tax. The newspaper paid the theatre for each coupon accepted at the box office. Coupons were made good for admittance the first two days of the showing.

Fred Jackson's Play Is Basis for "Let's Elope"

SALUTARY lessons to young brides who think themselves neglected by their hard-working husbands and who engage in more or less harmless flirtations with other men are embraced in the development of the story of "Let's Elope," Marguerite Clark's new Paramount starring vehicle released April 13.

The story is based upon Fred Jackson's play, "The Naughty Wife." John S. Robertson directed, the scenario being the work of Katherine Reed.

The plot deals with the young wife of an author who believes herself neglected and plans to elope with a romantic but shallow-brained youth. How the husband learns of this and takes a hand in the subsequent proceedings serves to make this one of the funniest comedies in which Miss Clark has been seen in some time.

The interior of a luxurious bungalow living room is one of the most artistic sets used in pictures in many a day, it is declared. A large winding stairway leading to a balcony is hung with skins, rugs and other trophies of the hunt. A large rock fireplace was specially built so that a real fire could be used, and the leaping flames give a realistic touch.

Playing opposite the star is Frank Mills, and Gaston Glass, who saw service in the French Army, has an important role. Others in the support are Helen Green, Blanche Standing, George Stevens and Albert Bushby.

Cecil DeMille Finishes "For Better, For Worse"

CECIL B. DEMILLE has completed "For Better, For Worse," his Artcraft special written by Edgar Selwyn and scenarioized by Jean Macpherson.

The final scenes were taken last week at the Lasky Studio. The picture has been nearly three months in the making, for Mr. DeMille has been more than careful to allow no elements of the picture to be passed over lightly.

As far as setings, gowns and properties go, this is Mr. DeMille's most elaborate effort. The gowns worn by every character, from the heroine, Gloria Swanson, down to the extra girls in the reception scenes, were specially designed and made for those who were to wear them.

An example of the care which Mr. De Mille exercises in the perfection of detail in his productions is said to be afforded in the reception scene. The rooms of the set were filled with real flowers—roses and orange, peach and almond blossoms. The set was a riot of color and odor.

Priscilla Dean Starts on "The Chatterbox."

Priscilla Dean has begun work on a new Universal Special Attraction under the direction of Rollin Sturgeon. The new vehicle bearing the tentative title, "The Chatterbox" was provided by Bayard Veiller. Mr. Veiller is at present at Universal City and is supervising the production of the Dean vehicle. He assisted Waldemar Young in preparing the scenario for the production and is now watching developments of the actual production of the story. Francis McDonald and George McDaniels head Miss Dean's supporting cast. Gertrude Astor, Joseph Swickard and Claire Greenwood also have prominent parts.

Censors Pass "A Midnight Romance."

William H. Leahy, connected with the Anita Stewart Productions, made a visit to Philadelphia last week, where he awaited the decision of the Pennsylvania State Board of Censors, who were passing on the merits of the latest Anita Stewart feature, "A Midnight Romance." With the elimination of two or three subtitles the picture was passed with the Board's O. K.

"What Every Woman Wants" Is Good Film for Stunting

FEW features lend themselves so readily to all sorts of advertising and publicity stunts as does "What Every Woman Wants," the five reeler produced by Jessie D. Hampton, with Grace Darmond in the leading role and released by Exhibitors Mutual.

Everywhere, live exhibitors are putting over stunts in connection with this play that bring them big results. For instance, when the picture was shown recently in a string of Chicago theatres, the publicity director arranged with some of the leading merchants to paste stickers with a big query "What Every Woman Wants" emblazoned thereon, upon every package that left their premises. It was remarkable the results which this type of advertising obtained.

It Atlantic City, the same scheme was worked very effectively. In Dallas, the manager of one of the leading theatres hooked up his advertising with that of a number of merchants who had for sale various articles which might be what every woman wanted.

The entire theme of "What Every Woman Wants" centers about her great love for beautiful clothes. It should not be a difficult matter for any exhibitor showing this production to interest his leading dry goods merchant in advertising in connection with this attraction.

"Beating the Odds" Is Morey's Best.

In "Beating the Odds," Vitagraph's next Harry T. Morey release, that company claims to have the last word in the type of drama best suited to the big star.

The story is adapted from Irving R. Allen's novel, "The Money Maker." The play was directed by Paul Scardon, and the cast includes Betty Blythe, Jean Paige, Eulalie Jensen, Charles Stevenson, George Majeroni, Robert Gaillard, Robert Mowbray and Frank Norcross.

Richmond Theatre Has a Vitagraph Week.

March 31 inaugurated Vitagraph week at the Bluebird Theatre in Richmond, Va. On Monday of that week the Harry T. Morey feature, "The King of Diamonds," was run; on Tuesday and Wednesday the Alice Joyce picture, "The Captain's Captain," was billed, and the end of the week saw Bessie Love in "The Enchanted Barn" on the screen, together with James Aubrey in the Big "V" special comedy, "Soapsuds and Sapheads." In addition the William Duncan serial, "The Man of Might," was on the bill for Saturday.

Pathe's New Serial Heads Program for April 20

PATHE'S PROGRAM for April 20 is notable for the beginning of the new Pathe serial, "The Tiger's Trail," starring Ruth Roland with George Larkin, and "The Sawdust Doll," a five-part feature, starring Baby Marie Osborne.

The first episode of the serial, entitled "The Tiger Worshippers," shows the theme of the story—the theft of a mystic tiger idol from a temple of the tiger worshippers in India; the wealth it brings to its possessor; the efforts of the Hindus to regain their idol, and the fight of the heroine, Belle Boyd, to obtain her rights in the fortune of her guardian.

"The Tiger's Trail" was written by Arthur B. Reeve and Charles A. Logue. The scenario was written by Gilson Willets, the novelist.

The story of "The Sawdust Doll" is by Agnes C. Johnston, scenario writer for Mary Pickford, who realized she had in "The Sawdust Doll" a story that would carry its message into the hearts of all humanity.

There are the simple, quiet periods in it when the onlooker is carried to the brink of tears. There is also a big, tense, dramatic moment that makes the story one of maturer cast and passion—one that holds the onlooker breathless watching the swift development of the action, in which the child is to play such an important part.

"Crack Your Heels," the Rolin comedy, starring Harold Lloyd with Bebe Daniels and "Snub" Pollard, which will be released April 20, is a harvest of hilarity gathered on a farm, with real rustic environment and lots of pretty farmerettes; and a cow plays a prominent part in much of the fun-making.

Pathe News No. 34 is released April 23, and No. 35, April 26.

"Exquisite Thief" Goes Big with Broadway Audiences

PRISCILLA DEAN'S popularity, like that of Dorothy Phillips, has been increasing in leaps and bounds of late, but the great appeal of the former star to the public has never been more clearly demonstrated than in New York, where the Universal star was seen recently at the Broadway Theatre in "The Exquisite Thief."

Miss Dean's Broadway reputation was first really established when "The Wild Cat of Paris" was played at Manager Kashin's theatre the week prior to the opening of the long run of "The Heart of Humanity." This photodrama became the talk of New York, and when "The Wicked Darling" and "The Silk Lined Burglar" were shown capacity business daily resulted.

The "Exquisite Thief" drew such large crowds the opening day that Mr. Kashin was forced to shorten his program and run the feature once more than his schedule called for, in order to handle the crowds. The following days, after every New York critic had lavished praise upon the production and star, overflow crowds were the rule.

Universal has prepared some very attractive advertising on "The Exquisite Thief," and exchangemen and exhibitors who have seen the production at prerelease showings are of the opinion that it will prove one of the distinct successes of the spring. The film will be released late in April.

"A Stitch in Time" Exceeds Expectations.

For many weeks past Gladys Leslie, under the direction of Ralph Ince, has been at work on "A Stitch in Time." The picture was completed a week ago, and is being put in final shape for release.

One of Vitagraph's studio officials stated that the finished production exceeds every expectation of the company. Ralph Ince was especially engaged to direct the production, and a strong supporting cast was employed, which includes Eugene Strong, Agnes Ayres, Julia Swayne Gordon, Earle Schenk, Charles Stevenson, George O'Donnell, Cecil Chichester and Charles Walton.

"A Stitch in Time" is shortly to be screened for exhibitors.

Showman Find Special Aids on "Our Teddy" Valuable

THE McClure special service calls exhibitors' attention to the publicity and advertising possibilities in "Our Teddy" in the fact that six great Americans appear in the same picture. President McKinley is shown bidding farewell to Roosevelt, then assistant secretary of the Navy, as he leaves to join the Rough Riders. General Wood, General Pershing, and Admiral Sims, all "finds" of President Roosevelt, appear on the screen in impressive scenes. John Hays, Roosevelt's famous Secretary of State, is portrayed as the President's chief advisor.

That exhibitors have found the services of the McClure special aids of distinct value to them is proven by the many requests for hundreds of additional copies of the stories which have come to the offices of McClure Productions. "Our Teddy" is peculiarly adapted for exploitation by mailing letters to prominent people in the communities in which the picture is shown, telling them just what the picture has in it for them as shown by the splendid results obtained by J. P. Masters of the Princess Theatre, Bowling Green, Ky., and J. L. Parks, of the Seelye Theatre, Abilene, Kansas, who used this method. The McClure promotion service is prepared to furnish an unlimited number of letters suitable for this purpose, as well as newspaper publicity aids of all kinds.

Next Release for Madlaine Traverse.

An extravagant woman's sacrifice to save her husband's honor forms the underlying theme of "The Love That Dares," the next Madlaine Traverse picture, to be released as a William Fox Excel Picture. This photoplay, it is stated by the Fox Exhibitors' Service Bureau, has especial appeal to women, and is one of the strongest pictures yet enacted by Miss Traverse.

In the capable leading cast the leading man is Thomas Santschi, who plays the part of the husband. Frank Elliot is the heavy, and other memebrs are Mae Gaston, Thomas Guise and George B. Williams. The picture was directed by Harry Millarde, and the scenario was written by Denison Clift.

Exhibitors Hold Talmadge Week.

Indianapolis, Ind., was treated to a "Talmadge" week last week, when the management of the Alhambra Theatre, one of the biggest first-run theatres in that city, divided a full week run between the Talmadge sisters, Norma and Constance. For the first part of the week, Norma Talmadge was seen in her current Select attraction, "The Probation Wife," while for the last three days, Constance Talmadge was seen in "Experimental Marriage." The Alhambra Theatre is under the management of Barton & Olson, who used a quarter of a page in the Indianapolis Sunday Star to advertise the event. Norma was advertised as high priestess of the pantomimic art of dramatic expression.

There are many ways in which The World's Classified advertising serves theatre managers and other individuals in the moving picture industry. The service is prompt and the appeal effective.

Louis Bennison Films Goes Big in the West

JUDGING from the glowing reports received by Goldwyn, distributor of Louis Bennison pictures, from every section of the country, "Sandy Burke of the U-Bar-U" eclipsed the record for attendance and popularity achieved by the genial cowboy star's first Betzwood production, "Oh, Johnny!" All of which goes to prove that Louis Bennison is an established motion picture star. To his originality and his efforts to keep his pictures free from exaggerations is undoubtedly due his great popularity. A cow-puncher himself in his youth, Louis Bennison always aims to portray the characters he knew in his ranch days and not the types usually seen in so-called Western productions.

"Speedy Meade" Is Coming.

The West, where, strange to say, Western stories on the screen are more popular than any other, has acclaimed Louis Bennison's "Oh, Johnny!" and "Sandy Burke of the U-Bar-U." His own characterizations and the types he chose for his associates are so true to life that Western picture devotees and newspaper reviewers hail him as a true son of the West.

His newest Betzwood production, "Speedy Meade," bids fair to surpass in popularity his previous remarkable achievements. The new Bennison picture is replete with the wild and woolly situations in which the smiling star delights to revel.

Second Hale-Caprice Film in Course of Production

WORK has been started at the Capellani studio in Fort Lee, N. J., on the second of the Creighton Hale-June Caprice series of superfeatures being produced by the Albert Capellani Productions, Inc., for release through the Pathe Exchange, Inc. "Oh, Boy," the first of the series, has just been completed under the personal direction of Albert Capellani. In line with the previously announced arrangements whereby Mr. Capellani and George Archainbaud will alternate in the direction of the Caprice-Hale and Dolores Cassinelli Productions, Mr. Archainbaud, long identified with the World program, will direct the feature just started.

The picture is adapted from a well-known French stage success, the name of which is being withheld for the present. Comedy is the predominant note in the new production, although there are numerous defractions of dramatic incidents, which culminate in a highly interesting climax. The story affords Mr. Hale and Miss Caprice ample scope for the display of their inimitable comedy talents, as well as providing opportunity for registering a number of interesting dramatic scenes. A strong cast has been engaged to support the co-stars, the most prominent members of which are Alfred Hickman, Charles Coleman and Katherine Johnson.

"Brass Buttons" Featured in New York.

William Russell's picture of New York and the West, "Brass Buttons," is winning big runs in Class A houses from coast to coast. The week of April 6 sees this American production at the Rivoli, in New York, where it will have a special presentation. The following week it is booked for Maurice A. Kashin's Symphony, at 95th and Broadway, New York's leading uptown theatre.

Canadians Like "From Headquarters."

Vitagraph's Anita Stewart production, "From Headquarters," is making quite as much of a sensation in Canada as it is on this side of the border.

The Strand Theatre, the Moulin Rouge and the Regent, in Montreal, are playing it, and last week Vitagraph reported the sale of the film to Western Canadian circuits.

Select Picture Converts Aged Minister and Wife

MRS. H. J. WHITSITT, manager of the Majestic Theatre, in Paragould, Ark., reported recently to J. C. Ragland, branch manager for Select Pictures Corporation, at St. Louis, Mo., the conversion of a couple of seventy-year oldsters into movie fans. The Rev. J. K. P. McKelvey and his wife, aged seventy-four and seventy-one respectively, had never seen a motion picture of any kind until Constance Talmadge, the Select star, came to the Majestic Theatre, in "A Pair of Silk Stockings."

The Rev. McKelvey and his wife had heard of the charming stories Constance Talmadge is making for Select and of her unique characterizations—their invariable youthfulness, the piquant comedy, and their lovableness. And so when "A Pair of Silk Stockings" came to Paragould, this aged and conservative couple decided that here was their opportunity to see Miss Talmadge. Accordingly they visited the Majestic during the run of this Select picture, and have become enthusiastic Constance Talmadge fans, determined to see every one of her productions.

Big Billboard Campaign for "The Third Degree"

VITAGRAPH has perfected its plans for a national billboard campaign in behalf of its coming Alice Joyce production, "The Third Degree." A splendid 24-sheet has been prepared, carrying a big portrait of Alice Joyce and one of the big scenes of the play, and this will be conspicuous on the boards of the best stands across the entire continent. Not only have the regular billboard spaces been reserved, but special stands and locations have also been contracted for.

This is but an indication of the importance Vitagraph attaches to the release of the screen version of the Charles Klein drama. Tom Terriss directed the production. The cast includes Gladden James, Anders Randolf (Mrs. De Wolf), Hedda Hopper, Rogers Lytton, Herbert Evans, George Backus, J. P. Wade and L. O. McGuire.

"The Love Call" Is Next Billie Rhodes Production

FOR Billie Rhodes' next feature to be released by Robertson-Cole Company through Exhibitors Mutual, the National Film Corporation has selected a story that has appeared in fiction form in many of the leading newspapers of the United States. "The Love Call," written by Margery Benton Cooke, is the title of the feature which will succeed "The Lamb and the Lion" in the list of Rhodes productions on the Exhibitors Mutual chart. E. Magnus Ingleton adapted "The Love Call" for the screen.

The enchanting outdoors of the great West furnishes the settings for the story. A story of devotion to a father, cruel, yet kind to the only person he could tolerate. Kid Allen, as Billy Rhodes is known in this picture, is the foundation for the novel by Miss Cooke. Action abounds in every one of the five reels, and there is a quiet struggle for the love of the girl of the West that will appeal to any audience.

Cast Short But Select.

There is a small but select cast of leading players assisting Miss Rhodes. Little Art Hoxen, who rises only six feet six inches above the level of Mother Earth, has one of the most important roles.

Lloyd Whitlock, who eventually makes good and wins Kid Allen, is another attractive character, while for sincere portrayal of the part entrusted him, William Dyer as Mate Allen is entitled to a considerable share of the laurels.

Names Norma Talmadge's New Russian Production

THE new Russian picture, the story of which is by H. H. Van Loan, which Norma Talmadge is now completing, will be released some time in May under the title of "The New Moon." This was at first selected just as a working title, but it has been decided to make it definite. The production is an unusually elaborate and beautiful one, many of the scenes taking place at court. In the ballroom scenes hundreds of extras were used, and magnificent costumes and military uniforms were worn.

In contrast to the brilliant magnificence of the scenes where Miss Talmadge plays a Russian princess are the interiors and exteriors of a small peasant village in little Russia, where she goes in disguise after a thrilling escape from the palace.

Support Has Pedro Cordoba.

Pedro de Cordoba will play Prince Michail Koloyar; Charles Gerard has the role of Theodore Kameneff, a guiding spirit of the Russian insurrection; Stewart Holmes plays Orel Kosloff, Kameneff's lieutenant; Marc MacDermott is Vasili Lazoff an old potter. Ethel Kaye has the part of his daughter, Masha, and other important roles are played by Marguerite Clayton and Harry Sothern.

The story is picturized and directed by Chester Withey, and photographed by David Abel.

New Dorothy Dalton Picture April 20.

Dorothy Dalton's new Paramount picture, "The Homebreaker," will be released April 20. In this picture, Miss Dalton, as Mary Marbury, a traveling saleswoman, meets two crayon portrait crooks of the old school on a cross-country train and sizes them up for what they are. Later she runs into them in the big city, but by this time they have dropped the crayon portraits and turned to cubist art.

Frank Leigh and Beverly Travis are said to give excellent portrayals of the two crooks. Other players are Nora Johnson, Mollie McConnell, Edwin Stevens and Douglas MacLean.

The story was written by John Lynch and scenarized by R. Cecil Smith. The production was directed by Victor L. Schertzinger, under the supervision of Thomas H. Ince.

William Duncan of "The Man of Might."

Louis Bennison's Second

REPORTS on advance trade showings and unusually commendatory trade journal and newspaper reviews point to marked success, Goldwyn believes, for Louis Bennison's third star series picture, "Speedy Meade," written and directed by Ira M. Lowry and produced by the Betzwood Film Company in its big plant near Philadelphia. In this new production the new and smiling cowboy star is declared to have the best opportunities of his screen career—and he takes full advantage of them.

A few months ago, Louis Bennison, then fresh from the stage, made his first appearance before the camera in "Oh, Johnny!" He has since been seen in only one other picture, "Sandy Burke of the U-Bar-U," but in that brief period, he has been placed on the books of exhibitors, not only as a money maker who always can be counted upon to draw heavy patronage, but as a star who never disappoints.

Has "Broke and Rode" Camera.

Despite a certain unconscious camera shyness, which afflicts all screen newcomers and which was apparent in spots in Bennison's earlier pictures, he won his way immediately into the hearts of the motion picture public. Now, to use his own expression, the star has "broke and rode" the camera and has come to play master to it rather than slave. The good effects of this victory are apparent in "Speedy Meade," through which Bennison breezes in a manner thoroughly consistent with the title and the fast-moving plot of the play.

Bennison laughs when he tells about his first encounters with the all-seeing lens of the studio cameras. It is funny to him now, to think that he ever was afraid of the blamed thing. But he'll tell you if you press him that there were hours on end, especially in the course of the making of his first picture, in which he wasn't sure he wasn't making horrible grimaces at the cameraman, when he fully intended to register a honest determination, laying low the scheming villain with one hand and rescuing the beautiful heroine with the other.

It was in part perhaps a naturalness born of his desire not to appear stiff and stalking that made Louis Bennison a success from the start. He fought so hard to overcome what he knew were his camera shortcomings that he really had none to overcome.

"Speedy Meade," released March 23, is in five parts. In it Katherine McDonald, who, since appearing in the production has become a star at the head of her own company, is the star's leading woman.

Goldwyn Is Now Ready

Bessie Barriscale Begins with "Josselyn's Wife"

THE first of a series of pretentious photoplays from famous novels, to be produced with Bessie Barriscale as the featured player, by B. B. Features, and released by Robertson-Cole Company, through Exhibitors Mutual, will be "Josselyn's Wife," a story of the East which met with widespread favor. "Josselyn's Wife" is now in the course of completion at the Brunton studios in Los Angeles, and will be Miss Barriscale's next release, following "Hearts Asleep," the popular star's current vehicle.

"Josselyn's Wife" was added to the B. B. Features library only after spirited bidding against a number of other organizations which saw in the story by Kathleen Norris an unusually good motion picture medium.

B. B. Features are going about the production of "Josselyn's Wife" in big fashion. Howard Hickman, who is directing the drama, is expending every effort to make the offering one of Miss Barriscale's best.

Playing opposite Miss Barriscale is Nigel Barrie, who only recently completed an engagement with Alma Rubens, in "Diane of the Green Van," also an Exhibitors Mutual release. Barrie is cast as Bibbs Josselyn, a role in which he will have every opportunity to show at his best. Other members of the Josselyn family will be Kathleen Kirkham, as Lillian Josselyn; little Ben Alexander, the loving boy of "Hearts of the World" and "Turn in the Road," as Tommy Josselyn, and Tom Guise, as Thomas Josselyn. In addition, there will be the likable and venerable Joe Dowling, in a favorite role as Grandpa Latimer; Leslie Stewart, as Lindsay Pepper; Marguerite DeLamott, as Lizzie; Josephine Crowell, as Aunt Elsie; George Hackathorne, as Joe Latimer, and Helen Dunbar, as Mrs. Rose.

Miss Barriscale has been very successful with original stories in the past, noteworthy examples being "A Trick of Fate" and "Hearts Asleep," but she has come to the conclusion that widely read novels add considerable value to motion pictures.

"Josselyn's Wife" was published by Doubleday-Page Company, and was listed among the best sellers. It is the best known literary effort of Kathleen Norris. Fred Myton, of the B. B. Features scenario staff, was entrusted with the work of making the continuity.

Long Island furnished the locale for Miss Norris' story and with this country and the people who live on that wonderful stretch of New York, Miss Barriscale is very familiar. A month ago she came East to visit her sister who lives almost on the ground that the Josselyns treaded in fiction. She spent a large portion of the time looking the ground over.

As soon as compatable with her schedule, after the completion of the Norris story, Miss Barriscale will begin the filming of "Beckoning Roads," a novel by Jean Judson, which was published by the Dodd Mead Company and met with no small share of popular appeal.

William Russell to Film Gregory's "Six Feet Four"

A VIRILE tale will be transferred to the screen when Jackson Gregory's popular novel, "Six Feet Four," is completed. The American Film Company has secured the screen rights to the story, and William Russell will be starred as the stalwart hero. The scenario was prepared by Stephen Fox, of the "Flying A" staff, with Mr. Gregory's co-operation.

Russell, himself, is Buck Thornton, the rancher, who finds it necessary to stoop when entering any other house than his own. Vola Vale will enact the role of the heroine, Winifred Waverly; Clarence Burton, character man, will be the villainous sheriff. Al Garcia plays Ben Broderick; Harvey Clark will be seen as "Two-Hand" Billy Comstock, Jack Bramhall as "Kid" Bedloe, and Charles K. French as Henry Pollard.

From an artistic standpoint the production is expected to be among the most picturesque of the American's output. One mammoth set has already been completed, and work commenced on two others. Director Henry King is now working in one which duplicates the interior of a spacious Western inn, with its rustic bar, unique wall adornments, genuine fireplace and latticed ceiling.

Ford Making New Serial

AFTER a successful trip through Eastern and Southern cities, where he made personal appearances in several theatres, Francis Ford has returned to Los Angeles and started work on his new serial "The Purple Trail." Mr. Ford will play the leading role, "Phil Kelly" the detective, and will be assisted by Elsie Van Name, Pete Gerald, Jack Lawton, Vic Goss, Mack Fenton, B. Olivo, and Phil Ford. This serial will be in fifteen episodes and it is expected it will be finished in about twenty weeks.

I. Cobe Now with Aywon.

I. Cobe, formerly with the Pioneer Film Corporation, announces he is now connected with the Aywon Film Corporation, of which Nathan Hirsh is president, and is touring New York state with a line of feature attractions.

"The Belle of New York" Aids Salvation Army Fund

SELECT'S "The Belle of New York," in which Marion Davies is starred, proved a big factor in swelling the receipts of the Salvation Army War Fund Drive in Oakland, Cal., last week.

The production was booked for the last four days of the week at the T. & D. Theatre. Realizing that he had an opportunity of helping the war drive, as well as the picture, Manager Perry, of the T. & D., called the attention of the Oakland Lodge of Elks to the fact that Miss Davies is featured as a Salvation Army lass, and suggested that the Elks arrange for an Elks' Night at the T. & D. for the benefit of the drive.

The executive committee of Elks decided to purchase a big block of tickets to be sold at an advance over the house price, the difference in cost and a certain amount contributed by the theatre to be donated to the Salvation Army War Drive.

The Elks' Night was held on Wednesday and the big 3,500-seat house was crowded to capacity. The added publicity helped put the picture over in addition to supplying the Salvation Army with a large sum for the fund. For the remainder of the week "The Belle" sold out at every performance.

"The Border Legion" Replete with Thrills.

It meant death for any Rocky Mountain prospector to even attempt to trail a band of desperadoes in the days when gold came fastest, as Zane Grey so vividly describes it in his gripping story, "The Border Legion," a picturization of which, starring Blanche Bates and Hobart Bosworth, is scoring great success in every section of the country.

For years these wolves of the West have plied their nefarious trade without fear of being apprehended. There were sheriffs who dared to give chase after the plunderers, but not one of them ever returned to camp. A thrilling scene in "The Border Legion" is illustrative of the free rein the bandits had in the days of Forty-nine.

BOLSHEVIK PLAY HAS BIG POINTS

"Bolshevism on Trial" Abounds in Strong Advertising Angles for Adroit Booming of Timely Feature—Play Will Support Publicity and Appeal to All Classes

ABOUNDING in advertising possibilities, "Bolshevism on Trial," promises to be one of the clean-up pictures of the season. Moreover, it proves that a play does not have to hinge upon the war to be out of the ordinary. Of course, Bolshevism is a direct outcome of the war, but this is not a story of Bolshevism in Russia, but off the coast of Florida, and the argument advanced is not against Socialism, as such, but that Socialism in improper hands will inevitably degenerate into the greater license, because the individuals cannot raise themselves to the level of their ideals when such are realized, but pass from liberty into an orgy of license.

The story is taken from Thomas Dixon's book. "Comrades," and barring a weak and inconclusive climax, it is virile and gripping. It is a play that realizes in action the written and spoken arguments of those who seek to hold the world to sanity. It is propaganda in the best sense and as such it might profitably be given Government support, for it is a powerful argument in controverting the dream-talk of the Socialists and proves again that in every movement of this sort the leaders are either actuated by selfish sentiment or are led astray when they feel their power.

Appeals to All Classes.

"Bolshevism on Trial" will appeal to all classes, for it is the one grave question of the day, rising superior to all other conditions due to the war. Socialists may not endorse its findings, but they will be interested in the argument and discover much in support of their theories. Others will find in this discussion of the question, real light on the situation. The chief point is that all can be appealed to.

The showing of this play should be prepared for well in advance. It will not yield the fullest results to give an intensive three or six day advertising campaign. The newspaper work should begin well in advance of the showing, if possible through a controversy on Socialism.

Let the management write a couple of letters attacking the socialistic theory and linking it up with Bolshevism. There is almost certain to be a reply from some local high thinker. Then the battle is on.

Inaugurate a Controversy.

Work gradually to the contention that Socialism will not be possible in this or the succeeding generation because people are not yet prepared for liberty such as Socialism aims at. Later work in allusion to the feature of the limited experiment made by Upton Sinclair some years ago at Halycon Hall, where the community idea fell because all wanted to live without working. All of this should be worked under a pseudonym.

Then come out under your own signature and apparently get into the controversy for the first time, telling of "Comrades," by the Rev. Thomas Dixon, and adding that you will shortly show a play drawn from the book which gives the result which has attended every such movement in history. Then start your straight advertising campaign. If you can write cleverly or can get someone to do it for you, you can run for a couple of weeks in the local daily, without ever suggesting that the discussion has any advertising intent.

The Question of the Hour.

Bolshevism is the question of the hour. It has spread to every town and village. In some places its adherents do not dare openly discuss the matter, but they may have the courage to engage in an anonymous discussion. In the larger places you will find circles openly run. You will find no lack of opponents in the larger towns. Save all of the clippings for lobby work when your open campaign starts.

You can get the ministers to take this question up. The subject is timely and most ministers know that a well advertised topic will draw the crowds. Announce the sermon on your screen for three or four days in advance.

This can be done before you start your campaign or perhaps the minister will be willing to preach on the topic the Sunday before your opening, in which case take the advertising for the church directly into your house advertising. Have a lobby frame announcing that the Rev. John Blank will preach on this powerful play at the First Christian Church.

Use Paper Plentifully.

Perhaps you can go further and get some local patriotic society to hold an anti-Bolshevik mass meeting. It can be done. If your house is closed on Sunday, lend your house for the meeting. If you can run seven days, help the society get a hall. It will repay you. Get out posted paper, advising all to attend the meeting and then see the play. There are both one and three sheets which can be stripped to advantage in this connection. Don't think you cannot pull this stunt until you have tried.

When you get ready to do your direct advertising, go to it strong. The cartoon one sheet is exceptionally good. Get these all over town. Don't use less than fifty. Use a hundred if you can. Use several of the six sheets. These deal only with a side issue of the film, but they are flashy and striking. Use at least one twenty-four and more if you can find the boards. It is not as strong as the one or three, but the bigness will help to create the impression of importance.

This is a subject which can be sold with paper. Use plenty of it. Get more than you think you can afford. If you are in a small town, go into the nearby town with the one's and in the city, go beyond your usual district with ones and threes. If you can get twenty extra people with a dollar's worth of paper, you are making a direct profit and possibly some new patrons. If you have not the nerve to use plenty of paper, leave the subject to your opposition.

Go After Factory Workers.

If you have any factories in town do not overlook the suggestion at the top of page nine of the press book. There is not a factory owner who is not at least secretly afraid of the growth of Bolshevism, and he has cause for fear. Go to him with the private viewing or even with a good talk on the film and he will buy blocks of seats for his employes and their families.

This is not a fanatical propaganda picture where bias spoils argument. It is a clean-cut study of the reason why real Socialism has not and cannot come. There will be no reaction upon the factory owners after the picture has been seen. It will help them more than they can realize.

And on the same lines, in your own advertising do not advertise it as an argument against Socialism. Call it a study of Socialism. Make this a big talking point.

Get up such questions as "Can a Man be a Socialist without drifting into Bolshevism."

Bring out one big space with a huge "Are you a Bolshevist? Are you sure?"

Then run into your selling talk in small type—an eight or ten point according to your space. Make it plain in all your advertising that this is not a faked-up story of Russian Bolshevism. Don't merely refrain from saying that it is. Tell that it is not. Tell that it is the story of a socialistic experiment.

Hook up with "The Birth."

Hook up with "The Birth of a Nation," by advertising that this is from a story by the author of "The Clansman," from which "The Birth of a Nation" was made. Do not overplay this angle, for the story can stand by itself, but it is worth some use.

Then tell about the production. Tell that it was made at Palm Beach, with the Royal Poinciana figuring as the mythical Ventura. There are several good fights in the picture, and some splendid crowd scenes in which hundreds are used. Take up the items in detail.

Tell how the socialistic chef goes on strike because he wants a salary, but is led out by the hero's chauffeur, who used to be a white hope, and persuaded that he had better be good. Tell how the community gives a ball where some of the girls shock the spinsters by coming to the dance in home-made living picture suits.

Play up the character of Wolff, who started the scheme to promote his own ends, while talking of community interest. Tell how his wife, who furthered his plans, is selected as the first victim of his new divorce decree and changes her mind about Socialism. Play up the angle of the rich man who secretly backed his son's schemes to show him how impractical Socialism really is.

Then use the combination in something like "One man was a Socialist for love of power. Another was guided by love for a woman. Both talked of the good of the community to hide their own ambitions. That is what Socialism is."

Make a Run of It.

And finally, don't make the mistake of booking for a day. Unless you have a three hundred house in a two hundred town, with no neighbors to draw from, book for at least three days. Let your first night's audience tell the others and bring them in.

Run an extra night show. Have a special showing for school children. Work all of the crowd stunts. Put up red flags about town and hire soldiers to tear them down if necessary and then come out with a flaming handbill, explaining that the play is not an argument for anarchy. Have the bills ready printed, that you may get them out quickly or the idea may boomerang. Work out the limit on this and you'll not only clean up, but profit by future business.

Books Universals While in New York.

A. R. McNichol, manager of the Lyceum Theatre, of Winnipeg, Man., was a visitor at the Universal offices the past week. Mr. McNichol came East for the purpose of seeing photoplays to be released during late spring and early summer and was shown "Borrowed Clothes," "When a Girl Loves," "Home," "Forbidden," "Destiny" and "The Fire Flingers," all of which he later booked for one week runs.

Sidelights and Reflections

THERE'S one born every minute! "The Test of Honor" is the latest John Barrymore picture. As the title indicates it treats of serious phases of life. The story has been admirably handled from every point of view and will command the interest of ninety-nine screen patrons out of a hundred. John Barrymore's acting of the principal part is all that might have been expected from an artist of his high standing. At the opening performance last Sunday afternoon at the Strand Theatre, New York, the picture held the close attention of the spectators. Had it not been for a remark from one of the onlookers, who apparently was following the unfolding of the story with satisfied interest, the writer would have had no hesitation in saying that the star was carrying the entire house with him.

Said the exceptional person to his companion: "I don't care for Barrymore in this; he's much better in comedy"

Well, there's one born every minute —to add to the perplexities of the man in the show business!

The notion that because almost all moving pictures are reviewed in New York City, the reviewers look at them from what may be termed the Broadway standard is an error. In the first place there are no pictures made exclusively to suit the Times Square taste. The regular theatres of New York have all sorts of entertainments that are planned for the sole purpose of catering to the crowds of out-of-town patrons that are anxious to see something different from the run of attractions they would commonly attend at home. Every screen drama is made with the intention of appealing to theatregoers all over the country, no matter the size of the community in which they live. Reviewers understand this clearly.

Furthermore, New York City itself has every grade of taste and intelligence from the highest to the lowest that is to be found in the entire United States. As a matter of fact the average of intelligence in the smaller place is ahead of that in New York City.

In the course of his duties as a reviewer, the writer has not only gone to projection rooms for the pictures, but has visited all sorts of theatres in different parts of New York and Brooklyn. Two of the pictures reviewed in this issue were seen at family theatres far removed from the artificial atmosphere of Times Square. The picture houses of that locality, by the way, are not affected by the conditions which force so many of the regular Broadway theatres to put on frothy shows that run largely to lovely ladies in lace pajamas. The screen patrons of Times Square do not differ from those of the better class of picture houses in all parts of the United States. WEITZEL.

"The Island of Intrigue"

May Allison Has Congenial Role in Metro Production of Entertaining Story.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

TAKEN from the novel by Isabelle Ostrander, the Metro production of "The Island of Intrigue," starring May Allison, is one of those light, frothy stories that are pleasantly entertaining so long as the spectator does not question the plot and asks only that the romance, like the molasses on the small boy's bread, be spread on thick. The kidnapping of the wealthy heroine by a band of crooks, who take her to an island on which there is but one house, starts the action off at good speed. Her adventures after reaching the island are sufficiently varied in character to keep the spectator amused; especially when she comes across a nice looking young chap who is camping out there and it is evident that each finds the other decidedly attractive. The touch of the dramatic is supplied when the gang try to kill the nice young chap and prevent the girl from escaping. A number of picturesque locations and marine views help the picture.

May Allison looks as if she deserves a rich father and a handsome lover and slides down roofs like a born porch-climber. Jack Mower, as the lover in question, fills all requirements.

A gang of crooks in "The Island of Intrigue" learn that the rich father of Maida Waring intends to send his daughter to visit a woman friend of his who has a summer home on Sunset Island. Maida has not seen the family since she was a little girl, and the crooks determine to impersonate the Smiths, get Maida in their power and hold her for a ransom. The scheme is put in motion and might have proved successful except for young Gilbert Spear who is camping out on the island. Maida never suspects the real character of her hostess until after she has accidently met Gilbert during one of her walks alone.

The crooks send a message to the millionaire and receive no answer. They then try to force Maida to implore her father to send the fifteen thousand dollars asked for her release. She refuses and is locked in her room. Gilbert tries to rescue her and succeeds after a series of dramatic happenings that bring the hearts of the two very close together.

"The Quickening Flame"

Five-Reel World-Picture Features June Elvidge And Montagu Love In Fairly Strong Subject.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

BOTH June Elvidge and Montagu Love have appeared singly in pictures of much greater strength than this subject, "The Quickening Flame," in which they play together. This is due no doubt for the most part to the type of story chosen for them in this instance. It has a plot of rather pronounced interest, but at no point does the production reach any great depth of feeling or any particular dramatic heights. It is purely a surface story, told in narrative style, and as a whole strikes but a fair average of interest.

The plot concerns a young American, traveling in England, who marries an actress. The latter is supposed to be killed in a train wreck, and he marries a second time. Later the first wife reappears and she and her alleged step-father attempt blackmail. In the end it appears that the actress herself had committed bigamy, being already married to the man she claimed was her stepfather. This theme has been worked out in satisfactory manner so far as continuity goes, but it was an old device to have the actress repent because of her sympathy for the child of the second wife.

The Story.

John Steele, a young American traveling in England, becomes attracted by an actress named Maizie Bell. He calls upon her, behind the scenes, and oversees an altercation between an actor, named Bertram, and his Jap servant, Yoshuda. Maizie also sees Bertram's abuse of Yoshuda who is ill and not drunk, as the actor contended.

Maizie takes the Jap home, where he acts as servant to herself and her alleged step-father, who is an invalid. Steele falls in love with Maizie and the latter accepts him, at the advice of the invalid, in order to get his money. The marriage follows speedily, and a separation almost as quickly, when Steele returns home from a trip unexpectedly and finds Maizie giving a lively party to some friends.

Steele leaves for America, after being disillusioned. Here he falls in love with Hester Mason, granddaughter of his business partner. He reads a news dispatch to the effect that Maizie was killed in a train wreck. He marries Hester, but five years later Maizie and the invalid appear. They attempt blackmail, but Maizie relents after seeing Steele's child. It develops that her alleged step-father is really her first husband. The invalid shoots Maizie during her confession, and he later falls over a cliff in his wheel chair.

"Hearts of Men"

Hiram Abrams Production Features George Beban in Simple Story with Unusual Appeal.

Reviewed by William J. Reilly.

HIRAM ABRAMS has in the George Beban picture, "Hearts of Men," a feature with a strong appeal, and a production of unusual type. The author of the story has built a play with no sensational effects, but which gathers a momentum of interest that makes it irresistable. George Beban calls to the limit upon his rich store of interpretative power for his portrayal of the Italian, Nicolo, and his work contributes largely to the picture's excellent effect.

The story is unique. The spectator will miss the "love theme" labelled and defined as such, but in its place he will find the rich love of a simple, everyday father for his motherless son. The affection for the little lad seated in the heart of the father and in the hearts of the Arizona construction gang give the picture an appropriate title.

No more natural incidents could have been desired. The story of the Italian's labors is not laid in the slums but on the flats of Arizona where with his boy he was unceremoniously dumped to begin the reclamation of his stubborn desert tract. The picture has a particular appeal to those who have left a

The Story.

Nicolo Rosetti, a flower gardener, buys a tract of land in Arizona for the purpose of taking thereto his mother whose health demands such a location. Instead of finding "Paradise Meadows," he finds a desert. The boss of a railroad construction gang attempts to evict him, thinking he is the forerunner of an influx of Italian labor, but is won over by Nicolo's motherless boy. The gang builds a shack for Nicolo who sends for his mother. The latter dies and the gang persuades Nicolo to marry again for the sake of little Beppo. A letter to his cousin in Italy brings to America Tina Ferronni, won by the idea of marrying Nicolo's "house" and 160 acres of "land."

She and Nicolo are married, but Tina proves faithless, and under the guise of returning to Italy with Beppo, elopes with a dry goods clerk. From Italy she writes of Beppo's death, a false report. The gang contributes its monthly wages for consular investigation and brings the boy home, unknown to Nicolo, whose grief has not been lessened by his discovery of oil. The boy arrives and the hearts of many men are satisfied.

Advertising Angles: Beban has made wonderfully good in pictures in the past. His absence from the screen of late may necessitate recalling him to your less devoted fans, so tell who he is and feature the "return to the screen of." Also make capital of the fact that he is now producing his own plays. There is no more sympathetic impersonator of the Italian type on stage or screen than Beban. If you have any appreciable Italian population direct an especial appeal to them in their own language either through a throwaway or newspaper work. Work the stage appearance of George Beban, Jr., for a minor angle. If you have not played Beban under his previous contract, go to some extra expense to identify him.

"Speedy Meade"

Louis Bennison in Oldtime Melodrama With Plenty of Jump and Ginger Presented by Betzwood Film Co.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

BACK in the old days between the Civil and the Spanish wars Oliver Doud Byron used to play a line of melodramas that were the forebears of "Speedy Meade," the Betzwood Film Company's production written and directed by Ira M. Lowry and released through Goldwyn Distributing Corporation. The hero was the same quick-on-the-trigger chap who was able to get the better of the villains by his remarkable ability to disguise himself as any odd character that suited his fancy Aided by a change of clothes and a few lines on his face he would boldly enter the presence of the entire gang and successfully defy detection. Once on the spot at the proper time, he would steal the papers and foil the plotters right under their very noses. And how every one in the audience believed in him and loved him for the thrill he gave them all!

Present day lovers of western melodrama are still strong for the same sort of hero. As "Speedy Meade," a Federal detective, Louis Bennison assumes disguises and runs down his man with the ease and skill that makes the chap out in front want to get up and hollar for him. Melodrama is never an acquired taste. It is a part of our primitive nature; and the quick turns of the plot in "Speedy Meade" will bring the same hearty response as of old. All the details of the production lend themselves to the success of the picture and, now that the screen is the only source of supply for this grade of drama, there exists a large moving picture public for the jump-and-ginger flavor of this dramatic product. The star's support, headed by Katherine MacDonold, is of the right calibre.

"Speedy Meade," a Federal officer who has been detailed to run down a gang of cattle rustlers, goes to the town where they make their headquarters, after they have murdered a government detective. This detective is the brother of one of Mary Dillman's friends and Mary's father is the head of the cattle rustlers. Mary, who is away at school, does not know of this. She has met Meade and the two are greatly interested in each other.

When the young officer arrives at the scene of the murder he is disguised as a cowboy. The gang become suspicious of him, and Meade disguises himself as a half-witted old sot who does odd jobs around a local saloon. After obtaining the information he is hunting for, the detective assumes the disguise of an old ranch hand and goes to the headquarters of the gang with some cattle to sell. He has learned that Dillman is the gang's leader, and is greatly surprised when he runs across Mary who has returned home on an unexpected visit to her father. Angry at the girl for coming, Dillman is furious with rage when Mary learns the truth about him, and drives her from the house. She is found by Meade. A desperate fight with the gang, in which the detective just escapes with his life and Dillman is mortally wounded, brings matters straight. Dillman is not Mary's father but her uncle who has been using the money left her by her real father for his own advantage. Having broken up the gang, Meade and Mary start for the nearest minister and are married.

Molly, the heroine of the Fox picture, "Pitfalls of a Big City," has been the pal of two crooks who, as the story opens, are released from prison. She has written to Jerry that she has left the old life for her sister's sake and is straight. Spike sneers at this, but Jerry determines to reform also.

Molly has opened a restaurant and here the two young men find her. The little sister, whom she has educated to be a lady, comes on a visit. One of Molly's customers is Dave, a detective, who recognizes the men and keeps his eye on them, chiefly because he is in love with Molly.

Spike takes a fancy to the sister and tries to make trouble. Molly becomes a tigress and throws him out of the house. Molly's sister is sent to visit a boarding school friend, where she becomes engaged to a rich and desirable man. Spike learns of this and tries to make Molly help him "crack the crib" in the rich man's house by a threat to tell him that the bride-to-be is sister to a "hash slinger." Molly goes to keep Spike from burglarizing the house, enters it after him and the two are caught by the cop on the beat. Spike ducks and Molly is left in the hands of the police. Jerry persuades Pete, the detective, that he was not the man. Jerry is knocking Spike around in a most realistic fight, when Pete comes with the police and arrests Spike after he has killed one of the officers. So Spike goes to the chair, and Molly is freed.

"Getting Mary Married"

Marion Davies Has Title Role in Select Picture.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

THE new Allan Dwan picture, distributed by Select, titled "Getting Mary Married," is a comedy and tells the romance of a step-daughter in a Boston family, the Bussards. Poor Mary, played by Marion Davies, has to live with Step-uncle Bussard a year or he will get the Bussard fortune, and beside Uncle Bussard, there are Aunty and Cousin Matilda. As the situation develops, two ways are used of giving amusement to the spectator. He sees how Mary circumvents the schemes her selfish relatives make up to foil her and he sees how the Bussards show themselves up, not only to him, but to characters in the picture, especially to Boston's "catch of the season," who has fallen in love with Mary. Matilda wants this young man. The very instant she tells him that Mary is out,

Mary is apt to walk into the room so it is no wonder Mary is not liked in the Bussard home.

The direction and general handling of the picture are good. The acting is for the most part acceptable. The sets are especially fine and help the picture much. As an attraction the film should go fairly well, though it is not an especially notable production in anything but its interior sets and its photographic beauties.

The Story.

In the opening of "Getting Mary Married," we find Mary virtually a prisoner in her step-father's home in New York. The house has beautiful, big rooms, but poor Mary can have no flowers even and finds no enjoyment. Old hypocritical John Bussard has married Mary's mother who fortunately had died, but Mary suffers from his crazy notions of propriety. He dies and his will requires her to live a year in his brother's Boston home to inherit his money. If she leaves or marries before the year is up, Amos Bussard, the uncle, gets the fortune.

The Boston branch of the family needs money and neither Uncle, Aunt or Cousin Matilda, helps Mary pass the time during the year. A friend of Mary's in New York asks young Winthrop to call. The Bussards are tickled to death and try to palm Matilda off; but chance brings Mary in the room and that scheme is up.

Winthrop calls often and the Bussards get into the habit of telling him Mary is out. He sees through it. Ted Barnacle, a friend of Winthrop's, agrees to act as a sort of camouflage lover, so that Mary and young Winthrop and his mother can have pleasant times together.

The Barnacles are not rich and the Bussards are delighted, but they don't want Mary to wait a year. So they try to force a wedding to save "Mary's good name." Ted agrees to the wedding and asks to have Winthrop as the best man. Since it will make Winthrop "feel like one of the family," Aunty agrees. Winthrop brings his mother and the wedding is the way it ought to be. The fortune goes to the uncle and he finds that it consists really of four dollars and a savings stamp.

First Release of S-L Pictures Is a Melodrama Filled With Spectacular Effects.

THE S-L Pictures' first release, "Virtuous Men," starring E. K. Lincoln, is an ambitious production. It is in seven reels, employs a lengthy cast and a large numbed of extras under the direction of Ralph Ince. Billed as a melodrama, it has moments of intense physical action against impressive backgrounds and contains excellent comedy relief. The story has to do with the building of ships for the Government and the efforts of a secret band of alien enemies to prevent any of the ships from being launched. There is the necessary struggle between the loyal hero and his friends and the forces of the enemy, and the scenes range from the forests of the West to one of the great shipyards on the eastern coast. Contrasting views of social life are also included, a ballroom scene being the most extensive ever shown on the screen.

Much of the material used in "Virtuous Men" possesses real entertainment qualities, but in its present form it is weighed down by superfluous scenes. Intelligent cutting will add fifty per cent. to the picture's value. The producers fully appreciate this fact and when the picture is released there is every reason to believe the work will have been done. The cast contains such well known names as Grace Darling, Clara Joel, Robert W. Cummings and William B. Mack, "Hick" Hogan, the comedy relief character is played by Danny Hayes with such easy humor that Hick becomes the most popular person in the story. "Virtuous Men" is a big melodrama; not a society or sex drama, as the title seems to imply.

The Story.

Bob Stokes, the hero of "Virtuous Men," loses his money and discovers that Marcia Fontaine, who had promised to become his wife, has no further use for him. Disheartened he goes West and becomes a lumberjack for the National Lumber Company. Willard, the President of the National, is also at the head of a big shipyard in the East, which has a contract to build ships for Uncle Sam. Robert Brummon, boss of the lumber camp, is a member of an alien enemy society that is trying to prevent the ships from being completed. Through the efforts of Stokes, during which there are an all-around fight and a realistic forest fire, Brummon is defeated, and the action shifts to New York and the shipyard nearby.

Helen Willard, the daughter of the shipyard owner, and Marcia Fontaine, Bob's former sweetheart, now come upon the scene. Helen is acting as a nurse at the temporary hospital in the yards, and Marcia is acting for Brummon, who is trying to entrap Bob and destroy the ships. The society scenes are contrasted with the interesting incidents that are staged at the shipyard. Before the conclusion the alien enemies have almost succeeded in blowing up a large Government vessel, and Bob has had to fight for his life with Brummon. The finish sees Bob and Helen, now acknowledged lovers, watching the launching of the ship that Bob has risked his life to save.

AN attractively staged romantic melodrama is usually a good box office attraction. This is not by any means the exception with "Diane of the Green Van," made by the Winsome Stars Corporation for the Exhibitors Mutual program. Alma Rubens chosen to impersonate the heiress who longed for life in the open, finds herself well adapted to the situations provided by the author, Leona Dalrymple. The production, directed by Wallace Worsley, is attractively presented and will hold the attention of the average spectator in spite of a few technical flaws of rather trifling significance, such as the too rapid recovery of Philip Poynter from a severe bullet wound. That the picture lacks in the truthful portrayal of everyday life, it gains in the spirit of adventure which both director and author have tried to keep uppermost. "Diane of the Green Van" is not unusual in this respect; there are many widely advertised productions which share this same fault. Harry Von Meter, Nigel Barrie and Lamar Johnstone do noticeably good work.

The story of "Diane of the Green Van" tells of a pretty young heiress whose mother was a Seminole Indian woman. Inheriting her ancestors' love of the open country she shocks her relatives by taking to the woods in a green van. Here she lives the life of her forebears, and suddenly finds herself the center of a melodrama which ends in a romance. With the discovery that she is the heir to the throne of Houdania she learns that her father, believed to be dead, still lives.

The melodramatic incidents of the story are developed through the scheming of Prince Ronador, the next in line for the throne of Houdania, to do away with Diane, whom he believes to be the only remaining obstacle between him and the coveted place of honor. Considerable interesting incident occurs in the course of the story.

WITH witty subtitles and amusing comedy situations, "Married in Haste," a Fox five-reel picture, is certain to be popular with theatregoers. A new star, Albert Ray, has the leading masculine role and his work, which shows a vein of natural whimsicality, entitles him to be so designated. The feminine lead requires little except grace, beauty and naturalness and Elinor Fair has all these qualities. Thomas Jefferson is, of course, wholly satisfying in the small role of spendthrift hero's trustee, left in charge of a large fortune by the boy's father. There are three or four good lesser parts.

Sam Morgan, whose honeymoon story is pictured by Fox in "Married in Haste," is a whimsical, rich youth, about to be married. His bride-to-be is pretty but earnest minded and is planning to teach him how to use his money wisely. There is a home wedding. The rich man's trustee has told him that he starts his honeymoon with ten dollars in the bank and refuses to advance him ten thousand on his next allowance. The girl knows about it and is pleased. She plans to have the trustee "abscond" so that the husband will have to earn his living.

Meanwhile the taxi is still running up a bill. They slip away to an expensive hotel and the taxi's register keeps on working. The man steps out to a florist's and buys a hundred dollars worth of flowers; then to a jeweler's. He isn't long in the hotel before his check comes back. Sam begins to fear that his trustee has forgotten to deposit. Soon he receives a telegram that the trustee has absconded.

Sam get himself out of one scrape, only to get into another.

At length, in order to get a chance to make many thousands by selling herrings he doesn't yet own, he gives a check for ten thousand that he knows is bad. The man who holds the check talks only Spanish, and the buyer of the fish speaks only English. The Spaniard enters the room where the deal is being argued and demands his money back. Sam tells the directors that his friend wants the herrings for five dollars a barrel more than they are offering. All get excited and the directors hand over a good check for ten thousand to clinch the deal. This satisfies the Spaniard and lets Morgan pay his heart-breaking taxi bill.

THERE are certain qualities which the high class exhibitor is looking for that are not to be found in "Thunderbolts of Fate," the five-part Edward Warren production for the W. W. Hodkinson program. Among these qualities are wholesomeness of theme and convincing detail. The picture, suggested by a play by Harry S. Sheldon, is lamentably lacking in nobility of purpose, and we find ourselves again wallowing in the mire of unsavory human instincts that do not belong in the respectable American home. When a story of this class is directed in a highly artistic manner we are often prone to forgive its intention, and to admire the skill with which it has been made palatable. In the present instance there are many points which must be voted totally inartistic. The action of the picture, for instance, is not smooth, situations are created in an artificial manner, interior sets are sometimes overburdened with decoration, neither is the characterization always convincingly portrayed. The picture is constructed principally on the close-up plan, evading the deep perspective which would have added much to the general effect. House Peters and Anna Lehr carried their respective roles well under existing conditions.

The Story.

The reason for the title, "Thunderbolts of Fate," seems to lie in a thunder storm incident which leads to the story's climax. The detail of the story follows that portion of a young politician's life which has to do with his love affairs. Robert Wingfield at the time when he is candidate for governor is engaged to a young woman who has sought him merely to further her social ambitions. At the same time she is intimate with a "man about town," and after marriage with Wingfield still keeps up her relations with her lover. Wingfield before his marriage falls in love with Eleanor Brewster, the daughter of his opponent, both agreeing that his breaking off his engagement with his betrothed would interfere with the success of his election.

Lennox, the "man-about-town," grows tired of Mrs. Wingfield and turns his attentions to Eleanor. Her brother steps in to protect her name from being associated with that of Lennox, visits his apartment, and finds him with a dagger in his heart. He is arrested for the murder, tried and sentenced to death. Eleanor, following the governor to his hunting lodge to plead for her brother, is obliged to remain over night, and is accused of wrong doing by Mrs. Wingfield, who arrives the next morning. Through fear of ultimate detection Mrs. Wingfield confesses to the murder.

"Poor Boob"

Paramount Presents Bryant Washburn in Character Comedy of Business Life.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

THE "Poor Boob" type of story has been done so often that it must present some new features to win more than moderate interest. In the Paramount production of this name, starring Bryant Washburn, the situations in which the simp hero is placed are novel, and excellent direction brings out all the good qualities of the story. Starting slowly the picture gains constantly in comic force and admirably illustrates the part that luck plays in a man's life.

Bryant Washburn is a new type of boob and does not depend upon queer looking clothes to help him put the character over. He is steered to prosperity by the wise little stenographer and the wide-awake office boy in the establishment where he works. These two parts are capitally played by Wanda Hawley and Dick Rosson. There are several amusing small town characters. Jay Dwiggins and Charles Ogle have been intrusted with the acting of the hotel keeper and the banker. They make their respective roles stand out.

The Story.

Simpson Hightower, or Simp as he is familiarly known, the hero of "Poor Boob," loses his cannery factory in his home town and goes to New York to earn a living. He manages to hold a job in Platt's provision factory, largely through the friendship of a bright stenographer and a resourceful office boy. These two advise him to do more bluffing. They do it for him when a Swedish commissioner comes in with prospects of signing a large contract, introducing Simp as the Silent partner.

Pending the execution of this contract, there is a vacation, during which all chase back to the Simp's country town, he posing as a millionaire, with the Simp gets the contract himself, has money showered on him and, as a matter of late discovery, realizes that the stenographer has done all this for him, in spite of the fact that he had a villge ideal now grown so fat that he is disillusioned. Simp appreciates the bright young stenog at last.

You can work a good teaser by using a large "If your girl has thrown you down——." Run this for several days and then add it may be for the best and tell lovelorn swains to see how it was when Simp met Tiny.

"The Blinding Trail"

Six-Reel Universal Subject Presents Monroe Salisbury In Heart Interest Story.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THIS six-part subject, entitled "The Blinding Trail," is a story of the big out-doors in the region of a lumber camp. The snow-covered pine trees and winter landscape generally give an attractive atmosphere to the production, which is maintained from beginning to end. The plot runs along in a leisurely, entertaining manner and comes up with a telling climax in the closing reel.

Monroe Salisbury is cast in the leading role, that of Jim McKenzie, a rugged woodsman and foreman of the camp, a part which he depicts in good style. The hero meets with an accident, while tobogganning, by risking his own life to save that of the owner's daughter. He loses his eyesight temporarily and wins the girl's love. He regains his eyesight, marries the girl, and again loses it on the day their child is born. Later he regains his sight a second time, after fighting a hand-to-hand battle with the villain, who has lured his wife away. The story has numerous big moments and contains considerable heart interest. There is not much dramatic effect until the closing reel, but the strong climax is worth waiting for, and the story interest is never really weak. The number is one of the best in which Mr. Salisbury has appeared.

Jim McKenzie is boss of a lumber camp, owned by John Halverson. The owner comes to camp, accompanied by his daughter, Helen, and his niece, Adele Grey. McKenzie appeals to the hearts of both girls, but, through an accident, Helen finds him her own particular hero. He runs his sled into a tree, while tobogganing, in order to avoid striking Helen, and thus temporarily loses his eyesight.

Helen has a romantic turn and asks Adele to encourage McKenzie to propose to her while he is still blind. McKenzie does so, and they are married after he has recovered his sight. On the evening of the day their child is born, McKenzie's sight against leaves him. Helen then succumbs to the allurements of Jean DuBrey, assistant camp boss. She goes to his cabin, and McKenzie, still blind, gropes his way thither. Some tense scenes follow, in which McKenzie tries vainly to get hold of DuBrey. He at last succeeds and a terrific struggle ensues. In the midst of this DuBrey shoots and kills Helen and he himself is killed. McKenzie is stunned by a fall, but on his recovery again regains his sight. He then marries Adele, who has loved him all through.

"A Yankee Princess"

Vitagraph Feature With Bessie Love Is Good Farce With Celtic Strain.

Reviewed by William J. Reilly.

THE VITAGRAPH production, "A Yankee Princess," with Bessie Love in the title role has the extravagant Irish wit and the strain of Celtic imagination throughout. It is a good box office attraction in spite of a few conventionalities in construction. There is real flavor to the story. Bessie Love is seen as Patsy O'Riley, of Flannigan's Flats, who, in spite of her later transformation into Miss Patricia, retains all her over-abundant charm of personality. There is a family fight put on in the early part of the picture which has fine resemblance to an Irish tribal feud, and which all loyal Irishmen will applaud. Bessie Love's attire as Patsy is characteristic of the imaginative qualities of the production. She carries through a number of ridiculous situations with her usual zest and vivacity.

The Story.

Patsy O'Riley's father is a contractor living in Flannigan's Flats in Vitagraph's "A Yankee Princess." He suddenly becomes rich through his invention of an ore crusher. Patsy is sent to a finishing school where she finds that her riches have been too newly made. She therefore claims descendency from a line of Irish kings in order to join a society at the school and finds that she must show a family coat-of-arms. Her parents visit Ireland and pick up a number of heirlooms and a coat-of-arms from the house of Lady Windbourne. Her ladyship and her eligible son later visit America, meet Patsy, but discreetly maintain silence when they discover their crest in the O'Riley household. Patsy becomes engaged to the son. Enter Larry Burke on the trail of the Windbourne heirlooms, and in the guise of a writer of a book on Irish art. He finds the influence of Irish fairies, Patsy in particular, too strong to resist, and it develops that Lady Windbourne's son is an impostor, and that he is the real heir. The coat-of-arms thus stays in the O'Riley family.

"Peppy Polly"

Paramount Presents Dorothy Gish in a Bright and Effective Comedy.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

SOMETHING new in high comedy for the screen, a departure from the commonplace, in that it amuses and entertains, while it sharply criticizes one of our institutions of social hypocrisy, "Peppy Polly" hits straight from the shoulder at the horrors of reform schools for incorrigible girls without preaching its lesson to the detriment of interest in the story. With both edges keen and bright, this Paramount production may be booked with confidence that it will be a satisfying presentation on its own merits, with the delightful personality of "Peppy Polly" thrown in. All the zip and vim of the active little star's nature is brought into play, almost from start to finish, the exception being a moment of pathos, which she handles with consistency to the role. Her entire support is strong, involving a large cast, and there has been no stint in fine settings, some of them only for a glimpse of the action. There is an excellent quality of craftsmanship in all departments.

Hardly a fault worth noting is to be found in the construction work of author and director, a few forced situations being excusable for the sake of rapid development. "Peppy Polly," of the Paramount, is a credit to all concerned in her production.

The Story.

An optimistic young stenographer, the heroine of "Peppy Polly," becomes secretary to a wealthy lady of languid interest in social reform. Polly accompanies her employer to a reform school for girls and discovers imprisoned in solitary confinement a girl she knows. She learns the truth through the cell window and determines to expose the cruelty of the place herself. She consults a judge and he agress to send her there for some trivial offense. Polly has hard work getting arrested, only to find herself confronted by an associate of the judge, who is seriously ill. It is too late. The young reformer has smashed a window and stolen a bunch of watches. She is made an example of and sent up for a term of three years. Her experiences are dreadful enough to gradually break her down, and the judge who was to have released her has died. There is only one friend in the place, a young doctor, bent upon the same mission as herself, but they are skilfully compromised by the keeper of the place. It looks dark for them both, when they are reunited in the Governor's private car after a thrilling escape by Polly. Investigation reveals that the judge kept a diary and noted there enough of Polly's adventure to save her and to prove the institution nothing less than a disgrace to our pretended civilization.

OUT AN' IN AGAIN (Mutt and Jeff).—Has a theatre for background and much of the astonishing. Quite a snappy and humorous bit of film. It surely has something new in kisses.

WM. HOHENZOLLERN, SAUSAGE MAKER (Mutt and Jeff Comedy).—A certain tough character wanted in Paris has taken to sausage making. As he dare not go on the street to collect his own dogs, he advertises, and the two friends, through taking dogs in, find out about him and make him say "Kommerade."

WU FANG ATONES (Pathe), April 13.—Chapter 15 of "The Lightning Raider." This last instalment brings about the death of Wu Fang, who is finally cornered in a coal bin and commits suicide. Later events clear up the mystery of Lightning's birth and reveal that she is not the sister of Tom, who loves her, so they are free to wed. The number brings all questions to a satisfactory conclusion. The serial as a whole has been clear-cut and full of novel and exciting incidents.

CRACK YOUR HEELS (Rolin-Pathe).—This pictures the amusing adventures of Harold Lloyd, Harry Pollard and Bebe Daniels on a farm. They have some funny knockabout experiences, but the number does not boast of any connected plot, which would have improved it considerably.

Universal Film Company.

THE WIFE BREAKERS (Star Comedy), March 31.—A typical Lyons and Moran comedy in which Eddie and Lee appear as two neglectful young husbands whose wives turn the tables and decide to appear as though leading a wild life. The husbands pretend to commit suicide, but all ends happily. This number is handled in a laughable manner, and will no doubt go well.

GYMBELLES AND BONEHEADS (L-Ko), March 26.—A two-reel comic, with Dick Smith and others in the cast. The action takes place in a hair dressers' establishment and a gymnasium next door. There are also some good park scenes. This contains some laughable examples of knockabout humor of the burlesque type. Some of the situations are very amusing.

SKIDDING THRONES (Star Comedy), April 14.—A first rate little burlesque featuring Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran and others. Two waiters and the chef and cashier of a restaurant are declared to be rulers of a revolutionary province in turn, and each tries to poison the others. The complications are handled with excellent humor, and the number is very amusing.
